We challenge the whole world, says the Ohio Cultivator, to produce larger and handsomer peaches than were exhibited at our Fair, of Seedlings too, raised in the vicinity of Columbus! Specimens of the Vandermark Seedling (from seed of the Lemon Cling,) a remarkably handsome fruit, deep yellow flesh, fine red outside, measured over a foot in circumference! One weighed fourteen ounces, and four together weighed two pounds and 14 ounces.

The Dublin Freeman proposes a national subscription for the benefit of the O'Connell family, and says that, "as O'Connell left his sons too slender a patrimony to support them in the cause of patriotism, a subscription should be at once entered into by the universal people to make good this deficiency." Only £100,000 is the moderate sum hinted at as requisite for this purpose.

The 25th of November has been fixed upon by Governor Briggs to be observed as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise in Massachusetts. The appointment is in accordance with a wish very generally expressed that the same day should be designated for this time-honored festival throughout the United States. The appointments so far, namely, in Missouri, New-Hampshire and Massachusetts, are for the same day.

An affray took place at Yorkville, Gibson County, Tenn., a few days ago. It appears there was an old difficulty existing between Wm. N. Anthony and the Read family. On entering a store, Anthony was shot by one of the Reeds, who had concealed himself behind the counter. Anthony discovering another of the Reeds standing in the store, shot him dead. Anthony lived but a few hours.

It is supposed that 37 or 38 million bushels of grain were sent from the United States to Great Britain from the 1st September, 1846, to the early part of last month. This was worth, at a fair average, about forty-five millions of dollars.

Three persons, says an exchange, in Dorset, Vermont, on the 1st of January, undertook to see who would present the pastor of their parish the largest load of wood—the one who brought the smallest, to pay a handsome forfeiture. The competitors accordingly furnished the loads, the one measuring five, the other ten, and the last, twenty-five cords of hard wood!

The church at Welton, near Lincoln, England, was struck by lightning on Sunday; one person was killed, and eight others shockingly wounded. The fluid entered by the belfry, and exploded in the body of the building, knocking down a great many of the worshipers.

The Louisville Journal says, that the great crop now looked to with more than ordinary interest in Kentucky is the hog crop. With the abundance of corn and potatoes, hogs will be as fine as they ever were.

After the 4th of October there will be a regular weekly communication by steamers to and from the United States, the French company having altered the days of departure of their line from Havre.

The proposed amendments to the Constitution of Connecticut for the extension of the Right of Suffrage to Colored Persons of good moral character, has been voted down.

A man named Timothy Cortleyeu was tried in this city last week for breach of promise. Before a decision was made, however, the parties disposed of the case by compromise, Mr. C. paying $500 to the young lady, Miss Ann Cole.

A correspondent from the Franconia Notch, writes to the Traveler, that on Thursday morning, the 16th, all the ground was white with frost in the Franconia Notch, N. H., and that the entire summit of Mount Lafayette was covered with snow.

Justice Fuller of Worcester, a few days since, sentenced two venders of strong beer in the town of Oxford to thirty days' confinement in the House of Correction. An appeal was made to the Court of Common Pleas.

An American merchant at the Cape of Good Hope, has within twelve years sold a hundred thousand Yankee ploughs, chiefly to the Dutch for the use of their vineyards.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, at Lewes, Delaware, writes that "the wife of Capt. Thornton, whose fate it was to sacrifice his life in the cause of his country, is now in our county poor-house, in a state of partial derangement."

Mr. Harris, a Delegate to the North Carolina House of Commons from Pitt Co., was killed in a duel by a Mr. Yellowly, near Portsmouth, Va., on the 1st inst.

Near Elizabethtown, Kentucky, two gentlemen on horseback took shelter from a storm under a tree, which was shivered by lightning, and both horses killed, without injury to the riders.

Hon. Charles Townsend is just deceased in Buffalo, aged 92. He was settled there before the war, when every house except one was laid in ashes by the British troops.

The assembling of the Pioneers of Rochester took place at the Blossom House. There were some fifty or sixty present on the occasion, and among them many who helped to lay out the first roads and build the first houses where now stands the beautiful city. A large number of them are still actively engaged in the business pursuits of the day, while others, whose heads are silvered over with honorable age, have given place to the younger portion of the stirring inhabitants.

The St. Louis Reveille, says: "A gentleman who took cattle to New Orleans on the steamer Hard Times, the last trip that boat made from this port, returned yesterday on the Talma. He states that shortly after arriving at New Orleans the yellow fever broke out among the crew of the Hard Times, and that up to the date of his departure thirty-three, including the captain, first clerk, and several other officers, had died. This mortality is truly frightful."

From a police report in the New York Tribune, we learn that a German named Christian Beckstein was arrested not long since in Utica for theft, who confessed that he had been three times imprisoned in Germany for a similar crime, and had been discharged on condition that he would come to this country.

The Archives Israelites says: "It is calculated that the total number of Jews spread over the surface of the globe is 6,000,000 of souls. Of these 180,000 are in the enjoyment of civil rights, viz: 30,000 in the United States of America, 50,000 in Holland, 10,000 in Belgium, and 90,000 in France. In England 20,000 are as yet incompletely emancipated.

From the returns just published, of the number of members in the Wesleyan Society, it appears that there are in Great Britain 339,379, being a decrease of 2,089; in Ireland 24,633, being a decrease of 2,913; and in the foreign stations 100,303, being an increase of 253; total number of members under the care of the British and Irish Conferences 464,316, being a decrease of 4,749.

The Editor of the Windham County (Vt.) Democrat was recently prosecuted for a libel in having published a notice of marriage between Lemuel Liscomb, of Hinsdale, N. H. (who was already a married man,) and Mary Crowninshield, a domestic in his family. The notice was received by mail without any signature. The Jury did not agree.

A report is prevalent that Mr. Macdonald, late an officer in the British army, and an inhabitant of Montreal, has been declared heir to the Dukedom of Tarentum and the property attached thereto. The dukedom is in the north of Italy, and was created by Napoleon in favor of the celebrated Marshal Macdonald.

The Delta says that there has not been less than 50,000 cases of yellow fever in New Orleans this season, out of a population of 70,000 to 80,000 souls. The number of deaths by the fever, during the month of August, is given at 1,128. It appears by this, that scarcely four per cent. of all the cases result fatally.

It is stated that M. Peyron, formerly pupil of the Polytechnic School, who lately committed suicide, had entered the novitiate of the Jesuits, and given his entire fortune, amounting to 4,000,000f., to that religious order.

The house in which Shakspeare was born was sold at the auction mart, by Mr. Robins. It was purchased by the committee acting at Stratford and London for £3,000, there being no opposition bidding.

In Philadelphia County, the annual draft on the purse of the people, for the support of the paupers, is two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and a short time since, nineteen out of every twenty inmates of the Alms-House were drunkards!

Of the 138 males in the Connecticut State Prison, 84 declare intemperance to be the cause of their present confinement and degradation, 13 have been engaged in the sale of intoxicating drinks, and 4 in its manufacture.

The first congregation of Free-Will Baptists in America was formed at New Durham, N. H., 30th of Juue, 1780. They now number 1107 congregations, 1015 ministers, and 55,232 communicants.

Miss Eliza Miller, a young lady of Newark, New Jersey, has recovered a verdict of $1,500 against the Newark Gas Light Company for injuries received by falling into a hole, in one of the streets, which the company had made for the purpose of laying down pipes.

The copyright of Dr. Chalmers' works, including his life and letters, to be published by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, together with some additional volumes of sermons, and a commentary on the Bible, has been sold for between $50,000 and $60,000.

Two children of Elbridge Tyrell, of Tyringham, Mass., were instantly killed on Monday afternoon by a sand-bank caving in on them while they were at play near it. The oldest, a girl, was about 11 years of age, the youngest, a boy, about 8.

Dr. Gillet Stillman, proprietor of a grist-mill and chair shop on Colebrook river, Conn., was caught in the machinery and carried through iwo iron cog wheels, and horribly mangled. He died immediately.

A tobacconist of Rochester, prepared three thousand cigars for exhibition in the State Fair, the tobacco of which was entirely raised in Onondaga, and it is said to be of the best quality.

Sponges are believed to consist of excitable flesh full of small mouths, by which they absorb and eject water.

A short time since, at Sandlake, (N. Y.) a woman cut off the tongue of a boy, to whom she was a step-mother. The reason she assigns for so doing, is to stop his telling lies.

It is not generally known that McAdam, the inventor of the kind of road bearing his name, realized a fortune in New York during the war of Independence, by being an agent for the sale of prizes. He had come to America in 1770; and after the war returned to England.

The U. S. Land Office is supplied with 60,000 parchments per annum, from one manufactory of the article in this city.

Lieutenant Sir Walter Lockhart has been allowed to add the name of Scott to that of his father.

Mr. S. Whipple, of Providence, R. I., has invented a new method of making rope, by which he can make a rope of any length in a square room—thus doing away the necessity for long ropewalks. Two twists are made at one revolution, with twisting or turning at the end of the rope, as is now the custom. The strand is formed and a rope laid in a more perfect manner, and at far greater speed than is now attained. From 150 to 200 feet of two inch rope can be thus made in a minute, smaller sizes faster. One man could tend a number of the machines at once.

A blast was made on the 11th ult., at the Gneiss Quarry of Hon. Geo. Leiper, Ridley township, Delaware county, Pa., which cut out a block of the following dimensions:—Depth 13 feet 6 inches, with 56 feet at one end, and 24 at the other; length, exteriorly 146 feet, interiorly 110 feet. By a rough estimate, the solid contents may be set down at 75,000 cubic feet, with a weight of 5,770 tons. The bore was 13 feet deep, two inches in diameter at the bottom, and two kegs of powder were employed.

It is little known, that the farther we go South, until we reach the equator, the more the rain increases. Thus, at St. Petersburg, there falls annually, 17 1-2 inches of rain; while at Vera Cruz there falls nearly 64 inches, The explanation of this is that, in warm climates, evaporation proceeds more vigorously; hence more vapors and clouds arise, and of consequence there are more showers.

A year ago much publicity was given to the transcendent excellence of the Newtown pippins, produced on the Pelham farm, in Ulster Co. A large exportation of them was then made to England, where they brought high prices. They are now in the market again, and a shipment of them to China has just been made—the first apples sent to that country from this remote barbarian region.

A servant girl in St. Louis was accused of stealing her mistress' jewelry. This charge so wrought upon her that she committed suicide. A few days afterwards the woman found her jewelry where she had herself placed it!

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, OCT. 11.

ASHES—Pearls $8 00. Pots 5 62.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee, new, 6 00. Oswego 5 75. Meal 2 75 a 2 87 for Western; 3 25 a 3 50 for Jersey. Rye Flour 4 25.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 34 a 1 35 Mixed Ohio 1 25. Corn 66 a 68c. Rye 80. Oats 48 a 50c.

PROVISIONS—Pork 10 75 a 14 50. Prime Beef 7 50; Mess 12 25. Lard 12c. Butter, 10 a 12 for Ohio, 13 a 16 for State, 18 a 22 for Orange County. Cheese 6½c.

MARRIED,

In Westerly, R. I., on the 29th of September, by Eld. I. More, Mr. William Greenman to Miss Frances Hall.

On the 30th of September, 1847, by Eld. Samuel Davison, Joseph Mayhew to Hannah Davis, both of Hopewell, Cumberland Co., N. J.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 18th of September, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. Horace Potter, formerly of Rensselaer Co., N. Y., now residing in Hopkinton, to Miss Susan Clark, of Hopkinton.

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 3d inst., Mr. Welcome Babcock, of Charlestown, to Miss Mary Rogers, of Hopkinton.

DIED,

In Stow Creek township, Cumberland Co., N. J., September the 15th, of consumption, Zara Ayers, in the 46th year of his age. Bro. Ayers had been a licensed preacher, and was a deacon of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Shiloh. He was ever esteemed a meek and lowly follower of the Lamb of God during his Christian profession. He had for some time expected and desired his departure from this life, which at length was permitted him in serenity and hope. He selected, as the text for his funeral sermon, the words of Job 19: 26—"I know that my Redeemer liveth." He was a son of Eld. Jacob Ayers, and is now doubtless numbered with the righteous dead.

At the house of Eld. Daniel Coon, in Hopkinton, R. I., on the 4th inst., after a short illness, Harriet N. Babcock, daughter of Peleg Babcock, Jr., of Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., aged 14 years. She was a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred.

"Sister, thou wert mild and lovely, Gentle as the summer breeze."

LETTERS.

Maxson Green, J. F. Randolph, Daniel Coon, S. S. Griswold, H. H. Baker, John Whitford, Charles Potter, H. W. Stillman, S. Davison, I. D. Titsworth, Daniel Pierce, H. Dusenbury, Daniel North.

RECEIPTS.

David Maxson, Adams	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No.	52
N. G. Whitford "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Benj. Coates "	1 00	"	4	"	26
Ransom Coon, Smithville	2 00	"	4	"	52
Spencer Sweet, Alfred	2 00	"	4	"	52
Jer. Burdick "	2 00	"	4	"	52
P. C. Stillman "	2 00	"	5	"	14
James L. Scott, Berlin	3 00	"	4	"	52
Wm. Satterlee "	2 00	"	3	"	52
David Potter "	2 00	"	4	"	52
R. Lewis, U. Forks	2 00	"	4	"	52
D. Pierce, Lewiston, Ill.	2 00	"	4	"	52
Paul M. Barber, Westerly, R. I.	2 00	"	4	"	52
C. A. Stillman "	2 00	"	4	"	52
E. J Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	4 00	"	4	"	52
B. R. Renshaw, Phœnixville, Pa.	2 00	"	4	"	26
J. F. Randolph, Salem, Va.	2 00	"	5	"	7
W. F. Randolph "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Jesse F. Randolph "	1 00	"	4	"	52
W. P. McCallon, Clark's Riv. Ky.	1 00	"	4	"	35
Martha Wade "	1 00	"	4	"	39
T. L. Smith "	1 00	"	4	"	39
Jas. Cochran, Farmington, Ky.	1 00	"	4	"	39
Alex. R. Jones "	1 00	"	4	"	39
H. Towery, Oxford, Ky.	1 00	"	4	"	39
W. C. Cochran, Wadesboro, Ky.	1 00	"	4	"	35
Geo. W. Bruce, Dallas, Texas	1 00	"	4	"	39
Abner Johnson "	1 00	"	4	"	39

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thonsand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 12½; ditto, full gilt, $1 25. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

EX. BOARD OF THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

A Special Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held at the house of Eld. W. B. Gillett, in Piscataway, N. J., on first-day, Oct. 17, 1847. That being the time and place of the Yearly Meeting of the New Jersey Seventh-day Baptist churches, it is hoped that a full Board will be present.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

MISSIONARY NOTICE.

THE American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, at the call of the President, was convened at the house of Dea. John Maxson, in DeRuyter, N. Y., on the evening of Sept 19, 1847. On motion, the following officers were re-elected:—

WM. B. MAXSON,	President.
AZOR ESTEE, JOEL GREENE, DAVID DUNN, JOHN WHITFORD, JACOB D. BABCOCK,	Vice Presidents.
W. B. GILLETT,	Corresponding Secretary.
C. H. STILLMAN,	Recording Secretary.
H. C. HUBBARD,	Treasurer.
S. S. GRISWOLD,	Agent.
LUCIUS CRANDALL, W. B. GILLETT, S. S. GRISWOLD,	Executive Committee.
BARTON G. STILLMAN,	Clerk, pro tem.

A Report of the Treasurer and General Agent was presented, and received. Said Report being approved, was adopted and ordered to be printed in the Sabbath Recorder. [See Report.]

Resolved, That the minutes of this meeting be published in the Sabbath Recorder, and that S. S. Griswold be the Comittee to attend to that business.

Resolved, That we adjourn to meet at the call of the President during the Anniversary week of our Missionary and Tract Societies, at New Market, N. J., in Sept., 1848.

WM. B. MAXSON, President,
Barton G. Stillman, Clerk, pro tem.

DeRuyter, Sept. 19, 1847.

Report of the Treasurer and General Agent.

The amount of Standing Fund secured by notes receivable, was	$1100 00
Already collected	720 00
Uncollected, as yet	380 00

The Society was indebted over and above the interest of the Standing Fund, and contributions from other sources, to the amount of $281 00. Twenty-seven life members (whose shares were ten dollars each) having agreed to relinquish their claim to said shares, and the total amount of said shares being $270 00, said sum was applied to cancel the debts of the Society; thus reducing its indebtedness to $11 00, which was cancelled by apportioning it equally among the remaining stockholders. Those sums in the hands of John T Davis of Shiloh, N. J., John Whitford of Berlin, N. N., and Joshua B. Maxson of Stephentown, N. Y., were not reckoned in this Report as a part of the Standing Fund, as the Society had nothing in writing to show that any money was loaned to them; also those who deposited said money in said persons' hands were not considered as life members, and therefore not entitled to the dividends of the Society's fund. The total number of life members, after deducting the twenty-seven who have relinquished their claim to their membership shares, is eighty-three.

RECAPITULATION IN A TABULAR FORM.

Standing Fund	$1100 00
Already collected	720 00
Not collected, as yet	$380 00
Debts of Society over available funds	$281 00
Cancelled by the relinquishing of their shares by twenty-seven stockholders	270 00
Indebtedness of Society after the appropriation of said stockholders' shares	$11 00
Standing fund, collected	$720 00
Indebtedness of Society	281 00
In the hands of Treasurer and Agent	$439 00

To be divided among eighty-three stockholders, which gives $5 28 per share, which sum of $5 28 is now subject to the order of each of the eighty-three stockholders, on proving their claims as Life Members of the Society. When the remainder of the standing fund is collected, there will be another dividend of $380 00, giving to each of the eighty-three stockholders another apportionment of $4 57 per share.

H. C. HUBBARD, Treasurer.
S. S. GRISWOLD, Agent.

DeRuyter, Sept. 17, 1847.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing	Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	"	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	"	April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, August 3d, 1847.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the next general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

STATE—A Secretary of State, Comptroller, State Treasurer, Attorney General, State Engineer and Surveyor, Three Canal Commissioners, and Three Inspectors of State Prisons.

DISTRICT—One Senator for the Third Senate District, consisting of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Wards of the city of New York; One Senator for the Fourth Senate District, consisting of the Seventh, Tenth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Wards of the said city; One Senator for the Fifth Senate District, consisting of the Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth Wards of the said city; and One Senator for the Sixth Senate District, consisting of the Eleventh Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Eighteenth Wards of the said city.

COUNTY—Also the following officers for the said city and county, to wit:—Sixteen members of Assembly—One to be elected in each Assembly District.

Yours, respectfully,
N. S. BENTON, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 5th, 1847.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

J. J. V. WESTERVELT,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

☞ All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See revised Statute, vol 1, chap. 6, title 3, article 3d, part 1st, page 140. Sept. 2, te.

Miscellaneous.

At Blenheim, a village in Bavaria, on the Danube, a famous battle was fought on the 12th of August, 1704, between the French aided by the Bavarians, and Allies consisting of England, Austria, Holland, Portugal, and the German Empire. The Allies had 52,000 troops, and the French and Bavarians 56,000. The battle ground was covered with more than 11,000 dead bodies. Victory was on the side of the Allies; but it is said they contended among themselves "about the best use of the victory, till the opportunity to use it was lost." The matter about which they contended, or the good that resulted from the battle, is now as little known as it is represented to be by old Kasper, in the following lines. Possibly posterity may be as much at a loss to discover the reasons or good results of all our "glorious battles" in Mexico.

> "Now tell us all about the war,
> And what they killed each other for."

It was a summer evening
Old Kasper's work was done;
And he behind his cottage door
Was sitting in the sun,
And by him sporting on the green,
His little grandchild Wilhelmine.

She saw her brother Petrekin
Roll something large and round,
That he beside the rivulet
In playing there had found;
He came to ask what he had found,
That was large, and smooth, and round.

Old Kasper took it from the boy
Who stood expectant by,
And then the old man shook his head,
And with a natural sigh,
"'Tis some poor fellow's skull," said he,
"Who fell in the great victory.

"I find them in the garden, for
There's many hereabout;
And often when I go to plow
The ploughshare turns them out;
For many a thousand men," said he,
"Were slain in the great victory."

"Now tell us what 'twas all about,"
Young Petrekin replies,
And little Wilhelmine looks up
With wonder-waiting eyes,
"Now tell us all about the war,
And what they killed each other for."

"It was the English," Kasper cried,
"That put the French to rout,
But what they killed each other for,
I could not well make out,
But every body said," quoth he,
"That 'twas a famous victory.

"My father lived at Blenheim, then,
Yon little stream hard by;
They burned his dwelling to the ground,
And he was forced to fly;
So with his wife and child he fled,
Nor had he where to rest his head.

"With fire and sword the country round
Was wasted far and wide;
And many a childing mother then,
And new-born infant died;
But things like these, you know, must be
At every famous victory.

"They say it was a shocking sight
After the field was won,
For many thousand bodies here
Lay rotting in the sun;
But things like these must always be
At every famous victory.

"Great praise the Duke of Marlboro won
And our good Prince Eugene;"
"Why, 'twas a very wicked thing!"
Said little Wilhelmine;
"Nay, nay, my little girl," quoth he;
"It was a famous victory.

"And every body praised the Duke
Who such a fight did win."
"But what good came of it at last?"
Quoth little Petrekin;
"Why, that I cannot tell," quoth he,
"But 'twas a famous victory."

THE DROWNING OF SIX HUNDRED SLAVES

In the year of 1830, there was hovering on the African coast a large clipper-brig called the Brillante, commanded by a desperado named Homans. Homans was an Englishman by birth, and was known along the whole coast and in Cuba, as the most successful slaver of his day. The brig was owned by two men residing in Havana, one an Englishman and the other a Spaniard. She was built to carry six hundred negroes, and, in her, Homans had made ten successful voyages, actually landing in Cuba five thousand negroes! The brig carried ten guns, had thirty sweeps and a crew of sixty Spaniards, most of them old pirates, as desperate as their commander. An English brig-of-war, which attacked her, was so cut up in hull and rigging, that she was abandoned and soon after sunk. An English sloop-of-war attempted to carry the Brillante with boats, which were beaten off with great slaughter. Now it was known that Homans was again on the coast, and it was resolved to make another attempt to take him with the evidence of his guilt on board. The arrangements for this purpose were all well made. He was allowed to take in his cargo of negroes and set sail.

The Brillante had not lost sight of the coast, when the quick eye of her commander discovered that he was entrapped. Four cruisers, three of them English and one American, had been lying in wait for him, and escape was hopeless. In running away from one he would come in reach of another. Night was coming on, and Homans was silently regarding his pursuers, when suddenly the huge sails flapped idly—the wind died away, and the slaver was motionless on the waters.

"This will not do," Homans muttered, knocking away the ashes from his cigar, "their boats will be down on me before I am ready for their visit."

And, as he said this, his stern face lit up with a smile, the expression of which was diabolical. It was evident enough that he meditated some desperate plan.

A dozen sweeps were got out, and the vessel moved slowly through the water. Meantime the darkness having deepened, Homans proceeded to carry out his design.

The cable attached to the heaviest anchor was taken outside of the hawse-hole, and carried round the rail of the brig, extending from the bow, aft round the stern, and then forward round the other side. The hatches were then taken off, and the negroes passed up, each securely ironed by the wrists. As the miserable wretches came up from the hot hold, into the fresh air, they expressed by their looks a gratitude which would have soften the heart of any but the fiend in whose power they were. Without a word they were led to the side, and made to bend over the rail, outside of which the chain ran. The irons which clasped their wrists were then fastened by smaller chains to the links of the cable. It was slow work, but at the end of four hours, six hundred Africans, male and female, were bending over the rail of the brig, in a painful position, holding by their chained hands the huge cable which was attached to a heavy anchor, suspended by a single sling from the bow.

Homans himself examined the fastenings to see that every negro was strongly bound to the chain. This done, he ordered the pen work of the hold to be broken up, brought on deck, bound up in matting, and well filled with shot and thrown overboard. The work was completed an hour before daybreak, and now the only witnesses of Homans' guilt were attached to that fatal chain. Homans turned to the mate, and with a smile full of meaning, said in Spanish,

"Harro, take an axe and go forward. The wind will come off to us soon. Listen to the word, and when you hear it, cut the sling."

The man went forward, and Homans turned, and in vain endeavored to penetrate the darkness.

"I don't want to lose the niggers," he said, speaking aloud, "and yet I dare not wait until daylight. I wish I knew where the hounds were."

At that instant the report of a gun reached his ear, and then another, and another, and another, in different directions. The cruisers were firing signals.

"That's enough," exclaimed Homans, "I know where you are." Then, raising his voice, he cried, "Harro, are you ready? The wind will reach us soon."

"Ay, ay, sir," was the response.

In a few minutes the sails began to fill, and the vessel moved slowly through the water.

"How much water do you suppose we have here?" asked Homans, turning to the man at the wheel.

"Fifty fathoms at least," was the reply.

"That will do," the slaver muttered, and he walked forward, and examined carefully the "chain-gang," as he brutally termed his diabolical invention.

The negroes sent up piteous groans. For many hours they had bent over in this unnatural position, by which they were suffering the keenest torture.

The breeze strengthened, and the Brillante dashed like a racer over the deep. Homans hailed from the quarter deck, while his men, collected in groups, saw unmoved the consummation of the plan.

"Are you ready, Harro?"

"Ay, ay, sir."

Homans looked round, and into the darkness, which was fast giving way to the morn.

Then he thundered out.

"Strike!"

There was the sound of a single blow, a heavy plunge, and, as the cable fell off the side, a crash, above which arose one terrible shriek—it was the last cry of the murdered Africans. One moment more, and all was still. Six hundred human beings had gone down with that anchor and chain into the depths of the ocean!

Two hours after daybreak the Brillante was overhauled. There was no evidence that she was a slaver, and her captors were obliged to let her pass. The instructions to cruisers at that time did not allow a vessel to be captured unless negroes were found on board.

A KIND-HEARTED CHILD.

There is, nearly in front of our office, an old pump, a kind of town-pump, which every one may use, and whose wet and bespattered base speaks plainer than sign-boards could do, of water for man and horse; and a very excellent pump it is, too, never out of order, easily worked, and furnishing the purest, clearest, coolest water in the world. Many a thirsty school-boy and omnibus-driver has refreshed himself at that pump; the hackmen and draymen stop there, and the old iron ladle that hangs by its side has been pressed by many a sweet and pretty lip. It is no unusual thing, just after school-hours, to see some little fellow, with his satchel over his shoulder, working away at the handle for ten minutes at a time, till all who have gathered round it have been supplied with drink; but yesterday the old pump was honored as though an angel had blessed it. A rosy-cheeked girl, half hid in a flood of curls, came bouncing by, driving her hoop, as the old, decrepit apple-woman, whom every body knows, and whom no one passes without giving her a penny, was endeavoring to obtain a drink. She had set down her basket, but, bent nearly double by the weight of years and sorrows, was still compelled to lean upon her staff. The little Hebe saw the difficulty, and was in an instant at the handle. Holding the ladle until it was filled, she carried it gently to the lip of the old lady, then filled it again, while the warm, grateful thanks of the poor woman called the crimson to her cheek, which, as she hurried away, was deepened by the consciousness that she was observed. We shall ever remember that girl, and the joyous satisfaction with which she performed a good and kind action to the aged. The scene, and the hearty thanks of the old lady, called forcibly to mind, and not altogether inappropriately, the beautiful thought in Talfourd's tragedy of Ion:

"It is a little thing
To give a cup of water; yet its draught
Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May send a shock of pleasure to the soul
More exquisite than when nectareous juice
Renews the life of joy in happiest hours."

WANTS A HUSBAND.

Rather a spicy law question has come before one of the Paris Courts, giving publicity to the following dramatic circumstances out of which it grew: A certain young and pretty actress, who, by shrewd management and economy, had contrived to lay up a servicable fortune, bcame inspired with the unprofessional desire to exchange her untrammeled celibacy for an orderly marriage. Looking around among her admirers, she cast her eyes upon a young man of honorabled connections, who by a course of headlong dissipation, had plunged irrecoverably in debt. Her immediate resolve was to bring about a bargain—the payment of his debts in exchange for the right to call herself by his aristocratic name. Sure of a refusal while in free air, she proceeded to buy up the claims against him, and threw him into prison. Here he received her conditional first offer—"Prison of marriage in exchange for prison of stone." The young man declined, and still continues to decline the alliance, declaring that she may deprive him of his liberty, but he will not stain the escutcheon of his family by a disgraceful alliance. Once a month, however, she calls, and repeats the offer, and there have been large bets, as to the results, based on the probable strength of the love of liberty. [Sat. Eve. Post.

First Anti-Slavery Meeting in the United States.—The National Era says the Attorney-General of the State of Louisiana has pronounced the Declaration of Independence "a humbug;" and Caleb Cushing, late of Massachusetts, has made the discovery, announced in his Fourth of July Oration, "in Gen. Arista's garden," that the Revolutionary War was not a war for Liberty. That such were not the views of the men of the Revolution, seems sufficiently manifest. One of the evidences of their ideas of the nature and bearing of the Great Declaration, is to be found in the proceedings of a meeting held in Middlesex County, New-Jersey, on the 4th of 7th month, 1783, the first anniversary of the signing of that instrument, after the close of the war.

The meeting took place in the township of Woodbridge. Great preparations had been made; an ox was roasted, and large numbers assembled to partake of it, and to listen to the orator of the day, Dr. Bloomfield, father of the late Governor Bloomfield, of New Jersey. At the appointed time the orator mounted the platform, followed by all his slaves, fourteen in number, seven of whom took places on his left, and seven on his right, while he addressed the multitude on the evil of Slavery. At the close of his speech, he turned to his slaves, stating that, inasmuch as we, as a nation, had declared all men equal, he could not, consistently, hold slaves. "Why," asked he, "should these, my fellow-citizens, be held in bondage? From this day they are free!"

In the midst of the applause which followed, the Doctor called up to him one somewhat advanced in years. "Hector," said he, "when you cannot support yourself, you are entitled to a maintenance from my property. When do you suppose you will need that maintenance?"

The delighted negro held up his left hand, and, with the right drew a line across the middle joint of his fingers: "Neber, massa, neber, so long as any of dese fingers are left above dese jints!"

"There, fellow-citizens," said the Doctor, "you see that liberty is as dear to the man of color as to you or me."

The air rang with applause, and the company separated, without a suggestion from any one that it would be an act of patriotism to Lynch the good Doctor for his fanaticism.

◆

The Female Army of Switzerland.—We have mentioned in a previous number the two regiments of women of the Canton of Url, but we find in a French paper a notice of them, which we translate literally: "The two battallions, numbering fourteen hundred females, in military dress, present an aspect at the same time formidable and captivating. In their evolutions and discipline they are drilled to perfection. Curiously enough, superiority of form and beauty has been very much the reason of difference of grade; the handsomest are of the advance guard, and this post of distinction and danger seems willingly conceded them by their companions who are less favored by Nature. Some classification has been guided by temperament also. The more vivid and flighty have been enrolled as voltigeurs, or light-horse—the more phlegmatic as grenadiers. Those who have figures of more embonpoint are in the central body, those of slighter forms are stationed at the wings. The coarse and rude are enrolled as dragoons and cantinieres. The creation of this corps (which, with its discipline and enthusiasm, seems likely, at the first throe of the coming political movement of Europe, to take possession of the Helvetian soil) is an exercise of the powerful genius of Salis-Sogilo, who has reserved to himself the general command.

◆

Natural Gas Jets.—A correspondent informs us that at the village of Wigmore, in Herefordshire, there are fields which may be, and two houses which really are, lit up with a natural gas. This vapor, with which the subjacent strata seems to be charged, is obtained in the following manner:—A hole is made in the cellar of the house, or other locality, with an iron rod; a hollow tube is then placed therein, fitted with a burner similar to those used for ordinary gas lights, and immediately on applying a flame to the jet, a soft and brilliant light is obtained, which may be kept burning at pleasure. The gas is very pure, quite free from any offensive smell, and does not stain the ceilings, as is generally the case with the manufactured article. Besides lighting rooms, &c., it has been used for cooking; and indeed seems capable of the same applications as prepared carburetted hydrogen. There are several fields in which the phenomenon exists, and children are seen boring holes, and setting the gas on fire for amusement. It is now about twelve months since the discovery was made; and a great many of the curious have visited and still continue to visit the spot. [Chamber's Edinburgh Journal.

◆

Marriage.—Man and wife are equally concerned to avoid all offences of each other in the beginning of their conversation; every little thing can blast an infant blossom; and the breath of the South can shake the little rings of the vine when first they begin to curl like the locks of a new weaned boy; but when by age and consolidation they stiffen into the hardness of a stem, and have by the warm embraces of the sun and the kisses of heaven brought forth their clusters, they can endure the storms of the North, and the loud noises of a tempest, and yet never be broken; so are the early unions of an unfixed marriage; watchful and observent, jealous and busy, inquisitive and careful, and apt to take alarm at every unkind word. After the hearts of the man and wife are endeared and hardened by a mutual confidence and experience, longer than artificial pretence can last, there are a great many remembrances, and some things present, that dash all little unkindnesses in pieces. [Jeremy Taylor.

◆

A Glasgow paper states that when the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, visited the island Iona, during his late tour in Scotland, he was unable to obtain access to the ancient cathedral, as the keeper of the keys obstinately refused to unlock the gates on a Sunday, on which day the Grand Duke arrived. The consequence of this scrupulous observance of the Sunday was that the Russian prince was forced to leave the island without viewing the interior of the cathedral and the tombs which it contains.

VARIETY.

Sixty-five barrels of turpentine, very handsomely and neatly put up, were lately shipped from Savannah for New York. It came from Darien, and was made some where on the Altamaha River. Several hundred barrels of this article were shipped from this port last winter, and the production is constantly increasing. The production of turpentine is a source of immense wealth. The whole process is simple and plain, and but few hands are required to carry it on upon a large scale. In North Carolina, where the pine forests are becoming in a great measure exhausted, or at least where their power of production is greatly diminished, they make some $400 to the hand. A mine of wealth lies in those pine trees.

A young girl has lately been brought to Boston for the benefit of eminent medical treatment, who has been suffering for several years with a strange infirmity. It is a noise in the throat, loud and distinct, and sounds like the striking of two metals together or castanets used by boys in the street. The noise is without intermission, save perhaps for a few minutes occasionally. As yet the cause of the noise has not been ascertained, or any means found to abate the disorder, which so far has been on the gradual increase. It is totally distinct from the motion of the lungs while breathing, and altogether is one of those cases which are beyond the ken of human wisdom.

Never to speak by superlatives is a sign of a wise man; for that way of speaking wounds either truth or prudence. Exaggerations are so many prostitutions of reputation, because they discover the weakness of understanding, and the bad discerning of him that speaks. Excessive praises excite both curiosity and envy; so that, if merit answer not the value that is set upon it, as it generally happens, general opinion revolts against the imposture, and makes the flatterer and flattered both ridiculous. [Anon.

One morning, King George III, walking out, met a boy at the stable door, and asked him what he did, and how much he was paid. "I help in the stables," replied the boy, "but I have nothing except victuals and clothes." "Be content," said the King, "I have no more." Whatever he possessed more than that, he was only the steward of, and bound to employ for the glory of God and the good of man. With a contented mind, and food and raiment, one can be happy anywhere. Without, a King would be miserable. "Having food and raiment, let us therewith be content."

There is no complaint more harrassing than asthma. The Newark Daily Advertiser, a reliable paper, pledges itself to cure this distressing disease with the following simple remedy. "Take 1 1-2 oz. sulphur, 1 oz. cream tarter, 1 oz. senna, 1 oz. annis seed, pulverize, and thoroughly mix the same, and take one teaspoonful in about two table spoonfuls of molasses on going to bed, or at such time through the day as may best suit the patient; the dose once a day may be increased or diminished a little, as may best suit the state of the bowels of the individual."

A correspondent of the United States Gazette says, "We are indebted to Austria for a recent and happy invention. An individual of that country has thought of using the galvanic power for the preservation of trees and plants. He uses for that purpose two rings, one of copper, the other of zinc. Having placed the one upon the other, he fixes them round the trunk of the tree, and if an insect but touch the ring of copper, it receives at once a galvanic shock.

When Bonaparte had overrun the dominions of the Pope, a number of French priests, who refused to take the oath required by the new government, expected to be slain. Bonaparte, however, published a proclamation, protecting those priests from all violence, and requiring the Italian convents to take them in, furnish them board, and give them besides, twelve and sixpence each (English money) per month, and take their pay from the priests in saying masses ad valorem.

A fine stone church was lately built in Missouri, upon the facade of which a stone-cutter was ordered to cut the following as an inscription: "My house shall be called the house of prayer." He was referred for accuracy to the verse of scripture in which these words occur; but unfortunately he transcribed, to the scandal of the society, the whole verse: "My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Manly B. Townsend, of Alexander, Washington county, Maine, has a good farm containing 320 acres, 150 of which is cleared and cultivated. Last year he raised 100 tons of hay, 100 bushels of corn, 150 of wheat, 70 of buckwheat, 125 of barley, 250 of oats, 400 potatoes, 400 turnips, 15 of beans; making in all 1510 bushels; and 100 tons of hay.

The Duke of Veraguna has offered several bulls of his famous breed gratis for fights, the proceeds of which are destined to animate the languishing works for the new church of the suburb of Carabanchel. How the Cosas de Espana must shock the good Monsignor Brunelli!

The following poultice for the throat distemper has been much approved in England: "The pulp of a roasted apple, mixed with an ounce of tobacco, the whole wet with spirits of wine, or any other high spirits, spread on a linen cloth, and bound upon the throat at any period of the disorder."

A colony of Hollanders, amounting to about 1,000, have purchased two entire townships in Marion county, Iowa. They bring their own mechanics and artisans with them, and have selected their site for a town. About three thousand more are expected to join them by next spring.

Lord Erskine, when a barrister, once observed to a jury, as his opponent's clerk entered the Court with a large armful of books and papers, "Gentlemen, whenever you see so much law necessary in support of a cause, be sure it is a very bad one."

The Jews have a proverb, "that he who breeds not up his son to some occupation, makes him a thief," and the Arabians say, "that an idle person is the devil's play-fellow."

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the psess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 18. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 21, 1847. WHOLE NO. 174.

The Sabbath Recorder.

From the North British Review for August.

CHINA. [Continued.

The tea districts are situated in the provinces of Canton, Fokien, and Chekiang. There are two species, or probably only varieties, of the tea shrub, the Thea Viridis and Thea Bohea of botanists. It has been frequently stated and believed that our black teas are derived from the Bohea shrub, and the green teas from the Thea Viridis. Mr. Fortune, however, ascertained, by actual inspection, that both shrubs yield green and black teas, and that, in fact, although the Bohea plant is that which grows in the southern districts, and the Thea Viridis in the northern, both green and black teas are regularly prepared in all the localities, and that the difference arises from the quality and mode of preparation of the leaves. The tea plant requires a rich soil, otherwise the continual gathering of the leaves would soon destroy its vigor. In the north of China, the tea plantations are always situated on the lower and most fertile sides of the hills, and never on the low lands. The shrubs are planted in rows about four feet apart, and about the same distance between each row, and look at a little distance like little shrubberies of evergreens. The farms are small, each consisting of from one to four or five acres; indeed, every cottager has his own little tea garden, the produce of which supplies the wants of his family, and the surplus brings him in a few dollars which are spent on the other necessaries of life. The same is the case with the cotton, rice, and silk farms; all are small, and managed by the members of the family. In the green tea districts, near Ning-po, the first crop of leaves is generally gathered about the middle of April; this consists of the young leaf buds, just as they begin to unfold, and forms a fine and delicate kind of hyson, which is highly esteemed by the natives, but it is scarce and expensive. About the middle of May the shrubs are again covered with fresh leaves, and are ready for the second gathering, which is the most important of the season. The third gathering produces a very inferior sort of tea, which is rarely sent out of the district. When the weather is fine the natives are seen in little groups, on the hill sides, stripping the leaves off, and throwing them into baskets. These leaves are then carried home to the barns adjoining their cottages, and dried in pans held over little furnaces constructed in the wall. They are then rolled up by the hand on a bamboo table, and twisted and curled into the shape we see them. After this they are exposed upon a large screen, and dried farther in the sun, when they are again subjected to a second drying in the pans, and are then picked, sifted, and sorted, and finally packed up for market. For the European markets this green tea undergoes a farther process of coloring, which is done by the addition of Prussian blue and gypsum; but this adds nothing to the flavor or other qualities of the tea, except heightening the color.

When the teas are ready for sale, extensive tea-dealers come from the towns and make purchases from the small growers. The tea is then conveyed to the shipping ports, and packed and shipped for the European and American markets.

"There are few sights," says Mr. Fortune, "more pleasing than a Chinese family in the interior engaged in gathering the tea leaves, or indeed in any of their other agricultural pursuits. There is the old man, patriarch-like, directing his descendants, many of whom are in their youth and prime, while others are in their childhood, in the labors of the field. He stands in the midst of them, bowed down with age. But to the honor of the Chinese, as a nation, he is always looked up to by all with pride and affection, and his old age and grey hairs are honored, revered, and loved. When, after the labors of the day are over, they return to their humble and happy homes, their fare consists chiefly of rice, fish, and vegetables, which they enjoy with great zest, and are happy and contented. I really believe that there is no country in the world where the agricultural population are better off than they are in the north of China. Labor with them is a pleasure, for its fruits are eaten by themselves, and the rod of the oppressor is unfelt and unknown." P. 202.

There is no State Religion in China, the Government permitting a general toleration of all sects. The doctrines of Confucius are adopted by the literary class, and a considerable proportion of the people. Instead of a religion, it may rather be termed a system of philosophy, commonplace enough, and possessing no great depth, yet of a practical worldly nature, suited to the tone of the general mind. It consists chiefly of moral and political maxims, and avoids entering on the existence or nature of Deity, or allusions to a future state. Another sect, the Tauists, or followers of Laou-tsze, seem to be identical with the Schamanists, or demon-worshipers of the ruder tribes of the great Mongolian race. This sect now seems to have few votaries in China, or at least little or no mention is made of them by recent travelers, except the casual notice of a temple dedicated to their gods. It no doubt prevailed more in the earlier and ruder stages of their history. Budhism, introduced from India probably about the commencement of the Christian era, has spread to a considerable extent in China; but it is less its mysticism and abstract speculations than its image-worship, its external observances, and its monastic system, which have taken hold of the people's minds. In general, its priests and votaries are extremely ignorant, few comparatively being able to read or write, and it is only the lower and more ignorant classes of the population who belong to this religion. Budhist temples and monastic institutions are not unfrequent in the cities and country, but in general they are on the decay, and are regarded by the people with less interest and reverence than formerly. Yet image-worship is in universal practice. Their temples, houses, streets, roads, hills, rivers, carriages, and ships, are full of idols, and their houses and shops, and corners of their streets, are plastered with charms, amulets, and emblems of idolatry. In external forms and regulations, there are singular coincidences between the Romish religion and Budhism. The existence of monasteries and nunneries, the celibacy, the tonsure, the flowing robes and the peculiar caps of the priesthood, the burning of incense, the tinkling of bells, the rosaries of beads, the intonation of service, the prayers in an unknown tongue, purgatory, and the offerings for the dead in their temples, and, above all, the titles of their principal goddess, the "Queen of Heaven," and "Holy Mother," represented by the image of a woman with a male child in her arms—present features of mutual resemblance which must strike every one. Mr. Smith paid a visit to Pootoo, an island of about thirty miles in extent, in the neighborhood of Chusan, which is entirely tenanted by Budhist priests. At the time of his visit there were about six hundred resident priests, besides three hundred mendicant friars and itinerant priests, who were absent on the neighboring mainland. This island, he was informed, had been ceded to the Budhists, as an endowment for the diffusion of their religion, by one of the Chinese emperors, of the Han dynasty. This date would make the origin of their endowment contemporaneous with the earliest centuries of the Christian era. The priest who was Mr. Smith's informant, said that Pootoo had seen brighter days, and he spoke with regret of the degeneracy of the present age in respect of zeal for idolatry. He especially mentioned the fact of there having been three hundred more priests on the island a century ago, and accounted for the diminution in their number by the want of interest and devotion shown by the people on the mainland, who suffered the temples, one after the other, to fall to ruin, without incurring the expense of rebuilding them. The endowment of the temple in which he himself resided, arose from 200 acres of land assigned to it as its revenue on the opposite island of Chew-ko-tze. Besides this, they enjoyed an uncertain revenue from the offerings of casual devotees visiting the sacred locality. He stated his opinion, that out of every hundred priests in Pootoo, only twenty were men of education.

A great proportion of the inmates of these temples consists of those who have been brought thither when they were mere children, by needy relatives, or those who, by poverty or crime, have been forced to take up their abode there as an asylum for the remainder of their lives. Without any kind of employment, either bodily or mental, and in a state of lonely celibacy, cut off from all the usual pursuits or enjoyments of society, they spend a miserable existence in indolent vacuity. By means of self-righteous asceticism they hope to be delivered from the grosser elements which form the compound being—man, and to be assimilated to, and at length finally absorbed into, the immaterial substance of the Holy Budh. For this purpose they abstain from animal food, and repeat their daily routine of O-me-to-fuh, till the requisite amount of purity and merit has been gained, and the more devout are enabled to revel in the imaginary paradise of absorption, in other words, of annihilation. This is the grand hope of Budhism—this is the only stimulus to present exertion which it offers. The material part of man is to be purged away, and after transmigration through certain stages of animal life, more or less numerous in proportion to the guilt or merit of the individual, the soul is at last taken into the deity, and becomes a part of Budh himself. This is the purely imaginative invention of a more poetical race than the prosaic Chinese. In fact, Budhism in China appears to be a mere religion of external form. The most intelligent of its priests do not believe its doctrines, and even on its more ignorant votaries it can have no heart influence.

As little effect does the cold and lifeless morality of Confucius appear to exercise on the characters of the mass of the people. With naturally mild dispositions, and patient and industrious habits, they have no regard for truth—they are guided by expediency alone, and will lie, deceive, and cheat, just as it suits their own personal interest. No high or pure motives actuate them. They look with great indifference, or even levity, on the misfortunes of their companions, and though vanity and self-conceit make them boastful, yet they have no true and genuine patriotic love for their country. Their unimpassioned nature does not permit them to be ferocious or terribly wrathful, but they have a host of minor vices, and a few of the more ennobling active virtues of humanity. Thus they are sensual, coldly cruel, insincere, mendacious, devoid of general philanthropy. Yet it must be allowed that they have the domestic attachments—filial piety—a sense of gratitude, and a cool and reasonable way of settling and cementing disputes. From the general insincerity and duplicity which prevails, one would be apt to suppose that a total want of confidence in the ordinary affairs of life would be common, and so it would were this not rectified by what appears a strange adjustment.

"In England," says Mr. Meadows, "we trust a man because we put some confidence in his own honesty, and because we know we can, through the law, obtain redress for breach of trust. In China, people place little or no confidence in each other's honesty, and there is so much uncertainty, difficulty, and even danger, in obtaining redress for breach of trust or contract, by applying to the authorities, that few will venture on an application. Every Chinese, therefore, who expects to have any kind of trust placed in him, is provided with a guarantee of a standing and respectability sufficient, in proportion to the nature and extent of the trust, who, according to the custom, makes himself responsible, in the fullest sense of the word, for any unfaithfulness on the part of the person guaranteed. It may be objected that the guarantee himself might violate his guaranty—and at first sight there certainly appears no cause why he should not; he is, however, effectually prevented from this by the power of public opinion. Every man, without reflecting deeply on the subject, feels that some reliable bond of mutual security is necessary; the guaranty form, by the general consent of the nation, is that bond in China, and any man who would venture deliberately to contemn it, would lose—what to most people is of the highest importance—the good opinion of all classes of society, and the fellowship of his own; while even in a pecuniary point of view he would not be permitted to derive any benefit from his breach of good faith. I may state as a fact, that I have never yet known an instance of a Chinese openly violating a guaranty known to have been given by him; and though I have remarked, that under strong temptations they will sometimes try to evade it, yet instances of this are extremely rare, and they generally come promptly forward to meet all the consequences of their responsibility."—P. 218.

Mr. Smith, after giving the people credit for their good qualities, thus proceeds with the other side of the picture:—

"Facts of daily occurrence, brought to the knowledge of the missionaries, and frequently gained through the medium of the missionary hospital, revealed the prevalence of the most fearful immoralities among the people, and furnished a melancholy insight into the desolating horrors of paganism. Female infanticide openly confessed, legalized by custom, and divested of disgrace by its frequency—the scarcity of females, leading as a consequence to a variety of crimes habitually staining the domestic hearth—the dreadful prevalence of all the vices charged by the Apostle Paul upon the ancient heathen world—the alarming extent of opium indulgence, destroying the productiveness and natural resources of the people—the universal practice of lying, and suspicion of dishonesty between man—the unblushing lewdness of old and young—the full unchecked torrent of human depravity borne along in its tempestuous channel, and inundating the social system with the overflowings of ungodliness,—prove the existence of a kind and degree of moral degradation among a people, of which an excessive statement can scarcely be made, and of which an adequate conception can rarely be formed."—P. 490.

With regard to the truth of the commonly received reports of Infanticide among the Chinese, there can be no doubt. Mr. Smith took special care personally to inquire into this fact. It is practiced chiefly among the poorer classes, and it is the female infants who suffer, a poor man in his old age usually receiving support and assistance from his sons, whereas his daughters are generally married early, and are then no longer considered as part of the family. On repeated occasions, and before a numerous assemblage, fathers, when questioned by Mr. Smith regarding this subject, seemed to have no hesitation in openly and simply avowing the fact. He was told that in the province of Fokeen, at a place called Kean Ying-Chou, five days' journey above Canton, there were computed to be from 500 to 600 female infanticides in a month. The comparative infrequency of the practice at Canton, arose from the establishment by Government of a foundling hospital there, where 5000 female children, of the lowest classes, were annually received. While visiting some of the villages in the vicinity of Amoy, the subject of infanticide was introduced to the people. They stated that out of six daughters it was customary to kill three. Some murdered four, and a few even five, out of the same number. They said that the proportion of female children which they put to death entirely depended on the poverty of the individual. They told that the death of the infant was effected immediately after birth, and that four different modes of infanticide were practiced among them: drowning in a vessel of water, pinching the throat, stifling by means of a wet cloth over the mouth, and choking by a few grains of rice placed into the mouth of the infant. If sons were alternately interspersed with daughters in a family, the people esteemed it good luck, and were not accustomed to murder the female children. One old man who was questioned, confessed publicly before the crowd, that out of six daughters he had murdered three. At first he said that he did not remember whether he had murdered two or three. He said that he smothered them by putting grass into their mouth. The people, perceiving the disgust and indignation which the recital of these facts caused, at last became ashamed of their conduct, showing how easily the conscience may be awakened to the enormity of such actions. In other parts of China visited by Mr. Smith, no well-authenticated cases were brought within his notice sufficient to prove that this crime prevailed to any considerable extent. In the vicinity of Shang-hai and Ning-po, the moral atrocity, if perpetrated, lurks in secret, and is comparatively too rare an occurrence to be regarded as possessing the sanction of public opinion.

Another prominent vice of the Chinese is Opium Smoking. This to a certain extent has been practiced for a long period, but of late years has increased. An opium house in Amoy is thus described by Mr. Smith:—

"The first opium house which we entered was situated close to the entrance to the Taou-lais palace. Four or five rooms, in different parts of a square court, were occupied by men stretched out on a rude kind of couch, on which lay a head pillow, with lamps, pipes, and other apparatus for smoking opium. In one part of the principal room the proprietor stood, with delicate steelyards, weighing out the prepared drug, which was of a dark, thick, semi-fluid consistency. A little company of opium smokers, who had come hither to indulge in the expensive fumes, or to feast their eyes with the sight of that which increasing poverty had placed beyond their reach, soon gathered around us, and entered into conversation. They formed a motley group of sallow, sunken cheeks, and glassy, watery eyes, as with idiotic look, and vacant laugh, they readily volunteered information, and described the process of their own degradation. There was to be seen the youth, who, just emerging from boyhood, had only commenced the practice a little time before, and was now hastening to a premature old age. There was the man of middle age, who, for half his life a victim of this pernicious indulgence, was bearing with him to an early grave the wreck of his worn-out constitution. There was again the more elderly man, whose iron strength of frame could better ward off the slow but certain advances of decrepitude, but whose bloated cheek, and vacant stare, told of the struggle that was raging within. There was again the rarely-seen spectacle of old age, and the man of sixty lived yet to tell of forty years consumed in the seduction of this vice. They all assented to the evils and sufferings of their course, and professed a desire to be freed from its power. They all complained of loss of appetite—of the agonizing cravings of the early morning—of prostration of strength, and of increasing feebleness, but said that they could not gain firmness of resolution to overcome the habit. They all stated its intoxicating effects to be worse than those of drunkenness, and described the extreme dizziness and vomiting which ensued so as to incapacitate them for exertion. I subsequently visited about thirty other opium shops in different parts of the city. The people say that there are nearly a thousand such establishments in Amoy."—Pp. 433—4.

A confirmed opium smoker generally consumes daily about a mace of opium, which is equal to one drachm, of sixty grains, the price of which is about eightpence sterling, a large sum of money in China. In fact, many of the poorer classes consume from a third to a fourth of their whole earnings in this pernicious practice, notwithstanding they may have a wife and family depending on them for support. This is a melancholy account, and can only find a parallel in the gin and whiskey consumers of our own island. For one million pounds' worth of opium, however, which is thus used in the extensive empire of China, there are at least twenty millions' worth of intoxicating liquors consumed in Great Britain. Both are clamant evils, and are potent means of debasing society; but evils cannot be banished from this world of ours—our chief aim must be, by God's blessing, to elevate men's minds above temptation, and fight the battle on the side of strenuous resistance. It is, no doubt, unfortunate that this pernicious, and in a certain degree illegal traffic, should be carried on by Britons; and the missionaries have frequently had this retorted to them in the midst of their expostulations and advices to the misguided victims of opium smoking. The usual good common sense of the Chinese, however, will soon be able to distinguish the true position in which this traffic, or any other of the kind, as regards the intercourse of nations, must be put, and they will cease to confound the philanthropic endeavors of the missionaries with the gain-seeking pursuits of other members of the community to which they may belong. The opium trade, though still nominally illegal, is now tacitly recognized by the Chinese authorities, and perhaps the best plan for all parties would be to legalize it at once, imposing a certain duty on it as we do on the similar luxuries of tobacco and alcoholic liquors. [To be Continued.

EASTER AND GOOD FRIDAY.

We find in the Christian Chronicle the following account of the manner in which these two Catholic festivals are celebrated in Venezuela:—

"Easter Sunday is now about closing, and with it closes the celebration of the resurrection. Active operations were commenced on Thursday evening by parading about the streets a coarse and vulgar image, with a cross fastened to its back, which was intended to represent that touching, humiliating portion of the Saviour's passion. On Friday the cross was erected in the church and the image nailed to it; on the afternoon of the same day, and throughout Saturday, the flags on the forts, and on the vessels in the harbor were at half mast; the ringing of all kinds of bells was prohibited, even the signal bell on the hill, which announces the approach of vessels, was stopped, much to the inconvenience of those engaged in commerce, and the hotel keepers were forced to resort to other means than bells and gongs to call their inmates to meals; the billiard tables were all covered, (this being the only time in the year, not excepting Sundays, that such an event takes place) and the billiard "cues" were carefully arranged upon them in the form of crosses! What a strange association of ideas is this! In short, every thing was crossed, and every body looked cross because the priests had laid an embargo of a day on their merriment. At the door of the church stood a grave looking guard of national soldiers, watching the sepulchre with loaded muskets 'to prevent his disciples from stealing him away.'

"The image had been taken down from the cross on Friday afternoon, and placed in a box above the altar, the side next to the congregation, having been left open to admit of its being seen; it was decorated with ruffles, and ribbands, and artificial flowers, and every pains seem to have been taken to make it look as childishly ridiculous as possible. About one o'clock on Sunday morning the said image was taken out of the box, and that operation was called the resurrection; the event was announced by the firing of a gun from the fort, which was followed by the ringing of all the bells in the town, the firing of rockets, crackers, pistols, guns, &c., the shouting of the populace, and a most complete uproar in every street.

"The billiard tables were uncovered early in the morning, Sunday as it was; every species of gambling and rioting has been carried on throughout the day, by priests as well as people, and the complete desecration of this holy day is now being consummated by balls and dances in every quarter of town."

THE DEPTH OF JACOB'S WELL.

The Rev. Dr. Wilson, of England, who has recently traveled through the Holy Land, and published the results of his travel under the title of "The Land of the Bible Visited and Described," presents the following relation of his visit to Jacob's Well:

"At Shechem Dr. Wilson found a remnant of the Samaritans still, and had some interesting conversation with one of their priests. In the immediate neighborhood is Jacob's Well, where our Lord encountered the woman of Samaria, and with the simplest images instructed her in the sublime mysteries of spiritual truth. The well is situated amid the ruins of a church which once surrounded it. The mouth was covered with two large stones. Rolling away these, the travelers, with their attendants, swung themselves down to a kind of platform, where they kindled a light, and commenced preparations for ascertaining the depth of Jacob's Well.

"It was now time to disclose our plan of operation to our native attendants. 'Jacob,' said we, 'a friend of ours, an English traveler and minister, (the Rev. Andrew Bonar, of Collace,) dropped the five books of Moses and the other inspired records into this well about three years ago, and if you will descend and bring them up, we shall give you a handsome bakshish.' 'Bakshish?' said the Arabs, kindling at the sound; 'if there is to be a bakshish in the case, we must have it, for we are the lords of the land.' 'Well, down you go, said we, throwing the rope over their shoulders, 'and you shall have the bakshish.' 'Nay, verily,' said they, 'you mean to hang us; let Jacob do what he pleases.' Jacob was ready at our command; and, when he had tied the rope round his body below the shoulders, he received our parting instructions. We asked him to call out to us the moment that he might arrive at the surface of the water, and told him that we should so hold the rope as to prevent him from sinking, if there was any considerable depth of the element. We told him also to pull out one of the candles with which he had stored his breast, and to ignite it when he might get below. As he looked into the fearful pit on the brink of which he stood, terror took hold of him, and he betook himself to prayer in the Hebrew tongue. We of course gave him no interruption in his solemn exercise, as, in the circumstances of the case, we could not but admire the spirit of devotion which he evinced. On a signal given we let him go. The Arabs held with us the rope, and we took care that he should descend as gently as possible.

"When our material was nearly exhausted, he called out, 'I have reached the bottom, and it is at present scarcely covered with water.' Forthwith he kindled his light; and, that he might have every advantage, we threw him down a quantity of dry sticks, with which he made a blaze, which distinctly showed us the whole well, from the top to the bottom.

"We saw the end of the rope at its lower part; and we put a knot upon it at the margin above, that we might have the exact measurement when Jacob might come up. After searching for about five minutes for the Bible among the stones and mud at the bottom, our friend joyfully cried out: 'It is found! it is found! it is found!' We were not slow, it may be supposed, in giving him our congratulations. The prize he carefully put into his breast, and then he declared his readiness, with our aid, to make the ascent. * * * * *

"We found it no easy matter to get him pulled up, as we had to keep the rope from the edge of the well lest it should snap asunder. When he came into our hands he was unable to speak, and we laid him down on the margin of the well that he might collect his breath. 'Where is the bakshish?' were the first words which he uttered on regaining his faculty of speech. It was immediately forthcoming, to the extent of about a sovereign, and to his fullest satisfaction. A similar sum we divided among our Arab assistants. The book, from having been so long steeped in the water and mud below, was, with the exception of the boards, reduced to a mass of pulp. In our effort to recover it we had ascertained the depth of the well, which is exactly seventy-five feet. Its diameter is about nine feet. It is entirely hewn out of a solid rock, and is a work of great labor. It bears marks about it of great antiquity. 'The well is deep,' was the description given of it by the woman of Samaria to our Lord. It still, as now noticed, has the same character, although to an extent it is perhaps filled with the stones which are thrown into it by travelers and pilgrims.

"The adventure which I have now noticed being over, we emerged from the well, and, sitting down at its mouth, we could not but think of the scenes and events of other days. We were near to the very 'parcel of ground that Jacob gave Joseph.' Jacob's Well was here! Here Jesus, the Saviour, sat, wearied with his journey, suffering from the infirmities of that lowly human nature he had assumed, when he came from heaven to accomplish the work of our redemption, which his Father had given him to do. Here he spake, with inimitable simplicity and majesty as never man spake, setting himself forth as the Source and Giver of the copious and satisfying waters of Eternal Life."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 21, 1847.

RESPONSIBILITY OF ORDAINING MINISTERS.

At a recent meeting of a Baptist Association in Rhode Island, the Rev. Dr. Wayland, of Brown's University, read a paper, which he had prepared by request, on "the responsibility of the churches with respect to the ordination of ministers." The subject is one of such vast and practical importance, that we are sure our readers will thank us for giving them, in a condensed form, some of the Doctor's thoughts upon it.

The paper commences with a discussion of the question, "To whom does the New Testament commit the duty of ordaining men; that is, of setting them apart to the ministerial office?" Dr. Wayland thinks, from a candid examination of the Scriptures, that no authoritative precept whatever is given upon this subject. The Gospels are completely occupied in revealing the wonderful moral truths of the new dispensation, particularly the way in which alone man can be saved. Jesus Christ established no ecclesiastical organization during his lifetime. He left nothing on earth but the moral truths which he came to reveal. The apostolic office was not designed to be perpetuated, and the church was left at Christ's ascension without any organization. Very soon, however, as different communities of Christians arose, elders or bishops were appointed, whose duty it was to preach the word, and to take the government or oversight of the church. They were probably first chosen by the brethren, and afterwards set apart by prayer and laying on of hands. But this mode, although adopted by the apostles, is not necessarily obligatory upon us, since there is no command in respect to it. It was suited to their times and circumstances; and we have, without doubt, a right so to modify it as to suit our own times and circumstances.

After thus disposing of the question to whom the New Testament commits the duty of ordaining men, Dr. Wayland proceeds to state the manner in which persons are set apart to the ministry among the Baptists. A license to preach originates with each individual church. When a church has formed the opinion that one of its members possesses gifts adapted to preaching, they, by vote, grant him a license, in virtue of which he may officiate in the pulpit whenever he may be requested to do so. This license is probationary. It should be always limited in time, and should be renewable every year. If it be found that the candidate does not improve, or if for any other reason the church believes that the brother would be more useful as a private member, the license should terminate, and he should cease to minister in public. If, however, his various efforts confirm the people in their opinion of his suitableness for the ministry, he may then be called to ordination—an act which sets him apart permanently to minister in sacred things. In order to this a Council is generally called, composed of ministers and laymen from the neighboring churches, who take the matter into consideration, and act on behalf of the whole church. The following is the manner in which the Council is called and proceeds:—

"The church which wishes to call one of its members to ordination, sends letters to several churches in the vicinity, inviting them to be present by delegates, for the purpose of examining and setting apart the candidate. When they assemble, the letters and the answers are read; the council is organized by choosing a moderator and clerk. The proceedings of the church in calling the candidate to ordination, are read. If all the proceedings have been had without cause of difference, the candidate is called upon to give a narrative of his conversion to God, of his reasons for supposing himself to be called to the gospel ministry, and then to state, in brief, his understanding of the doctrines of the Scriptures. In these he is examined as fully as the council or any of its members see fit. If the council are satisfied on all these points, they declare themselves to be so, by vote, and proceed to make arrangements for the ordination services. These are essentially prayer, and the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, though a sermon, a charge, and a right hand of fellowship, expressive of the confidence of the council, are commonly added."

The question what are the intellectual and moral elements to be sought in a minister of the gospel, is next considered, the object of the writer being to present those passages of Scripture by which we are to be guided in the matter. The minister is an ambassador of Christ, as though God did beseech men by him. It is his business, not only to preach among men the unsearchable riches of Christ, but to be an example to the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity. He is expected to understand the meaning of God's message to a sinful world, and to apply it to the intellect and conscience of his hearers. This he can never do with good effect, unless he constantly and strictly practices what he preaches. Deficiency in this respect affords a sad evidence of unfitness, and not unfrequently indicates that those who suppose themselves called to the work are entirely mistaken, and had better abandon it.

The concluding part of Dr. Wayland's paper is occupied in considering the evils which may flow from the indiscreet ordination of men to the ministry, and the consequent responsibility of those to whom that work is committed. The character of the ministry depends essentially upon the act of the church in licensing men, and the act of the council in ordaining them. Yet not unfrequently there is an attempt on the part of both to evade this responsibility. The church is sometimes pressed with requests to grant one of its members a license to preach. A majority doubt the propriety of doing so; but finally, for fear of giving offence, a license is granted, under an impression that if any thing is wrong it will be made right by the council called for his ordination. In due time perhaps the council is called; and they are told that the church has already decided upon the qualifications of the candidate, by giving him a license, so that their principal business is to ratify the act of the church. Thus, between the two, the responsibility is thrown off, and a person is introduced to the sacred office, of whose fitness for it both bodies had doubts. The consequences are deplorable. A man who might have been useful in the station for which he was fitted, is placed in a position where he can neither benefit himself nor others. If a man is not called of God to the ministry, he had far better be in any other profession than that, and it is not harshness on the part of a church or council to tell him so. The sooner this truth is learned the better for all concerned. There can be no greater curse inflicted upon churches or individuals than to fill up the ranks of the ministry with men who have no love for that particular work, and whom God never intended for it. Laborers are needed, no doubt, and this is a reason often urged for licensing and ordaining whoever offers. They were needed also in Christ's day. But he, when beholding the greatness of the harvest, and the fewness of the laborers, said to his disciples, "Pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." Let us do likewise, and invite those only to enter the field, who give evidence of having been sent of God.

OF FEMALE INFLUENCE IN RELIGION.

The support and progress of religion depends very much on the female part of community. Their influence in forming the mind and character is immense. The greater transactions of society fall most heavily upon the men; but women, in their more retired sphere, may exert an influence no less than the men in all religious matters. Their tender and feminine minds are more easily impressed with gospel truths, while their relations in life render them more susceptible of religious impressions, and more anxious to enjoy religious comforts. Their conditions in life are attended with fewer temptations, and fewer diversions from the duties of religion. It is but seldom, in this Christian country, that we see among females an infidel, a scoffer, a drunkard, or a contemner of divine things. There are more of the females truly pious than of the males, and a smaller number who depart from the faith and become castaways. Hence seldom do females become subjects of discipline, as the history of the church proves. The religious education of children depends principally upon the mother, especially in its earliest stages, while receiving those impressions that will influence them through life. The mother can best adapt herself to their capacities. She with the most tender care rears and watches the tender plant. A curse awaits that child who despises to obey his mother.

The pious mother has much influence in maintaining family religion, and family prayer. She disposes and arranges her domestic affairs so as to allow opportunity for it; and she gives notice that the family are in readiness, with the good old Bible on the stand. Thus she encourages her husband, and obviates all excuses that he might be inclined to make to neglect the duty. When the tabernacle of worship was reared, not only the men brought their offerings to the Lord, but all the pious, wise-hearted women contributed by their labors and materials to build, furnish and ornament this structure. In the time of our Saviour's ministrations, we often find women among the devout people who attended upon him. There were many who ministered of their substance, and whose dwellings were places of resort for him and his disciples. When Christ was about to be crucified, and on his way to the cross, many women dared to express for him their regard, by lamenting his unrightous sufferings. When forsaken by his apostles and a boasting Peter, women stood by and beheld the mournful scene. And when borne to the tomb, women followed, and observed the place and manner of his burial. Having made preparation, they intended, as soon as the Sabbath was past, to visit the spot again, and embalm his body. Accordingly they went, but he was risen and gone. They went forth with joy, as heralds of salvation, to proclaim the glorious event which is the foundation of our faith, hope and joy. In the early ages of the church, females did much in assisting the apostles to disseminate divine truth. Priscilla had the thanks of all the churches of the gentiles for her services, and the dangers she had encountered. We have some daring primitive spirits among females at the present day, of whom may be numbered Mrs. Carpenter and Mrs. Wardner, who are willing to sacrifice all for Christ's sake. Others may be equally evangelical, and equally influential in their labors at home. Various are your relations in life. There you are to exert and immediate influence, that may grow with your growth, and strengthen with your strength. This influence we need in maintaining and cultivating true piety in our families, churches, and communities. This influence we need in our missionary operations. While some of your sex are in a foreign field laboring for God, you, in your domestic circles, will not forget that you are laborers with them, "that they that sow and they that reap may rejoice together." W. B. G.

CIRCULAR.

By a statement in the Sabbath Recorder of October 7, it will be seen that to each of eighty-three stockholders of the standing fund of the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, there is apportioned $5 28, subject to their order, on "proving their claim as Life Members."

It will doubtless be understood, that no person has a claim on that fund except those who have paid over to the Treasurer, or to the Society's authorized agents, the sum of ten dollars, the constitutional fee required to constitute a Life Member. As to the proof, neither the Treasurer nor the General Agent will be unreasonable in their requirements; but they would be glad to have sufficient evidence to satisfy them that the individuals claiming a share in that fund have a valid claim. And in a great majority of cases the proof is with the individuals who have paid, or somewhere else than in any of the records of the Society. Not that there are no lists of Life Members' names on the books of the treasury, but there is nothing to distinguish between those who have given notes to secure the payment of membership fees, and have never paid them, and those who have paid their ten dollars; except those in Waterford, Ct., in one list, and those in Hopkinton and Westerly, R. I., in another. For these reasons, the only way we could estimate the number of paying members was by the amount of the standing fund, allowing one share to every ten dollars.

It is hoped that those who have claims on the standing fund will present them as soon as may be, giving orders how they will have them disposed of. The great portion that I have heard from have given orders to have theirs paid over to the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, which has accordingly been done. Others wishing to have theirs disposed of in the same way, will please send their orders soon, that I may be enabled to send the money in a certificate of deposite or draft all together, and so save expense and the conveyance be made with safety.

It is expected that there will be another dividend in the month of January next, and it is wished that those who order their present dividend will say how their next share shall be disposed of. H. C. HUBBARD, Treas.

Expense of Religious Newspapers.—The Vermont Chronicle says that those who think of stopping a religious periodical, on account of the expense attending it, should reflect on the destitution which they will hereby bring upon their families. Our children ought to understand the history of the present age. We send them to study geography; and this is well, because they have to live in the world, whose continents, rivers, mountains, islands, and waters, they study. We send them to study the history of the past, because they ought thus to be enabled to judge of the present. But after we have given them this geographical and historical knowledge, shall we exclude them from a knowledge of their own times? Shall we withhold the very ability to make the appropriate use of the knowledge they have obtained? Do you say they will get this knowledge from secular newspapers? Is it better to have them obtain a knowledge of the world, disconnected with the doctrines, the prospects and affairs of the kingdom of Christ, than in connection with them? Is not a well conducted religious newspaper, bringing sanctified literature, intelligence, and religious instruction into the bosom of the family, one of the best means of education?

Theatres in New York.—We clip the following from the New York correspondence of the Baptist Register. The picture is a dark and saddening one. It is best, however, that the truth should be known, and Christians warned thereby:—

"Within the last two years there has been a very great increase in this city in the attendance upon theatres, opera-houses, and other kindred places of amusement. In addition to the old resorts of this kind, which are all nearly every night crowded, the new splendid Broadway Theatre was opened a few evenings since, and is every evening—if we barely except Sunday evening—filled by the multitudes who rush to its more fashionable circles; and it is expected that the opera-house, building in Astor Place, will soon be ready to receive the anxious but select class, who are waiting to attend a play-house, built for the better, that is, the more dashing circles. It would be well for Christians here and elsewhere, to contrast this state of things with the condition of our city during those years in which it was favored with powerful revivals of religion. The last general revival with which we have been blessed, was during the winter of 1842–3. At that time theatres and operas were at a very low ebb. I am informed by a person who is good authority on the subject, that during that winter such places were nearly deserted; that so reduced were the numbers of play-going people, that the Park Theatre—then the most prominent and fashionable in the city—was closed for want of support, and the Chatham and Bowery theatres were obliged to reduce their price of admission to one-half the usual sum; and it was generally admitted, that the revivals then so generally prevailing throughout the city, were the cause of such a decrease in the attendance upon places of amusement. How sad the reflections when we behold the contrast presented by the multitudes who now rush to those places of immorality and wickedness!"

Yearly Meeting of the New Jersey Churches.—Long ago, when there were only two Seventh-day Baptist churches in New Jersey—one at Piscataway and one at Shiloh—a Yearly Meeting was established for the purpose of promoting acquaintance and brotherly feeling. Although there is perhaps less occasion now than there used to be for such a meeting, yet it is still continued. It was held this year at Piscataway, on sixth-day, seventh-day, and first-day last. A large number of brethren were present from the churches in the vicinity, and also several from West New Jersey, among whom were Elds. John Davis and Samuel Davison. The time was principally devoted to preaching and social intercourse, and seemed to pass very pleasantly. There is reason to hope that the interview was a profitable one, and will long be remembered on that account.

Fruits of an African Mission.—The American Missionary, for October, says that Mr. Raymond, who, since the decease of Mr. Garnick, is left alone in the Mendi mission, 'has labored with great assiduity; has preached the free and peaceful Gospel in the hearing of slave-trading and blood-thirsty chiefs; has gathered upwards of a hundred children and youth into a school, where they are taught, fed and clothed at the expense of the mission; and has been instrumental in preventing one war, abolishing the slave-trade to a great extent in Sherbro country, and diffusing the principles of peace, temperance, and Christianity throughout a large extent of territory. The British missionaries at Sierra Leone bear testimony to his zeal, intrepidity, faith, piety, and remarkable influence and success.

The Choctaw Indians.—We learn from the Christian Observer, that the blessing of God has attended the labors of the missionaries among the Choctaws during the past year. Mr. Wright, who is stationed at Wheelock, reports the addition of twenty-eight persons to the church under his care, by profession; while there are twelve or fifteen more who are expected to be admitted at the next communion. At Good Water, where Mr. Hotchkin is stationed, thirty-nine have been received into the church since January, 1847. Mr. Hotchkin says there are about as many more who have commenced a life of prayer, and who wish to make a trial of their faith in private before they make a public avowal of their attachment to Christ and his cause. At Mount Pleasant, ten persons were admitted to the church on examination in May last. It is not known how many have made a profession of religion at the other stations.

Thanksgiving for Harvest.—We like the custom which prevails in the churches of some countries, particularly England, of appointing a day to acknowledge publicly, with devout thanksgiving, the goodness of God in granting abundant harvests. We learn from one of our exchanges, that such a day has been observed to some extent this year. The Independent and Baptist churches of Leeds lately united for the purpose of giving public thanks for the rich and abundant harvest. The Bishop of Oxford has given notice that a public thanksgiving of his diocese will soon be observed. It is also said that a proclamation by order of the Queen in Council will be issued at the proper time, directing a general thanksgiving for the same blessing.

Jewish Movement.—Divine service by the Jews was celebrated for the first time on a Sunday lately at Konigsberg, in Prussia. There were about 600 Jews in the Synagogue, and more than 200 Christians, among whom were several eminent functionaries of the town, including the Director of Police, who strongly opposed the intention of the Jews to transfer the celebration of the Sabbath from Saturdays to Sundays. So says an exchange, but we know not upon what authority.

The "Bible Christians."—The United States Gazette says that the denomination calling themselves "Bible Christians," have just completed and dedicated a beautiful church edifice in Philadelphia. It is their practice to enforce, in addition to the general good bearing of its members, an entire abstinence from every species of animal food and intoxicating liquors. Some of its members have thus lived for the past forty years, and quite a number under that age have never tasted animal food.

Death of a Missionary.—The American Missionary states that Mr. Thomas Garnick, of the Kaw-Mendi Mission, Africa, died July 10, 1847, after an illness of seven weeks. He sailed from Philadelphia for Sierra Leone, the last of December, 1846, with high expectations of being made a blessing to the degraded and oppressed people of Africa. Mr. Raymond is now left alone in this mission.

Anti-Slavery Missions.—We learn from the Liberty Press, that the receipts of the Union Missionary Society will probably amount to not less than $20,000 the present year. This is an anti-slavery Missionary Society, refusing to receive the contributions of slaveholders. It has an interesting and promising mission station in Africa, and others among the emancipated slaves of the West Indies.

Eld. O. P. Hull having returned to his field of labor in Albion, Dane Co., W. T., wishes his friends to direct their letters to that place.

Revival.—A revival of religion is now in progress at Holy Spring, Miss. The Gazette of that place of the 10th ult., says: Since the revival commenced, more than ninety of our citizens have made profession of religion, and there are yet many others anxiously inquiring what they shall do to be saved. Seventy-two of those who made profession of religion, have joined the Methodist church. This great revival has spread through every portion of our country. We believe that at least one thousand persons have made a profession of religion and united themselves to the different churches in Marshall Co., within the past three months.

Jews in Africa.—The Jewish Intelligencer states that a considerable number of Jewish merchants reside and carry on an extensive traffic in Timbuctoo, the great difficulty of intercourse with which is want of water, whilst conveying goods on camels in boxes lined with lead within and covered with skins without, to preserve the contents from the excessive heat. The Timbuctoo Jews travel to Socham, a town in the Sahara desert, 36 days from Mogadore, every spring, and are dark complexioned, but not black. They use the same prayers as the Portuguese Jews, and dress like Moors, only wearing a black cap.

An Episcopal Bishop on Baptism.—Bishop Smith, of the Episcopal Church, Kentucky, in a sermon preached by him a few years since expressed himself on the subject of baptism as follows:—

"Of late the following argument has been used in certain quarters with great effect. It has been said that immersion is valid baptism. But a large body of Christians conscientiously believed that no other mode is baptism. Were the great body to yield the question they would but yield an opinion, and sacrifice a preference. But were the Baptists to yield, they would sacrifice their conscience. Why then should not all Christians agree to adopt immersion as the only mode of baptism, and thus forever remove one of the most formidable obstacles in the way of Christian union? For my own part, I must confess myself unable to discern any flaw in this most powerful Christian argument, and for one, as far as in me lies, I am ready to hold out the hand of fellowship to all Christians on this truly Christian ground."

Afflictions Multiplied.—Under this head, the N. Y. Recorder of Oct. 13, says: "In our paper of last week we mentioned the death of Mrs. Peck, wife of the Rev. John Peck, and the sickness of his sons, the Rev. Philetus B. Peck of Owego, and the Rev. Linus N. Peck of Hamilton. We have now to make the melancholy record that both these brethren have followed thus soon their departed mother. The Rev. L. N. Peck died Oct. 4, at 10 o'clock P. M., and his brother thirty hours later. We have no particulars, except that they departed in peace. They were buried on Thursday. How strange and inscrutable are the ways of Divine Providence! Who that saw father Peck and his sons at Hamilton, at the Commencement, could have imagined that he would survive them—they, young, strong, and vigorous—he, bent under the weight of years, feeble and an invalid? But thus uncertain is life. How impressive the lesson to the brethren in the ministry who survive them! Who may be summoned next, or how suddenly, is known only to Him whose servants we are. May we each be ready!"

NEGLECT OF THE SOCIAL PRINCIPLE.

The American Messenger says that too little is made of the social principle in religion. This want of our nature will seek its gratification in some way. If the gospel and its institutions do not meet it, even professed believers will seek and find questionable means of satisfying the insatiable longings for fellowship. "Free Masonry," "Odd Fellowship," "Socialism," "Association," etc., are such manifestations as the world would scarcely have seen had the church fully accomplished its mission, and provided for the intimate communion and fellowship of its members. In cities especially, are these arrangements defective. Members of the same church for years are often wholly unknown to each other, with no pains on any hand to make it otherwise. Prayer meetings have nearly the stateliness of Sabbath services. Even the parts of divine worship, like sacred praise, designed to be social, are committed to the few. The members of Christ's body cease to be "members one of another." One of the most powerful principles in the nature of man thus fails to be made subsidiary to the grand ends of its being, and is left to the control of Christless influences.

A remark of an intelligent English writer shows that this evil is not restricted to America: "Even infidelity has begun to clothe itself with the power of the social principle, and Socialism has at length become the watchward of a dangerous party in the land. It is time for Christians to exemplify their own true character. Christianity is, emphatically, socialism, founded in truth, and cemented by love. The socialism of ungodly men is a delusion, a mockery; 'no bonds can bind base natures.'"

Curious Inscription.—The Providence (R. I.) Journal says that about three miles from that city, in the town of Cranston, there is a grave-stone on which is the following unique inscription:—

"Here lies the Body of Joseph Williams, Esq.,
Son of Roger Williams,
Esq., who was the First
White Man that Came to Providence, he was Born
1644, he died au 17, 1724,
In the 81st year of his Age.

In King Philip's War he courageously went through,
And the native Indians he bravely did subdue;
And now he's gone down to the Grave, and he will be no more,
Until it Please Almighty God his Body to restore,
Into some proper Shape as he thinks fit to be,
Perhaps like a Grain of Wheat as Paul sets forth you see.
Corinthians, 1st Book, 15th Chapt., 37 v. A. B.

General Intelligence.

Fire and its Ravages.—In the last number of De Bow's Commercial Review the editor appends to an article on Fires and Firemen, from a contributor some statistical computations of the value of property annually swept away by fire. He gives a list of great fires (omitting all where the loss did not exceed $50,000) that occurred, in all parts of the world, during ten years—from 1836 to 1846: and although the list, as may well be supposed, is far from being a perfect one, it represents the total value of property annihilated to an amount of $137,362,950. Adding omissions, and the infinite number of minor conflagrations, he supposes, perhaps with justice, that it will be fair to estimate the entire loss for ten years at $575,000,000; or $27,500,000 per annum.

Of his catalogue of fires, $37,000,000 of loss—or more than one fourth of the whole—occurred in the United States,—equal to $3,700,000 a year. Allowing for unrecorded fires, and "the numerous direct and indirect losses," and adding "the expense of the fire department," &c., &c., he rates the annual loss in the United States, for the last ten years, at from eight to nine millions, and supposes that we may anticipate a future loss of from at least five to six millions of dollars a year,"—an amount sufficient for us, he says, "to carry on the railroad proposed from Lake Michigan to the Pacific Ocean, as fast as labor could urge it."

Discovery in Mississippi.—The Louisville Journal in a recent article says:—"In the south-western part of Franklin county, Miss., there is a platform or floor composed of hewn stone, neatly polished, some three feet under ground. It is about 108 feet long, and 80 feet wide. It extends due north and south, and its surface is perfectly level. The masonry is said to be equal, if not superior, to any work of modern times. The land about it is cultivated; but thirty years ago it was covered with oak and pine trees, measuring from two to three feet in diameter. It is evidently of very remote antiquity, as the Indians who reside in the neighborhood had no knowledge of its existence previous to its recent discovery. Nor is there any idea of the work, or of the people who were its builders. There is also a canal and well connected with it, but they have never been explored. A subterranean passage may be underneath. Further exploration may throw some light on its origin."

Noiseless Wheel.—Among the numerous ingenious inventions of the present day is a noiseless wheel for carriages, patented by Mr. Andrew Smith, of England, galvanized iron and wire rope manufacturer. The silent properties of this wheel are not obtained at the expense of appearances, nor by any additions which detract from the elegant appearance of the vehicle. The tire is composed of numerous layers of galvanized plate iron lapped together, and then regalvanized in the mass, and which, when running over the stones, makes no more noise than if running on a surface of lead. The nave or box of the wheel is lined with an elastic substance, which makes a perfect stuffing box, and thus prevents any noise from the axle; and on the whole must be an important addition to the comfort of omnibus and stage passengers. So says the Scientific American.

Wonderful Discovery.—Dr. Sylvester, an Italian by birth, and an eminent chemist, has discovered a mode of hardening the human body to the consistency of stone, or solid marble, which he is about to exhibit in London. His specimens have excited great astonishment. One was the head of a lady, with the hair parted and dressed, retaining its flexible properties and colors, although the surface from which it grew resembled stone—somewhat like a wax model; also a child's head, plump and dimpled as in life, and a tongue petrified, as if it had never uttered a sound. The petrifying process is said to be simple and cheap. A boquet of choice flowers—the juices first extracted by a pneumatic process—preserved their natural colors, but were as hard and rigid as if some cunning workman had carved them from Persian marble; for not only the leaves and petals were rendered stone-like, but the minute hair-formed stems were rendered coraline.

Ages of Statesmen.—Of our distinguished puplic men, John Quincy Adams, born in 1767, is the Nestor. He is 80 years of age. Henry Clay comes next, being 70 years old on the 15th of April. Martin Van Buren, R. M. Johnson, J. C. Calhoun, Lewis Cass and Daniel Webster, singularly enough, were all born in 1782, and of course are 65 years of age. Tyler is 8 years younger—born in 1790. Polk is about the same age. Dallas 2 years younger yet, born in 1793. Gen. Taylor is nearly 60. The rest of our prominent public men are generally younger by years.

If we cross the Atlantic we find a statesman in Wellington, unimpaired in intellect at the age of 78. The age of Peel corresponds with that of Gen. Taylor, as that of Lord John Russell does with that of Dallas. Brougham is the youngest of the first grade of public characters, being barely born in the last century.

The Liberty of the Press in France.—The Gazette de France announces the seizure of its number of Friday, in the following terms: "The Gazette de France was seized to-day at the post office and at the printing-house. We have been informed that two other numbers are included in the new prosecution commenced against us. One of our editors has but lately been released from prison, another has just been incarcerated, and a third is about to be prosecuted. Let nobody assert that liberty is not making progress." The Charivari announces that its number of Saturday was seized at the post office and at the office of the paper. "It is impossible for us," says the Charivari, "to explain the reason."

One thousand of Colt's Patent Revolving Rifles have been made at Hartford, for the use of the U. S. Mounted Rifle Regiment. Each rifle is made to hold six charges, which can all be fired in as many seconds; and as they can be loaded very quickly, it is expected they will prove a terribly effective instrument of war. Gen. Taylor has approved them. So says Scientific American.

SUMMARY.

In Philadelphia, on Saturday, Thomas J. Kerrison, convicted of keeping and maintaining a gambling house, his billiard saloon having been classed as such from its being proved that he permitted, and did himself, play for money with those who frequented it, was brought up for sentence. The judge used very severe language before coming to the finale of the sentence, which ordered him to pay a fine of $500, and suffer an imprisonment of three years in the Eastern Penitentiary. The next unfortunate called up was William Wonderly, convicted of selling lottery policies; he was sentenced to an imprisonment of two years, and to pay a fine of $50. The new law of Pennsylvania works well.

Judge Garnier, a highly respected and venerable citizen, and to all appearance one of the happiest of men, committed suicide by drowning himself on the 16th of September last. The reason assigned by him, as stated in his papers, was poverty—that $150 was all he had left, which was only sufficient to pay his debts—and after making out notes to all his creditors, and among them his wash-woman, he deliberately prepared for the awful act by fastening bricks to his back, inclosed in towels; he then wrapped himself in his cloak, and walked down to the river and threw himself in, securing his body by a rope tied to the wharf, that it might readily be found and interred.

We learn, says the Boston Journal, that as the clergyman connected with the Episcopal Church in Plymouth, entered, in company with three ladies, his church yesterday afternoon, he discovered two boys of some 17 or 18 years of age, each busily engaged in drinking the 'sacramental wine.' The clergyman seized the boys, one of whom is named Dyer, and locked them up in a closet, until the arrival of an officer, who committed them to jail. Some of the silver plate belonging to the church was found broken in pieces, and mutilated, preparatory to carrying it away.

Two married women of Nauvoo have recently been shot dead by their husbands, under singular and melancholy circumstances. A few weeks ago an old Revolutionary pensioner, named Hatch, who is nearly 90 years of age, but a Mormon, killed his wife by mistake in an endeavor to shoot those who were molesting his house. A few days afterwards, a Mr. Telly killed his wife by shooting her as she entered a rear door of the house at a late hour of the night, supposing her to be a man attached to a body of anti-Mormons from whom he was expecting an attack.

The Election Law now provides that any elector offering his vote, who shall have made a bet concerning any pending election, may be challenged, and his vote rejected on that ground. We caution every elector, therefore, against betting, and especially against efforts made to entrap them into a bet, with the express design of excluding their vote. Such tricks will undoubtedly be attempted.

The Philadelphia North American says that there will be sixty thousand tons of railroad iron manufactured in this country during the present year, which will be equal in quality to any imported iron. The value of this quantity, at the present selling prices, will be upward of four millions of dollars. Pennsylvania, alone, furnishes one-half of the pig iron, and more than one-half of the railroad iron made in the United States.

There was exhibited at the Mechanics' Fair in Boston, a specimen of a new style of engraving, in alto-relief, invented by Mr. J. C. Crossman, engraver, of that city, and called by him stylographic engraving. It is one of the most valuable discoveries or inventions connected with printing and engraving on wood.

It is a singular coincidence, that Gen. Scott entered Mexico on the 16th of September, the day which is celebrated throughout Mexico as the anniversary of its independence.

A Mr. J. O. Fletcher has an article in the Medical Times, to show that sugar is found in perspiration, tears, and the wax of the ears!

Edwin Baily and Joseph Buchanan, who committed an assault, with intent to kill Mr. Hotchkiss, in South Brooklyn, L. I., have been found guilty, and sentenced to the State Prison for the period of their natural lives. Mr. Hotchkiss is still totally unconscious, and it is feared his reason is dethroned forever.

Ginseng root commands a very high price in China, where it formerly (before American innovation) sold for its weight in gold. It can without doubt be made a very profitable article to American Commerce in our increasing intercourse with that mighty empire.

The Chronotype says, "The total amount of ice exported from this port during the month of September was 2,428 tons, of which 982 tons was exported to the East Indies, 360 tons to Rio Janeiro, 206 tons to Liverpool, 404 tons to other foreign ports, and the balance coastwise."

In England the present consumption of sugar may be taken at 2,000,000 tons per annum, being at the rate of 21 lbs. per head of the population, while in France it is only 8 lbs. per head.

The Wabash river and its tributaries water nearly two-thirds of all the counties of Indiana. Of eighty-eight counties in that State no less than fifty-five are watered by the Wabash river.

Applications have been made to the Grand Lodge of the United States for charters of Odd Fellows' Lodges in Oregon, Honolulu, Oahu, and the Hawaiian Islands.

The name of the democratic candidate for governor of Georgia, is George Washington Napoleon Bonaparte Towns.

It is estimated that this year's sugar crop, in Louisiana, will exceed last year's 50,000 hogsheads.

Mr. A. D. Patterson, the able editor of the Anglo American, New York, died at an early hour Saturday morning, 9th inst.

Four hundred and eleven marriage licenses were granted in Cincinnati during the quarter ending Sept. 1.

A telescopic comet was discovered by a lady of Nantucket on the morning of the 1st inst., in the Constellation Cepheus. It is now visible to the naked eye.

We have in this city, says the Detroit (Mich.) Journal, a German, about 30 years of age, who was educated in one of the German Universities. He is an excellent Latinist, a good Greek and Hebrew scholar, and speaks and writes French, Spanish, German, and English, and is an excellent mathematician. With all these accomplishments he is compelled, for want of better employment, to saw wood for a living.

A man who gave his name as J. A. Dana, stopped at Smith's stage office in Burlington, Vt., on Friday night, 1st inst., and disappeared in the morning without paying for his supper or lodging. He left a new valise, which contained two new shirts and about $500 in silver, gold, and bank bills. He was a large man and wore a white hat. He had been seen a fortnight previous in Lowell, where he stated that he was bound to Troy, N. Y.

Rev. Dr. Nott, of Union College, is recovering from a very severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. Ordinary means proving of no avail, he resorted to the Water Treatment at his residence under the care of Dr. Shew of this City, and with marked benefit. Dr. Nott, having reached four score years nearly, has generally enjoyed remarkably good health. His dietetic and other hygeinic habits have been very simple and temperate.

The Boston Journal states that a drover named Hammond, while at Brighton, had his pocket book, containing $3,000, stolen from the inside breast pocket of his coat. The ends of the bills were visible above the top of his pocket, and he had been cautioned in regard to their being so exposed. The money belonged to three individuals.

Mr. Beach has made a proposition to the receivers of the Plainfield Bank, that he will redeem all the notes of that institution, some $60,000, for which the receivers have issued certificates, upon condition that the receivers deliver up to him all the assets of the bank. Such an arrangement as this would cut off all the holders of the remaining $40,000 of bills, which have not been sent in.

It was stated by Rev. Mr. Rogers, in a recent sermon, that while the city of Boston proper originally contained but 600 acres of land, it now embraces 1300 acres, so that 700 acres have been artificially added by the spade, and most of this within comparatively a very few years.

The Pittsville Eagle says that the sum of $1,000 has recently been contributed from the Mount Holyoke Female Seminary to the cause of Foreign Missions and the American Education Society. This is an average of more than $4 for each scholar.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has decided that the Black Laws of that State, making it a crime for a mulatto or negro to emigrate to and settle within that State, without giving bonds, are unconstitutional.

The intrinsic value of the shipping, (not including steamships, steamboats nor schooners) belonging to the United States, is put down at $120,000,000 as a moderate estimate. The number of persons immediately interested, is stated, at a fair calculation, to be 1,175,000.

The highest price at which the best American flour has been sold in London this year was 54s., (nearly $13,) which is about 100 per cent. above what it was last year. At the last accounts it was about 26s.

The yellow fever has abated in New Orleans, as well for want of subjects as on account of a pleasant change in the weather. The pestilence has been more destructive this year than at any previous period.

The New Orleans Courier says that Staud Watie has offered to raise a battalion of 400 Cherokees, and that probably the war office will accept them, and send them to the frontiers to replace our regulars, which will be sent to Mexico.

The extensive Gallego Flouring Mills in Richmond, Va., were entirely destroyed by fire on Sunday. The loss was very heavy. A large number of other houses were destroyed. The whole loss was estimated at $250,000.

An effort is to be made at the coming session of Congress to secure an appropriation of $100,000, on certain conditions, for the purchase of Mt. Vernon. It is said that Mrs. Washington, the present proprietress, is willing to dispose of it.

A farmer's wife in New Connecticut, Ohio, is preparing an immense cheese for a present to Queen Victoria. With some few of her neighbors, she has procured the milk of 500 cows for one day. The production is a cheese weighing 600 lbs.

A duel was fought in Virginia, on the 1st inst., near the Canal, between Mr. Harris, a member of the North Carolina Legislature, representing Potter Co., and Mr. Yellowly. The former received a ball in his head and was killed on the spot.

M. Van Berchem, from his researches on vaccination and small pox, has come to the conclusion that among the vaccinated, the older the individual the greater is the liability to an attack of the small pox. Among the unvaccinated it is the reverse, for the younger the person the more he is liable to an attack of small pox.

A colossal bust of Juno in perfect preservation was lately discovered at Tunis by the workmen employed in excavating stone from the site of an ancient harbor. The Bey of Tunis has presented this exquisite to M. Delaporte, gerant of the general consulship of France at Tunis.

The editor of the Baltimore Farmer says the best remedy he ever tried in his family for a cough or cold, is a decoction of the leaves of the pine tree, sweetened with loaf sugar, to be freely drank warm when going to bed, and cold throughout the day.

Information from Constantinople has been officially communicated, of an intended blockade by the Sublime Porte of a part of the coast of Albania, from Previsa to the port of Durazza, in consequence of an insurrection in that province.

The Whig Young Men's Central Committee of New York City, have nominated Henry Clay for President in 1848.

Mrs. Neal, the widow of the late Joseph C. Neal, is, in future, to be the editress of the Saturday Gazette.

The St. Louis papers publish intelligence of the supposed murder, or death from starvation, of 100 emigrants from Illinois and Indiana, who had taken the southern route to Oregon. They were induced to take this, an unfrequented road, by the representations of some Oregon speculators, who wished to have them settle on their lands; and they have not been heard from since, except by a report from the Indians that a party of Oregon emigrants were killed on this route.

In the Mayhew school, Boston, on Thursday, a boy of 12 or 14 years of age, who was remonstrated with by his master for not complying with a requirement made of him, attempted to leave the school; the master followed him to the door, when the boy deliberately took from his bosom a pistol, which he aimed at him and snapped. Fortunately it missed fire—the boy's father was sent for, together with the School Committee, when the pistol was examined and found to be loaded with large shot or ball.

A lady, says the Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal, visiting at one of our first families, who was assisting in making arrangements for a wedding party, a few days since, narrowly escaped death by tasting the oil of almonds. Having uncorked the bottl eand merely touched the cork with the tip of the tongue, she was suddenly seized with violent spasms and severe pain, which continued for nearly twenty-four hours, notwithstanding the utmost efforts of the physicians.

The French nation is amazed that the American trade in ice yields nearly as much annually as the profits of France for treading the wine press. To give some idea of the importance of this new equatorial trade, a Boston house is instanced, which in a single year despatched to Asia 101 vessels laden with ice, which produced 17,000,000 florins. This, says the Presse, is almost as large a sum as that which usually accrues from one vintage of the wines of Bordeaux.

In a rencontre between Mr. John I. Johnson and Mr. John M. Elliott, in Warren Co., Va., on Sunday last, Mr. Elliott was killed by a stroke received from a fence rail! Mr. Johnson was recently a candidate for the Legislature from Clarke and Warren, and Mr. Elliott was one of the wealthiest and most influential citizens in the last named county.

Mr. Edward Mathews, formerly junior publisher of the Yankee Blade, and brother of the present editor of that paper, was murdered at Waterville, Me. His body was found in an out-house, where it was supposed to have been dragged after the murder. He had with him from $1500 to $2000, which was taken.

Geo. Jacobs, of South Boston, was accidentally shot dead in a boat while out after geese on Thursday, in company with his son and another person. Two of them fired upon a flock of geese. The deceased's gun was heavily loaded, and kicked him directly before the muzzle of the other gun, whose charge was lodged in the back of his head.

A plan is now in contemplation in Canada to connect Montreal with Lake Champlain, by a canal which, leaving the St. Lawrence at Cannawaga, would lead through a level country over a distance of only 19 miles to St. Johns, the present head of the steamboat navigation of Lake Champlain.

In Leverett, Mass., a child of Peter Hobart Jr., of Boston, cut the arteries of his arm with a scythe, but was prevented from bleeding to death, by the presence of mind of his mother, in pressing the flesh above the wound, until the doctor arrived two hours after, and took up the arteries.

An eminent French statistical writer took his station near the staircase, at a London ball, for the purpose of ascertaining the proportion of gentlemen who arranged their hair with their fingers before entering the room. He found them to average about twenty-nine out of thirty, hose who had least or most hair usually occupying most time.

The Christian Secretary says that the first Baptist preacher that proclaimed the gospel on the Island of Nantucket, was the Rev. Peter Folger, Grandfather of Benjamin Franklin.

MARRIED,

In the town of Adams, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 12th of Oct., by Rev. G. M. Langworthy, Mr. Asher M. Babcock, of Westerly, R. I., to Miss Prudence C. Cleaveland, of Adams.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 22d of Sept., by Eld. Eli S. Bailey, Mr. Clark Crandall, son of Dea. Henry Crandall, of Truxton, to Miss Samantha Newton, daughter of Winslow Newton, of Brookfield.

In West Edmeston, N. Y., on the 13th inst., by Rev. S. B. Crandall, Mr. James S. Ludington, of Mohawk Village, Herkimer Co., and Miss Mary Ann Sheldon, of the former place.

In Westerly, R. I., Oct. 10, by Eld. Daniel Coon, Mr. Clarke W. Lewis, and Miss Sarah Chapman, all of Westerly.

DIED,

In Brookfield, October 9th, Mr. Augustus Crandall, in the 66th year of his age. Brother Crandall was a worthy member of the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church of Brookfield.

In Albion, Dane Co, W. T., on the 13th of Sept., of consumption, Miss Harriet Alzina Weed, daughter of Dea. James Weed, in the 23d year of her age. Sister Weed made a public profession of religion when but nine years of age, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Amity, N. Y., and has ever been an ornament to the Christian name She removed with her parents to Albion in 1842, where, in 1843, she united with the church at its organization. During her distressing and protracted illness, she manifested a meek and quiet spirit, and died in hope of a blessed immortality. The friends are called upon deeply to mourn their loss, especially the youth of the society, who are bereft of an example of piety. O. P. H.

LETTERS.

Eli S. Bailey, Samuel Davison, Daniel Coon, G. M. Langworthy, O. P. Hull, H. H. Baker, Samuel Hunt, Geo. P. Maxson, Thomas Avery, Ephraim Maxson, G. W. Stillman, H. C. Hubbard (yes.)

RECEIPTS.

Samuel Hunt, Clarence,	$6 50	pays to vol.	5	No. 13
Lyman Pratt, "	4 50	"	5	" 13
Joel Jones, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Orrin Jones, Canada,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Maxson Rogers, New York,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Wm. Jones, "	2 00	"	5	" 13
H. C. Hubbard, Scott,	1 00	"	4	" 52
J. Barber, 3d, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
O. F. Randolph, Delhi, Ill.	1 00	"	4	" 52
John Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
John B. Davis, Sligo, O.	1 00	"	4	" 44
M. Kimpton, Metouchin, N. J.	2 00	"	5	" 42
G. Dunham, New Market, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
S. F. Randolph, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
G. W. Stillman, Condesport, Pa.	4 00	"	4	" 52
O. P. Hull, Albion, W. T.	1 00	"	4	" 44
Thomas Avery, Pequonuc, Ct.	2 00	"	4	" 52
Henry Clarke, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	"	4	" 52

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 12½; ditto, full gilt, $1 25. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

PROCLAMATION,

BY JOHN YOUNG, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

A day of Public Thanksgiving is due to Almighty God, for blessings bestowed upon the people of this State during the past year.

While a sanguinary war has been raging upon our national frontier—while the principal city of a sister State has been scourged with a pestilence that walketh at noonday, and while gaunt famine and disease afflict the fairest portion of the mother country, the State of New York presents a gladsome picture of universal happiness and prosperity. Seed time and harvest have been continued to the husbandman—the laborer and the artisan have not sought in vain for employment—the ships of the merchant have traded in peace with the nations of the earth, and plenty has crowned the efforts of all classes of society.

The blessings of free Government—the means of universal education—the security of person and property, and the supremacy of law and order, have been vouchsafed to us in an eminent degree.

For all these, and for other good gifts, we are indebted to that Providence whose bounty and protection are conferred upon all, without regard to country or condition.

I, therefore, respectfully recommend to the people of this State, to observe the 25th day of November next, as a day of Public Thanksgiving; to abstain on that day from their usual avocations, and mingle, with their thanksgivings, prayers to Heaven for the continuance of its smiles, and for its protection against famine, disease and crime.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the Privy Seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at [L. S.] the City of Albany, this eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven.
JOHN YOUNG.

By the Governor,
Henry V. Colt, Private Secretary.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing	Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	"	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	"	April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, August 3d, 1847.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the next general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

STATE—A Secretary of State, Comptroller, State Treasurer, Attorney General, State Engineer and Surveyor, Three Canal Commissioners, and Three Inspectors of State Prisons.

DISTRICT—One Senator for the Third Senate District, consisting of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Wards of the city of New York; One Senator for the Fourth Senate District, consisting of the Seventh, Tenth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Wards of the said city; One Senator for the Fifth Senate District, consisting of the Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth Wards of the said city; and One Senator for the Sixth Senate District, consisting of the Eleventh Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Eighteenth Wards of the said city.

COUNTY—Also the following officers for the said city and county, to wit:—Sixteen members of Assembly—One to be elected in each Assembly District.

Yours, respectfully,
N. S. BENTON, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 5th, 1847.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided. J. J. V. WESTERVELT,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

☞ All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See revised Statute, vol 1, chap. 6, title 3, article 3d, part 1st, page 140. Sept. 2, te.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

I SEE THEE STILL.

I rocked her in her cradle,
"And laid her in the tomb. She was the youngest;
What fireside circle hath not felt the charm
Of that sweet tie? The youngest ne'er grow old,
The fond endearments of our earliest days
We keep alive in them, and when they die,
Our youthful joys we bury with them."

I see thee still:
Remembrance, faithful to her trust,
Calls thee in beauty from the dust;
Thou comest in the morning light,
Thou'rt with me through the gloomy night;
In dreams I meet thee as of old;
Then thy soft arms my neck enfold,
And thy sweet voice is in my ear;
In every scene to memory dear,
I see thee still.

I see thee still,
In every hallowed token round;
This little ring thy finger bound,
This lock of hair thy forehead shaded,
This silken chain by thee was braided,
These flowers, all withered, now, like thee,
Sweet Sister, thou didst cull for me;
This book was thine, here didst thou read;
This picture, ah! yes, here, indeed,
I see thee still.

I see thee still:
Here was thy summer noon's retreat,
Here was thy favorite fireside seat;
This was thy chamber, here, each day,
I sat and watched thy sad decay;
Here, on this bed, thou last didst lie,
Here, on this pillow—thou didst die;
Dark hour! once more its woes unfold;
As then I saw thee, pale and cold,
I see thee still.

I see thee still:
Thou art not in the grave confined,
Death cannot chain the immortal mind;
Let earth close o'er its sacred trust,
But goodness dies not in the dust;
Thee, O my Sister, 'tis not thee,
Beneath the coffin's lid I see;
Thou to a fairer land art gone;
There, let me hope, my journey done,
To see thee still. [Boston Courier.

THE DISCONTENTED PENDULUM.

An old clock that had stood for fifty years in a farmer's kitchen without giving its owner any cause of complaint, early one summer's morning, before the family was stirring, suddenly stopped. Upon this the dial-plate (if we may credit the fable) changed countenance with alarm; the hands made a vain effort to continue their course; the wheels remained motionless with surprise; the weights hung as if dead; each member felt disposed to lay the blame on the others. At length the dial instituted a formal inquiry as to the cause of the stagnation, when hands, wheels, weights, with one voice protested their innocence.

But now a faint tick was heard below from the pendulum, who thus spoke:

"I confess myself to be the sole cause of the present stoppage; and I am willing, for the general satisfaction, to assign my reasons. The truth is that I am tired of ticking."

Upon hearing this the old clock became so enraged that it was on the very point of striking.

"Lazy wire!" exclaimed the dial-plate, holding up its hands.

"Very good!" replied the pendulum; "it is vastly easy for you, Mistress Dial, who have always, as every body knows, set yourself up above me—it is vastly easy for you, I say, to accuse other people of laziness!—you, who have had nothing to do all the days of your life but to stare people in the face, and to amuse yourself with watching all that goes on in the kitchen! Think, I beseech you, how you would like to be shut up for life in this dark closet, and to wag backward and forward, year after year, as I do."

"As to that," said the dial, "is there not a window in your house on purpose for you to look through?"

"For all that," resumed the pendulum, "it is very dark here; and, although there is a window, I dare not stop, even for an instant, to look out at it. Beside, I am really tired of my way of life; and, if you wish, I'll tell you how I took this disgust at my employment. I happened this morning to be calculating how many times I should have to tick in the course of only the next twenty-four hours; perhaps some of you above there can give me the exact sum."

The minute-hand, being quick at figures, presently replied, "Eighty-six thousand four hundred times."

"Exactly so," replied the pendulum; "well, I appeal to you all, if the very thought of this was not enough to fatigue one; and when I began to multiply the strokes of one day by those of months and years, really it is no wonder if I felt discouraged at the prospect; so, after a great deal of reasoning and hesitation, thinks I to myself, I'll stop."

The dial could scarcely keep its countenance during this harangue; but, resuming its gravity, thus replied, "Dear Mr. Pendulum, I am really astonished that such a useful, industrious person as yourself should have been overcome by this sudden action. It is true you have done a great deal of work in your time; so have we all, and are likely to do; which, although it may fatigue us to think of, the question is whether it will fatigue us to do. Would you now do me the favor to give me about a dozen strokes to illustrate my argument?"

The pendulum complied, and ticked six times in its usual pace.

"Now," resumed the dial, "may I be allowed to inquire if that exertion was at all fatiguing or disagreeable to you?"

"Not the least," replied the pendulum, "it is not of six strokes that I complain, nor of sixty, but of millions."

"Very good," replied the dial; "but recollect that, though you may think of a million of strokes in an instant, you are required to execute but one; and that, however often you may hereafter have to swing, a moment will always be given you to swing in."

"That consideration staggers me, I confess," said the pendulum.

"Then I hope," resumed the dial-plate, "we shall all immediately return to our duty, for the maids will lie in bed if we stand idling thus."

Upon this the weights, who had never been accused of light conduct, used all their influence in urging him to proceed; when, as with one consent, the wheels began to turn, the hands began to move, the pendulum began to swing, and to its credit ticked as loud as ever, while a red beam of the rising sun that streamed through a hole in the kitchen shining full upon the dial-plate, it brightened up as if nothing had been the matter.

When the farmer came down to breakfast that morning, upon looking at the clock, he declared that his watch had gained half an hour in the night.

THE CROWNED SKELETON.

Aix-la-Chapelle in Germany derives its name from the tomb of Charlemagne. He gave instructions that when he died, he should be buried in a royal position; not prostrate as slumbering dust, but seated in the attitude of a ruling monarch. He had the mausoleum erected over the sepulchre of our Saviour at Jerusalem. In a tomb within this chapel he was placed upon a throne. The Gospels, which I suppose he had often read while he was living, he would appear determined to study thoroughly after he was dead. He directed they should be laid upon his knees before him; by his side was his sword; upon his head was an imperial crown, and a royal mantle covered his lifeless shoulders.

Thus was his body placed, and thus did his body remain for about one hundred and eighty years.

One of his successors resolved he would see how Charlemagne looked, and what had become of the riches that adorned his tomb. Nearly a thousand years after Christ, the tomb was opened by the emperor Otho. The skeleton form of the body was found there, dissolved and dismembered; the various ornaments I speak of were all there too; but the frame had sunk into fragments, the bones had fallen disjointed and asunder; and there remained nothing but the ghastly skull wearing its crown still! and nothing to signify royalty but this vain pageant of death in its most hideous form!

The various relics were taken up, and are now preserved at Vienna; and they have often since been employed in the coronation of the emperors of Germany, in order to signify their greatness, and their being successors to Charlemagne. [Dr. Massie's Summer Ramble.

EXTRAORDINARY BELLS.

The largest bells in the world are, according to travelers, in Russia and China; at Nankin formerly hung four bells of such enormous size that, although not swung, but only struck with a wooden mallet, they brought down the tower, and have long lain neglected among its ruins. One of these bells is about twelve feet high, and twenty-seven and a half in circumference. It has a swelling in the middle, but does not expand much towards the rim, where it is seven inches thick; from the dimensions of this bell, its weight has been calculated at 50,000 lbs., or more than double the weight of that of Erfurt, said by father Kircher to be the greatest bell in the world. In the churches of Russia there are numerous bells, and some of them very large; one of these, in the belfry of St. Ivan's church, at Moscow, weighs 129,846 lbs. This was the largest bell known, until Boris Godunof gave to the cathedral of that city a bell weighing 288,000 lbs. This was again surpassed by the bell cast at the expense of the Empress Anne, and which weighs at the lowest estimate 432,000 lbs. This is the largest bell in the world; its height is upwards of 21 feet; circumference near the bottom more than 67 feet; greatest thickness, 23 inches. This bell is likewise on the ground; the local tradition being that the beam upon which it was suspended in the tower was accidently burnt, in 1737; this statement, however, is denied by some travelers. By its fall the bell suffered a fracture towards the bottom sufficiently large to admit a horse and chaise.

RUSSIAN BAPTISM.

It is always performed by immersion. In the houses of the rich, two tables are laid out in the drawing room by the priests; one is covered with holy images, on the other is placed an enormous silver basin, filled with water surrounded by small wax tapers. The chief priest begins by consecrating the font, and plunging a silver cross repeatedly in the water; he then takes the child, and after reciting certain prayers, undresses it completely. The process of immersion takes place twice, and so rigorously that the head must disappear under the water; the infant is then restored to its nurse, and the sacrament is finally administered. In former times, when a child had the misfortune to be born in the winter, it was plunged without pity under the ice, or into water of the same temperature. In the present day, that rigor has been relaxed by permission of the church, and warm water is substituted for the other; but the common people still adhere scrupulously to the ancient practice in all seasons. On these occasions numbers of children are baptized at the same time on the ice, and the cold often proves fatal to them. It sometimes happens, also, that a child slips through the hands of the priest, and is lost, in which case he only exclaims, "God has been pleased to take this infant to himself; hand me another;" and the people submit to their loss without a murmur, as the dispensation of Heaven.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS OF THE ASSAMESE.

Jacob served Laban as a servant or bondsman many years to obtain in marriage Leah and Rachel, who were sisters, and he was not allowed to marry the younger before the elder. So in Assam, a man may marry two sisters, but he must not marry the elder before the younger. It is not uncommon, when a man is poverty-stricken, to engage to live and work for several years for the father of the girl he wishes to marry. He is then call a Chapunea, a kind of bondsman, and is entitled to "qhat kupper," (food and clothing,) but no wages; and at the expiration of the time of servitude, if the girl does not dislike him, the marriage takes place. The man is looked on in the family as a "khanu damad," (or son-in-law,) and is treated kindly. If the girl's father is very wealthy, and he has no sons, he will sometimes select, from some equally respectable family, a husband for his daughter, and bring him up in his own house. The youth so selected is likewise called a Chapunea, and inherits the whole of his father-in-law's property. If the woman's husband dies, though she may be only eighteen years of age, she can never marry again.

Baron Rothschild drew the highest prize—$100,000—in a lottery last month, at Frankfort.

Mexican Moonlight.—"Meet me by moonlight alone" can be practicalized in Mexico with beautiful effect, we should think, judging from the following extract from an army letter which was published not long since in a Southern paper:—

"Perhaps you will not believe me when I tell you that I am writing this by moonshine—yes, the beautiful bright moonlight of Mexico. Heaven help those in the United States who think they know what moonlight is! They know nothing about it. Moonlight in Mexico is moonlight—pure, beautiful, magnificent, beyond description. It is the essence of noonday rarified. Every object stands out in bold relief, and so clear and pure is the atmosphere that the stars and the broad unclouded sky seem within reach. I have enjoyed this enchanting moonlight a hundred times while sitting with my mess in front of our tent, or sometimes we take a promenade around the camp as far as the guard will permit us; and at other times pass out and wander through the beautiful streets of the city and listen to the chatter of a thousand Mexican tongues, jabbering to one another across the streets. It is at such times that we inhale the sweet oder of the now ripening fruits that grow so plentifully in this city—such as oranges, lemons, limes, figs, dates, and almonds; and then that best of all fruit, the juicy peach, grows here to its greatest perfection. All these things combined will ever give a soldier some happy hours."

The Force of Habit.—We have all heard of the incident of the horse attached to the bread-cart in London, which at the sound of the bugle, when a troop of the queen's cavalry was passing him, rushed headlong into the ranks and ranged himself properly in line. He had been an old army horse, and knew the signal. An incident somewhat similar occurred in Baltimore not long since. A worthy milkman stopped his wagon, to which he had hitched, for the first time, a horse he had just purchased. As the custom, he rang his bell to let the neighbors know he was "about." Quick as thought, the horse started off in a circular movement, capsizing wagon, driver, and all together in admirable confusion. The secret of this movement was attributable to the fact that the horse was a blind one, and had been accustomed to the signal of the bell when he was required to start in one of the mud machines of the city, and travel in a circle. As soon as he heard the bell he was off, and thinking that the usual circle was before him, he commenced his round and completed it to the discomfiture of the milkman.

Origin of Lynch Law.—What is called Lynch Law had its origin in 1780, in a combination of the citizens of Pittsylvania, (Virginia,) entered into for the purpose of suppressing the depredations of a trained band of horse-thieves and counterfeiters, whose well-concerted schemes had bidden defiance to the ordinary laws of the land, and whose success encouraged and emboldened them in their outrages upon the community. A late number of the Southern Literary Messenger contains a copy of the Constitution, dated Sept. 22, 1780, adopted for their government in visiting the guilty offenders with summary justice, which, from its having been drawn up by Col. William Lynch, of that County, has given the name of "Lynch Law" to the summary infliction of punishment by private and unauthorized individuals ever since. The Editor says he is informed by a member of the Association, that its efforts were completely successful in arresting the ravages of the lawless miscreants against whom they were directed.

A Discovery.—About two miles from Sandusky, Ohio, on land known as the "Kerr tract," there is an ancient mound, circular at the base—about 30 feet in diameter, rising ovally to a point, which is surmounted by an oaken stump, probably originally 2 feet in diameter, which is almost totally decayed from age. A short time ago, some boys dug into the mound, and nearly under the stump, at the depth of three feet, a skeleton was found, much decayed, but portions of it in a fair degree of preservation. Near the head were found two stone hatchets and an arrow head, a stone pipe, and, far more singular, a lot of plates apparently isinglass, which are covered with lines and hieroglyphics of different and beautiful colors. The colors and workmanship betoken a more advanced and entirely different state of the arts than has been heretofore discovered in the remains of Indian tribes. Some of the plates were destroyed, but there are fifteen preserved. They are circular, oval in shape, and about 7 inches by ten in size. A pipe bowl, beautifully finished from stone, was also found. The bowl, which is nearly round, rises from a base on the bottom of which are the figures "1461."

Remarkable Antiquarian Discoveries.—Mr. W. H. Rolfe, of Sandwich, assisted by Mr. T. Wright and C. Smith, has been pursuing with considerable success the researches commenced last year among the early Anglo-Saxon graves then discovered on Osengaldown, in the isle of Thanet. During one week, there were eight graves opened, which furnished a number of curious articles of arms and personal ornaments. In one grave were discovered a male skeleton, with the skeletons of his wife, and, apparently, his daughter, evidently all three interred at the same time, and in a position which evinces the affectionate feelings of our early forefathers. They lay arm in arm, and the faces of the man and his wife were separated only by the warrior's spear. Another grave contained also skeletons of a male and female, the forehead of the former resting on his partner's cheek. On the breast of this lady was found a magnificent broach of silver-gilt set with garnets.

Virtue Embodied.—The eloquent Dr. Blair, when concluding a public discourse, in which he had discanted with his usual ability on the amiableness of virtue, gave utterance to the following apostrophe:—O virtue, if thou wert embodied, all men would love thee! His colleague, the Rev. R. Walker, attended the same pulpit in the afternoon of the same day, and, addressing the congregation, said, 'My reverend brother observed in the morning, that if virtue were embodied, all men would love her. Virtue has been embodied; but how was she treated? Did all men love her? No; she was despised and rejected of men, who, after defaming, insulting, and scourging her, led her to Calvary, where they crucified her between two thieves!'

VARIETY.

The Chinese were in possession of flue stoves in the year 1720, similar in many respects to those now in use. Bell found six kettles placed in a row, on furnaces, having a separate opening under each of them for receiving the fuel, which consisted of a few small sticks and straw. The cook, by pulling a thong, blew a pair of bellows which made all his kettles boil in a very short time. These stoves are very thin, made of cast iron, and extremely smooth both within and without. The scarcity of fuel in populous cities necessarily prompts people to continue the easiest methods of dressing their victuals and keeping themselves warm during the winter, which is in China severe for about two months.

A French paper, La Semaines, announces the invention of a steam plough, or rather a mode of digging by means of steam, from which great results are anticipated. The inventor is a young medical man, named Baraf. The paper states that one of two horse power was in operation at the residence of the maker, who was constructing another of double that power. The machine proceeds along the field, and digs the ground with the greatest precision. Two beams, furnished with five mattocks each, act successively upon the soil, loosening it to the depth of 12 or 15 inches, and pounding it as small as compost. By using only one of the beams, a tillage of the usual depth can be effected.

The captain of a Danish Ship, on a recent voyage from Santa Cruz to London, discovered an island in lat. 33 19 N. long. 42 39 W. He anchored his ship in a sandy bay, and went ashore, and while taking an observation, the crew came and told him they had discovered the body of a dead man. Proceeding to the spot he found it in a cave, in a perfect state, apparently, but dried up, with long whiskers and beard, and long yellow hair. He found also an oval box, on which some letters were inscribed, and a small boat partially constructed, which was fastened together with something, but could find no nails. The whole of these on being handled crumpled into dust.

A man ought, in his clothes, to conform something to those that he converses with, to the custom of the nation, and the fashion that is decent and general, to the occasion, and his own condition; for this is best that best suits with one's calling, and the rank we live in. And seeing that all men are not Œdipuses, to read the riddle of another man's inside, and most men judge by appearances, it behooves a man to barter for a good esteem, even from his clothes and outside. We guess the goodness of the pasture by the mantle we see it wears. [Feltham.

On the line of the Providence and Worcester railroad, there are twenty stopping places or way stations; 94 cotton mills; 307,006 spindles; 7,092 looms, making about 1,197,800 yards of cotton cloth per week; 22 woolen mills; 81 sets of woolen machinery; 4 scythe works, and 30 machine shops. The road is a fraction over 43 miles long, and will be in operation by the last of this month.

The gross circulation of bank notes in the United States about January 1st, 1830, was $61,323,898; January 1st, 1834, was $95,839,570; January 1st, 1837, $149,185,890; January 1st, 1840, $116,562,970, and on the 1st of January 1843, it had sunk to $58,563,688. Since that time it has increased, and amounted in December, 1845, to $105,552,427, and was about the same in December 1846.

Half our griefs are imaginary. Before you have recourse to arsenic, therefore, try what virtue there is in an emetic. Instead of your business being deranged, it may turn out to have been nothing but your stomach. Two-thirds of the melancholy in the market is nothing but indigestion.

The Dedham Democrat says that there is a sign at the stable of the Phœnix Hotel in that town, which reads thus: "No smoaking allowed hear." One of the steamboats had a notice—"No smoking aloud here," and a passenger justified himself for puffing his cigar, by saying that he wasn't smoking aloud, but all to himself.

On the North coast of Ireland, a gentleman saw above a hundred crows preying upon muscles. The mode of doing this was remarkable—each crow took a muscle up in the air about forty yards high, and let it fall on the stones: and thus breaking the shells got possession of the animal.

In the new Hall of the British Museum, some marble pillars have been placed which were brought over by Sir Charles Fellowes from a temple dedicated to Harpagus, general of Cyrus, 546 years before Christ—the earliest examples of Greek Art in our possession, showing that the same principle of building and working the marble was used then as now.

There is now starch made from potatoes in N. England, 22,000,000 lbs. annually. There are 160 establishments engaged in its manufacture, principally in Maine and Vermont. Much of it is shipped to England. It is used in finishing many kinds of fabrics—by confectioners, and finds its way into neat packages, with the label of Arrow Root for puddings.

The Green Bay Republican says—"Since Monday morning last, the 14th ult., the land office has been crowded at all hours of the day. The receipts of the past week we have heard estimated at over $175,000! and yet it seems as if there is to be no cessation of the entering of lands. Of course, it is a rich harvest for the register and receiver."

Col. Louis D. Wilson, of the 12th infantry, who lately died in Mexico, bequeathed to the chairman of the County Court of Edgecomb, (his native County) in North Carolina, and to his successor in office, forty thousand dollars, to be applied to the poor of said County.

A gentleman states that he saw, a short time since, an ancient copper coin, which was found upon an island at the head of Damariscotta River. It is an English piece of the size of a dollar, of about a penny in value, and is dated 1329.

Tears do not dwell long upon the cheek of youth. Rain drops fall easily from the bud, rest on the blossoms of the maturer flower, and break down that which hath lived its day.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the pses of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 19. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, OCTOBER 28, 1847. WHOLE NO. 175.

The Sabbath Recorder.

From the North British Review for August.

CHINA. [Concluded.

Drunkenness does not appear to be a prevailing vice among the Chinese. In general the people are temperate both in eating and drinking. Rice, vegetables, fish, eggs, and poultry, form the simple diet of the rural districts, though amongst the richer inhabitants of towns a considerable degree of epicurism is common. Long protracted dinners, with an absurd and hurtful profusion of dishes, are as common among the city mandarins of China as among the city aldermen and higher castes of Britain. Like us, too, they range over earth, sea, and air, for delicacies to stimulate the satiated appetite. Hence we hear of the marvelous dishes of swallows' nests, sharks' fins, and the trepang, a species of holothuria or sea-slug fished up from the Indian Ocean, and served up as a rarity at the feasts of the rich and wealthy. So generally is the country under cultivation, and such has been the density of population for many ages, that wild animals, especially game, are very rare in China. To make up for this, however, domestic animals are reared in considerable quantities, such as bullocks, sheep, pigs, fowls, and even dogs, which are admitted into the category of culinary beasts among this people. In Chusan, and probably in many other places throughout the country, young ducks are hatched in thousands by artificial heat, and then fed up for the table; and on the rivers and estuaries, cormorants are regularly trained to catch fish and bring them to their masters.

Mr. Smith thus describes his reception at a mandarin's table :—

"On Sept. 3d, I went with some friends to visit the principal Mandarin in Ning-po, usually styled the taou-tai. Due notice had been given some hours previously, and there were circumstances attending our visit, which insured a polite reception from his Excellency. We were borne in chairs along the streets to the ya-mun, or public office, in which the taou-tai was then residing. As we approached the large folding-doors, leading into the first of a number of spacious courts, a gong was struck, which was immediately answered by other gongs and a bell from within. At the same time a native piper commenced playing a noisy air, accompanied by a kind of cymbal, to do honor to us as we passed. As door opened within door, we saw signs of bustle and activity among the numerous attendants, till our Sedan-chairs were set down on a pavement at the bottom of a little flight of steps leading into a vestibule. Here the great man, Ching-ta-jin, descended to welcome us; and after a good deal of bowing and other salutations, we were conducted to a reception-hall, where we were invited to take our seats. But preliminary matters of etiquette had to be settled, which occupied some time. The taou-tai would not occupy the highest seat on the left side, the place of honor; and the members of our little party affected like humility. One pressed the other, and tried to lead him into the uppermost seat, which gentle attempt the other as gently resisted. Under ordinary circumstances this would have been fatiguing; but in the excessive heat of the summer it was doubly irksome; and matters were at last abruptly brought to a satisfactory adjustment by one of our party coolly occupying the highest seat, and thus terminating the debate. One of our friends was a fluent speaker of Chinese, and acted as our spokesman. The taoutai's cap of authority, which was ornamented with the usual knob or button of a light blue color, indicating his rank as being of the third of the nine orders of Mandarins, was now taken from his head, and handed to an attendant, who placed it in a conspicuous part of the room. Soon after, another servant came at his bidding to assist in removing his upper garment of blue silk; and as, notwithstanding the heat, we had paid his Excellency the compliment of appearing in woolen coats, we gladly availed ourselves of his invitation to put off the incumbrance, and sat during the rest of our visit in our shirt-sleeves. The room did not afford the signs of any great wealth in the proprietor, the furniture being simple and substantial, rather than elegant. A number of servants were standing outside, and sometimes, in their eagerness to see and listen, pressed around the door. A wave of the hand from their master once or twice seemed to remove them to a little distance on either side. But when he subsequently sat so as to have his back towards them, they quietly returned, and their number was increased by the addition of several others eager to satisfy their curiosity. After we had taken tea, the signs of preparation for a morning collation were apparent in the various dishes brought and set out on a table in the center of the room. On the announcement being made that all was ready, the same ceremony and delay as to precedence took place. The taou-tai took his seat at the lowest end of the table. As our meal proceeded, he reverted to former topics, especially to our literary degrees. As I had been introduced as a literary teacher, he now inquired what literary degree in my own country I had attained. My friend very inconsiderately replied that I was the same as a tsin-sze, i. e. the second of the four Chinese literary degrees, to which Ching-ta-jin had himself attained. The taou-tai then commenced congratulating me on the felicity of my lot in getting literary promotion at so early an age. He proceeded to take a strict survey of my physiognomy, and made some remarks on my personal appearance. At last, fortunately for our preservation of gravity, the conversation was led to the subject of literary examinations and degrees in China, on which he was very lengthened in his observations.

"Meanwhile we endeavored to do honor to the dishes, which in rapid succession were placed before us, our host helping us from each dish with the chop-sticks with which he himself was eating. A kind of spirit, distilled from rice, was poured out into small cups and saucers and placed before us. Deference had been paid to our foreign palates, and in addition to the usual routine of Chinese dainties, small slices of ham, beef, duck, and fowl, were served on the table. Plovers' eggs, nuts, sweetmeats, formed also portions of our repast. Our host continually watched our saucers, and replenished them from time to time with what he deemed the choicest morsels. Once or twice we ventured to act on our choice, and to taste some of the unknown dishes; but we quickly came to the decision that it was better to trust to his selection. At last we were tired with the number of dishes, which one after another made their appearance. But it was to no purpose that he was informed that we had eaten a sufficient quantity. He begged to assure us that the repast would soon be over; and our apologies for occasioning him so much expense only made him insist more rigorously on our remaining till the end. During this time an animated discussion took place on the subject of foreign customs. He again reverted to the subject of my literary degree, and inquired my family name. This was altered to suit the Chinese sounds, and written Sze-mei. He then asked my personal name, which he tried in vain to pronounce, saying it took four Chinese characters to write it. He made several ineffectual attempts to catch the sound George, changing it to Jih-ah-le-jih. At last, in despair of mastering the outlandish sounds, he ceased from the attempt, and falling back into his large chair, gave a hearty prolonged laugh. Then he inquired of my friend respecting the koo-wan, or ancient classical literature of our country. This led to his being informed of the gradual improvement of our native tongue—the comparatively recent date of English literature—the stores of ancient learning imported from Greece and Rome—the prevalence of Latin as the general medium of communication between the literati of Europe—and the different races who successively peopled Britain. To all these topics he listened with attention, bringing frequent illustrations from similar events in the history of China. He afterwards inquired about some European country, by a name which we had never before heard. On our farther listening to his pronunciation of the word, we discovered the name to be a strange combination of sounds, intended for Denmark. Afterwards the current of topics flowed to America and its twenty-six States; the separation of the United States from Britain in the last century; their common descent and language; their commercial rivalry and political emulation; the number of annual emigrants from Britain to America; the process of clearing away forests and preparing the soil for cultivation; the enterprising character of American merchants; and the political supremacy of Britain. He made some inquiries respecting the causes of emigration, and of the willingness of the British merchants to come to so distant a country as China. He continually responded, sometimes giving a hearty laugh, and not in the slightest degree affecting an appearance of gravity. He mentioned his having been formerly sent on a special mission by the Chinese Government to the country of Mongolia, and spoke of the cold temperature and the forests as probably resembling those of America.

"At length, after many unavailing attempts to rise from the table, which he as often prevented, we were enabled to make preparations for our departure. During our stay of more than an hour, he showed us the usual marks of politeness and courtesy. As his jurisdiction extended over three of the eleven departments, into which the province of Che-keang is divided, he was an officer of some consequence, and ruled a territory as large as Scotland. He was apparently about fifty-six years of age, and his manners were commanding and graceful. In spite of our remonstrance, he insisted on accompanying us to our sedans, and we took our departure with the same ceremony, and amid the same noise of piping and gongs, as greeted us on our entrance."

Throughout this populous and toiling empire, there is no seventh-day's rest or Sabbath bell to call the minds of the multitude from their gross and worldly pursuits, and elevate them to Heaven. New-year's-day is observed as a holiday, and they have frequent festivals in honor of their ancestors, and of their idols, when feasts are spread out either in temples or in the streets, or in groves and gardens. The abundant viands, after being laid out and offered to the manes of their kindred, are then feasted on by the assembled company.

Mr. Smith thus describes a new-year's festival at Amoy :—

"Jan. 26th.—This being the last day of the Chinese year, busy preparations were in progress for terminating business, for laying in a stock of provisions, and for celebrating the superstitious observances of the evening. In all directions companies of cooly-bearers might be seen carrying large packages of new-year presents to the friends of their master. In the various houses which we visited after sunset, the head of the establishment, attended by his sons or his partners, was to be observed balancing his mercantile accounts, and settling the debts of the year. So punctilious are the Chinese in the observance of this commendable practice, that they say they could not enjoy the festive occasion, nor sleep during the night, unless they had previously relieved their mind of this burden. The swan-pwan, or counting-board, was in constant use; and when the business seemed wellnigh terminated, and the books were about to be closed, a neighbor would hurry into the shop, and pecuniary transactions would again for a season be renewed. While these important matters were in progress, the family were engaged in burning gilt paper, with the occasional discharge of fire-works, and in making preparations for the peculiar annual custom named hwui loo, or 'surrounding the furnace.' This is performed by the members of each family sitting down to a substantial supper, with a pan of charcoal placed under the table in the center of the party. The only explanation which they gave of this odd custom was, that fire is the most potent of the elements; and hence, probably, they derived a notion of its efficacy in averting evil, or in strengthening the bonds of family union. The women observed this custom in an inner room by themselves; while the master of the house, with his sons and his hired assistants, sat down in an outer room. In one of the families, in which we were invited to remain in order to view the detailed observances of the occasion, the proprietor, a man apparently of some little wealth, sat down with his assistants, his younger son, and two little grandsons. The eldest son, a youth of about nineteen, sat near us, attending to our wants, but without partaking of the feast himself. Every minute he was on his legs, attending to the beckoning motions of his father, on whom he waited without the least appearance of its being esteemed unusual. At one time he brought a spoon, or a pair of chop-sticks; at another time he fetched a paper-napkin for his father's use, or re-filled his glass with samshoo. The old gentleman, after a short time, became silent and drowsy. But the rest of the party meanwhile increased in mirth, as they rapidly consumed the good fare placed before them. The conversation became increasingly animated, and some of the women soon entered at the farther end, and joined in the subjects of amusement. These were the secondary wives of the household, the proper wife and the daughter-in-law being never permitted to mingle in the free unrestrained conversation with strangers, which is sometimes allowed in the inferior class of female domestics. Great civility was shown to us, but we declined to partake of the feast. It was very melancholy to witness the habit of reckless lying, which manifested itself so frequently in their replies; both the old man and son showing not the least compunction or sense of shame in telling flagrant falsehoods whenever it suited their purpose. In reply to our question about one of the women present, the old man said, first, that she was an acquaintance; then, shortly after, that she was his daughter-in-law; and, at last, the plain truth came out, that she was one of his secondary wives. Not the slightest jealousy appeared to be cherished in regard to the latter class of wives, though the mistress of the family did not once make her appearance. This lower class of women are generally purchased from poor parents as domestic servants, with the liberty of degrading them to the rank of inferior wives, which practice is generally prevalent, and is considered, even by their sages, to be strictly in accordance with moral rectitude, if the proper wife has given birth to no son. The offspring of both classes of wives are considered legitimate, although the sons of concubines, in inheriting the patrimony, receive only half as much as the son of the proper wife, or mistress of the household.

"The supper being ended, they next prepared for burning the small wooden frames of the lamps, which are generally kept burning day and night in the dark interior of their houses. From the ashes which remain, they profess to derive means of ascertaining the exact period of the rainy and dry seasons of the coming year; the knowledge of which is very important in a land where famine often exposes so many thousands to the danger of starvation, from the destruction of their crops. Three little frames of lamps were brought, and placed ready for lighting on the pavement. The eldest son went forth into the street, and discharged some crackers, to drive away the evil spirits, while some of the domestics folded up about a bushel of gold and silver paper into the shape of lumps of silver. The eldest son returned and set fire to the materials, and in about ten minutes the whole was consumed to ashes. The live embers were then carefully distributed into twelve little heaps, answering to the twelve months of the year. They were then anxiously watched, the heap which first burned out showing the most rainy month, and that which last burnt out indicating the month in which there would be most sunshine and least rain. Particular attention was directed to the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh months, as the rain, if excessive in those months, would cause mildew and blight of the harvest. Acclamations of joy arose, as the second heap first died out, and predicted the greatest quantity of rain in the month when it would be most seasonable and least injurious. The fifth month was to be clear weather and without rain. The sixth and seventh heaps, as the partially-consumed embers were left half red-hot, and half black, denoted that there would be partly fine and partly rainy weather in the corresponding months. The result of the experiment seemed to give the assembled party great satisfaction, which was only slightly interrupted by our asking whether the next neighbor's heaps of consumed embers would coincide in the favorable prediction. To this they replied by begging us to mark the result in the course of the year; and also by saying that they had nothing to do with their neighbor's house. The samshoo now passed around, and we left them to prolong their festivities for an hour or two, when they retired to rest, till the booming of the midnight watch-gun roused them from their slumbers, and they hastily rose to offer each other their new-year's congratulations, and to renew their feasting.

"The next morning the city authorities commemorated the new-year, by assembling in a body, at dawn of day, and going forth in procession to an imperial temple in the suburb outside the north gate. There they made nine ko-tow, or knockings of the head on the ground before a large yellow screen, which, for the occasion, occupied the place of imperial royalty. This custom is renewed also on the emperor's birth-day, and denotes the most decided act of submission. It was this ceremony which the imperial officers tried in vain to extort from former British ambassadors, as a token of vassalage."

That entire seclusion of females from all intercourse with strangers, which former accounts led us to believe in, appears to have been exaggerated. In consequence of the practice of polygamy, and other causes, females have not attained that equality in the estimation of the other sex which prevails in Christian Europe; still they appear to enjoy a considerable degree of liberty and influence in their families. Any man in China may have as many wives as he chooses, but the number is generally regulated by a prudent regard to circumstances and station of life. The marriage ceremony is a very simple one, and is entirely of a civil nature, religion having nothing to do with the contract. Filial piety and affection is very strong among this people, and is cherished long after the decease of parents and relatives. Ancestral tablets are kept in their houses and ranged in the temples, and great care is taken in embellishing, and frequent visits are made to, the graves of their kindred. There are generally no fixed places for the interment of the members of a community, but each individual or family selects the site of their grave, according to their fancy. The sides of hills, and the most beautiful spots in valleys are thus often chosen, or gardens or groves adjoining their own residences. Their graves are generally planted with the choicest flowers. A pleasing domestic scene is thus described by Mr. Smith :—

"The wife came out after a little time, and having modestly paid her respects at a distance, soon retired into an inner room. The old mother was, however, more officious, and brought out her two young grand-children, smartly attired. She seemed to be the presiding authority in the family; and it was pleasing to observe the extreme deference universally paid to this elderly class of females. All the inmates of each family appeared to be united in the closest bonds, and to bring together their earnings to a common fund, from which they defrayed the expenses of supplying their daily wants. The old lady of the household acted in the capacity of nurse, housekeeper, and adviser, and exercised over the members of the family a general control, which was never resisted. Her word was law, and her influence appeared to be paramount. The teacher was a poor man, earning only six dollars a month from tuition. He seemed, however, contented; and the old lady especially thanked my companion for his kindness to her son. When a grandmother dies, the wife then comes into her full share of influence, and the position which she holds in the family circle presents the social condition of females in China, as an anomalous spectacle of mingled degradation and independence."—P. 414.

The Chinese afford a striking moral spectacle among nations. The civilization of many thousand years has done its utmost for them. It has tamed and subdued the fierce passions, and introduced all those domestic arts which tend to make life agreeable; while the elements of education have been very generally diffused, and a mild and peaceful philosophy, not devoid of the general precepts of morality, has been engrafted in the minds of the people; yet nowhere is public and private virtue at a lower ebb. This assertion is not made with regard to any particular locality, or any one grade, but applies to the whole mass of society, from the highest official down to the lowest member of the community. It shows the effect of a utilitarian philosophy, and a moral code of expediency, without the element of some higher and nobler aim to guide and direct the groveling and ever-wavering mind. Thus, for instance, Confucius teaches, that speaking the truth is a right and proper thing; but then he allows that children, on some occasions, may tell a lie for the good of their parents. Once admit a qualification of this kind, and a parent may think it no great harm to tell a lie for his own benefit, and thus the tide of falsehood flows abroad. No doubt, Confucius holds it a very detrimental thing for society, that one person should murder another; but then some zealous advocate of the "greatest happiness principle" may discover, that by cutting off in the bud—that is, by simply murdering one-half of his babes, he will have a larger support for himself and the survivors. In short, we have exemplified here the result of all those delusive speculations which would teach men to live for their mere appetites and pleasures alone, instead of living for another and a higher state of existence.

In many respects China, as now situated, holds out a most inviting field for missionary labor. The Government has granted a full religious toleration. Missionaries of all denominations have access to the five free cities stipulated in the treaty of peace with Britain. One written language is common to the whole of this immense and populous empire, and already more than one complete translation of the Scriptures has been made into this language. The educated portion of the people are fond of reading, and receive with great eagerness books and tracts circulated amongst them. This desire of information exists among the higher mandarins, as well as among the lowest class of literati. The Chinese intellect is by no means deficient in acuteness and sound common-sense; and the existing religions having but slender hold of their minds, they are but little preöccupied with or prejudiced in favor of any particular doctrines. On the other hand, their temperaments are cold, worldly, and unexcitable. Yet not a few have listened to and become converts to the Christian faith; and He who hath destined this faith ultimately to prevail throughout all the earth, can open up and quicken the hearts even of the coldest and most sceptical.

The first Christian missions to China were undertaken by the Jesuits, at the dawn of the Protestant Reformation in Europe. They met with various success, were sometimes tolerated, and sometimes persecuted, according to the dispositions of the reigning monarchs. At present there are 170 Roman Catholic missionaries in the empire, and they are said to have about 200,000 adherents. But Mr. Medhurst observes that there is nothing in the Catholic worship, or in the character of the priests, calculated to give the Chinese a very exalted idea of Christianity. In the former, they witness graven or molten images, processions, tinkling of bells, candles, and incense, exactly resembling their own religious rites, and, in the latter, a number of ignorant and idle monks, professing celibacy, but with indifferent moral characters, shaving their heads and counting beads very much after the fashion of the Budhist priests. A few Catholic missionaries still make converts of the lowest and poorest Chinese, who occasionally appear at the churches, and receive, each of them, a small donation of rice, for which service they are sometimes called, in Portuguese, "Rice Christians." The first Protestant mission to China was sent out by the London Missionary Society in the year 1807, and amongst the earliest missionaries was the celebrated Dr. Morrison, who, after a labor of ten years, succeeded in mastering the Chinese language, so as to compose a dictionary of it, and a translation of the Scriptures into the Chinese tongue. Within the last few years a great impulse has been given to missionary enterprise in China. Medical missionaries, both from Britain and America, have gone out, and hospitals have been established in Canton, Shang-hai, and some of the other cities, where relief has been afforded to many thousand native patients; and every opportunity has been taken, at the same time, of circulating tracts and expounding the doctrines of Christianity. These medical hospitals are highly prized by the Chinese. The art of medicine is at a very low ebb with them, and the gratuitous relief so extensively afforded, has been duly appreciated by their naturally kind dispositions, and has tended much to soften the asperities arising out of a national defeat. According to a list given by Mr. Smith, there are at present forty-four missionaries in the different towns along the coast; and others are on their way, both from England and America.

THE PIOUS FAMILY.

Soon after the surrender of Copenhagen to the English, in the year 1807, detachments of soldiers were for a time stationed in the surrounding villages. It happened one day that three soldiers belonging to the Highland regiment, were sent to forage among the neighboring farm-houses. They went to several but found them stripped and deserted. At length they came to a large garden, or orchard, full of apple-trees bending under the weight of fruit. They entered by a gate and followed a path which brought them to a neat farm-house. Every thing without bespoke a quietness and security; but as they entered by the front door the mistress of the house and her children ran screaming out of the back door. The interior of the house presented an appearance of order and comfort superior to what might be expected from people in their station, and from the habits of the country. A watch hung by the side of the fire-place, and a neat book-case, well filled, attracted the attention of the elder soldier. He took down a book; it was written in a language unknown to him, but the name of Jesus Christ was legible on every page. At this moment the master of the house entered by the door through which his wife and children had just fled. One of the soldiers, by threatening signs, demanded provisions; the man stood firm and undaunted, but shook his head. The soldier who held the book approached him, and pointing to the name of Jesus Christ, laid his hand upon his heart and looked up to heaven. Instantly the farmer grasped his hand, shook it vehemently, and then ran out of the room. He soon returned with his wife and children, laden with milk, eggs, bacon, &c., which he freely tendered; and when money was offered in return it was at first refused. But as two of the soldiers were pious men, they, much to the chagrin of their companion (who swore grievously he would never forage with them again) insisted upon paying for all they took. When taking leave the pious soldiers intimated to the farmer that it would be well for him to secrete his watch; but by most significant signs he gave them to understand that he feared no evil, for his trust was in God, and that though his neighbors on the right hand and on the left, had fled from their habitations, and by the foraging parties had lost what they could not remove, not a hair of his head had been injured, nor had he even lost an apple from his trees. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." [Suddard's British Pulpit.

THE ROCKS OF CALVARY.—In Fleming's Christology, it is stated that an unbeliever visiting the sacred places of Palestine, was shown the cliffs of Mount Calvary. Examining them narrowly and critically, he turned in amazement to his fellow travelers, and said, "I have long been a student of nature, and I am sure the clefts and the rents in this rock were never done by nature, or an earthquake; for, by such a concussion, the rock must have split according to the veins, and where it was weakest in the adhesion of parts; for this," said he, "I have observed to have been done in other rocks when separated or broken after an earthquake; and reason tells me it must always be so. But it is quite otherwise here; for the rock is split athwart and across the veins, in a most strange, and preternatural manner; and therefore," said he, "I thank God that I came hither to see the standing monument of a miraculous power by which God gives evidence to this day of the divinity of Christ."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 28, 1847.

PROTESTANT DENIAL OF HUMAN AUTHORITY.

The right of any man or body of men to compel the assent of others to a particular religious creed, is almost unanimously denied among Protestants; and this they generally regard as equivalent to a denial of all human authority in matters of faith. But there is a point in which even strenuous Protestants practically acknowledge that same authority which in most points they are so ready to deny. It is when what is called "general and respectable opinion" is urged in justification of existing practices—a thing of every-day occurrence, particularly in discussions with the advocates of unpopular religious doctrines or duties. There can be no doubt, that in the examination of any doctrine, some importance may properly be attached to the question how generally it is believed, since what all are agreed upon is more likely to be true than what none are agreed upon. Yet to allow this to have a controlling influence over us, and to plead it as conclusive evidence of the correctness of a doctrine, is not only contrary to true Protestantism, but is in a high degree unreasonable. Human authority must always be fallible, because man is a fallible being. His powers of mind do not enable him to see the length and breadth of any subject at once. Objects which were exceedingly dim at a distance, become very distinct as they are approached. So the opinions which are formed on the first presentation of a subject are generally obscure, and subsequent light either confirms them or proves them to have been incorrect. Hence it not unfrequently happens, that the opinions entertained by an individual at the present time, differ very widely from those which he entertained a few years ago. What folly, with such facts before us, to talk of yielding implicitly to human authority in matters of faith.

The acknowledgment of human authority is a bar to free inquiry and real progress. The number of persons is very small who will tax their own powers of investigation, after heartily acknowledging the authority of others over their faith. It is generally found, therefore, that in those countries, and under those religious systems, where a great deal is made of the authority of man, free and thorough investigation in proportionally rare. And where investigation is rare, progress is out of the question. Not only theology, but popular education and all the sciences, stand still. The few persons who are looked up to as oracles, become exceedingly dogmatical, and those who come under their influence catch the same spirit, insist upon the correctness of their opinions, and would gladly compel all who differ from them to acknowledge their correctness.

Perhaps there is no point where Protestants in this country are more in the habit of pleading human authority, than in relation to the change of the Sabbath. The want of explicit divine authority for the change is frankly acknowledged by many who advocate the observance of the first day of the week. When pressed with the inconsistency of doing what can not be justified by an appeal to the Word of God, they begin to talk about the practice of the early Christians, the great number of good men who have lived and died in the observance of the first day, and the uncharitableness of supposing that all these good men were in the wrong. Now it is very easy to show, from the history of the matter, that a great proportion of these men to whose examples reference is made, never observed or advocated the observance of the first day as the Sabbath; and hence, that it is abusing them to plead their practice in justification of the opinions now entertained. But waving this, and granting, for argument's sake, that they really believed it to be the Sabbath, what does all that amount to? Just nothing at all, in the estimation of a consistent Protestant, who denies all human authority in matters of faith. Their authority is worth nothing, unless it agrees with divine authority. But in this case, instead of agreeing with such authority, it is in direct opposition to the divine precept, "The seventh-day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." In such circumstances, to plead the examples of good men, is to take a stand upon Papistical ground, and expose one to the just charge of belieing Protestant principles. This is well understood by intelligent Romanists. It is only a few days since, that the Catholic Bishop of New York, Hughes, in a sermon on an extraordinary occasion, which drew together a large number of Catholics and Protestants, took this ground, and boldly charged all Protestants who observe the first day of the week as the Sabbath with practically acknowledging the distinguishing principle of Popery, that human authority is to be followed in religious matters. Similar charges are frequently preferred. It is time for Protestants to take warning. If they would have their efforts to remove Popery prove effectual, they must not so far symbolize with it as to have the circumstance repeatedly thrown back upon them, when they are unable to answer a word. Let them consistently carry out their distinguishing principle of discarding human authority, and implicitly following divine authority; then, and then only, will they have nothing to fear.

Anxiety to obtain the Scriptures.—Mr. Stoddard, in the American Messenger, relates a beautiful incident, illustrative of the zeal of the Nestorian scholars to obtain the New Testament. As it is sold for about a dollar a copy, and the pupils have no ready means of procuring such a sum, the missionaries proposed to them that they should commit the Scripture proofs in a manual of Biblical Theology, amounting to about 1,200, promising to each one who should do so a copy of the New Testament. They applied themselves with great diligence to the task; many rose before daylight, and retired late, to secure the utmost possible time for study. The more intelligent advanced at the rate of 400 verses a week, and in about three weeks the missionaries presented each of them with a copy of the New Testament, which they received with tears of joy. But a few of the whole school remained at the expiration of two months who had not completed the task.

STATE LAWS IN REFERENCE TO THE SABBATH.

The following extracts have been carefully copied from the Statute-books of the several States referred to, for the purpose of showing the exact state of the civil law touching the rights of the citizens of this nation who observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath of Jehovah. The subject is constantly acquiring interest and magnitude from the increasing numbers who dissent from the popular notion of a divine sanctity being attached to the observance of the first day of the week, under the pretence of its being the Christian Sabbath. It is therefore of much importance that their true character and bearing should be thoroughly known. Three things in particular require attention respecting them: 1st. Their very general adoption by State authorities. 2d. Their palpable opposition, in spirit and character, to a free government based upon the Constitution of the United States. 3d. The palpable contradiction of their own pretences, as well as of the Constitution of the United States, in declaring secular business done on Sunday to be vice and immorality, and then passing exemptions in favor of the officers of the United States government, and in favor of the observers of the seventh day of the week. It is thus that our legislators are as gods, and virtually say, "I create the good, and I create the evil." They assume to make virtue and to make vice.

It is to be observed, that in several of the States, as in New Jersey, special provision is made for excepting from the prohibitions and penalties of the Sunday Statutes, all carriers of the United States' mail, and the postmasters; and in all other States, it is understood that they are excepted by the laws of the United States. We have not therefore set them down here. Neither have we quoted any more of each State Statue than is necessary to show the character and spirit of the law. It ought, however, to be known, that the State of New Jersey caps the climax of all these unconstitutional laws, by declaring that any conviction had by her Sunday Statute, shall not be appealed by certiorari to the Supreme Court! It may farther be observed, that the penalty for offences against the Sunday laws is usually three or four dollars, or one week's imprisonment, for every offence. Farther, as the statutes are very much alike, a single example is sufficient for our present purpose. These laws exist in every State in the Union except Louisiana, which has no Sunday laws. We select New Hampshire for example.

"Sect. 1st. Be it enacted," &c., "That no tradesman, artificer, or any other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any labor, business, or work, of their secular callings, (works of necessity and mercy only excepted) . . . . on the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's day, or any part thereof.

"Sect. 2d. And be it farther enacted, That no person shall travel on the Lord's day between sunrising and sunsetting, unless from necessity, or to attend public worship, visit the sick, or do some office of charity, on penalty of," &c.

This was passed in 1799. June 22d, 1814, the Legislature, in commenting on the second section, say:

"No license from a Justice of the Peace for traveling on Sunday, will avail on behalf of any traveler, or carrier, with any team or carriage of burthen, or of any traveler in the style and capacity of a drover, with any horses, cattle, or other beasts; but all such licenses shall be utterly void."

In most of the States, all games, pastimes, amusements, recreations, sports, fishing, hunting, and visiting, are forbidden. Also the frequenting of places of public resort, except for moral and religious instruction, is prohibited. In addition, these things are usually classed with drunkenness, swearing, blasphemy, and lewdness, and termed vice and immorality. To these prohibitions, censures, and penalties, there are no provisionary exemptions for Jews or observers of the seventh day, in either of the following States: New Hampshire, Vermont, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Alabama, North Carolina, South Carolina, Mississippi, or Massachusetts Florida, Texas, and Iowa, are to us unknown. Although neither the States of Virginia nor South Carolina contain any statuory exceptions in favor of Sabbath-keepers, yet the Courts of Richmond, Va., and Charleston, S. C., have decided, that the State Constitutions guarantee protection to the Sabbath-keeper in his civil rights on the first day of the week.

Legislative Acts in favor of Sabbatarians.

Laws of Rhode Island, passed 1670, 1750, 1784, 1798, page 678, sect. 4th—"Be it enacted, That all the professors of the Sabbatarian faith, or Jewish religion, throughout this State, and such others as shall be owned and acknowledged by any other church or society of said respective professions, as members of or belonging to such church or society, shall be permitted to labor in their respective vocations on the first day of the week; and that they shall have liberty quietly and peaceably to pass and repass on foot or on horseback about their ordinary business, any thing herein to the contrary notwithstanding. Provided always, that this act shall not extend to grant any liberty of opening shops or stores on the said day, for the purpose of trade and merchandize, nor to the lading, unlading, or fitting out of vessels, nor to the working at the smith's business, or any other mechanical trade, in any compact place, except the compact villages of Westerly and Hopkinton, nor to the drawing of seines, or fishing or fowling in any manner, in public places, and out of their own possessions. And in case any dispute shall arise respecting the persons entitled to the benefit of this Act, and who shall be exempt thereby,

Sect. 5. Be it enacted, That in all such cases, a certificate from a regular pastor or priest of any of the aforesaid churches or societies, or from any three of the standing members of such church or society, declaring the person or persons claiming the exemption aforesaid to be a member or members of, or owned by or belonging to, such church or society, shall be received as full and conclusive evidence of the fact.

Statute Laws of Connecticut, page 509, Sect. 9—"No person, who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties of this Act, for performing secular business or labor on the Lord's day, or first day of the week, provided he disturbs no other person while attending the duties of public worship."

Revised Statutes of the State of New York, page 676, vol. I., Sect. 70. "Unless done by some person who uniformly keeps the last day of the week, called Saturday, as holy time, and does not labor or work on that day, and whose labor shall not disturb other persons in their observance of the first day of the week as holy time."

Revised Statutes of the State of Illinois, page 177, Sect. 145. "The preceding section shall not be construed to prevent the due exercise of the rights of conscience by any person who may think proper to keep any other day as a Sabbath than the first day of the week."

Revised Statutes of the State of Indiana, page 985, Sect. 123. "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect such as conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath."

Revised Statutes of the State of Michigan, page 210, Sect. 7. "No person who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as a Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties of this chapter, for performing secular business or labor on the said first day of the week, provided he disturbs no other person."

Laws of the State of Ohio, page 161, Sect. 1. "Provided, nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to those who conscientiously do observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath."

Revised Statutes of the State of Maine, page 687, Sect. 30. "No person who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties for performing secular business and labor on the Lord's day, or first day of the week; provided he disturbs no other person."

The Revised Statutes of the State of New Jersey give every observer of the seventh day liberty to labor on his own farm or in his own work-shop; nothing more.

Revised Statutes of the State of Arkansas, page 276, Sect. 3. "Persons who are members of any religious society, who observe as a Sabbath any other day of the week than the Christian Sabbath or Sunday, shall not be subject to the penalties of this Act, so that they observe one day in seven, agreeable to the observance of their church or society.

Statutes of Wisconsin, page 368, Sect. 23. "No person who conscientiously believes that the seventh, or any other day of the week, ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and who actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to the penalties of the twenty-second section of this Act, for performing secular business or labor on the Lord's day, or first day of the week, unless he wilfully disturbs some other person."

Statute Laws of Kentucky, page 1276, Sect. 36. "Provided, however, that no person who is a member of any religious society, who observes as a Sabbath any other day of the week than Sunday, or the Christian Sabbath, shall be liable to the penalty hereby incurred for a breach of the Sabbath; so that they observe one day in seven, agreeable to the regulations aforesaid."

Missouri Revised Statutes, page 404, Sect. 32. "The last section shall not extend to any person who is a member of a religious society, by whom any other than the first day of the week is observed as a Sabbath, so that he observes such Sabbath." S. D.

Sympathy for Mr. Campbell.—One of our exchanges says that the students of Bethany (Va.) College have held an indignation meeting and passed a series of resolutions relating to the imprisonment in Scotland, on a charge of libel, of Rev. Alexander Campbell, the President of the Institution. They fully approve of his conduct and condemn the course of his opponents. The difficulty originated in the published views of Mr. Campbell on the subject of slavery, which some of the people of Scotland thought should exclude him from religious fellowship.

Wm. Lloyd Garrison, editor of the Liberator, has been dangerously sick at Cleveland, Ohio, for several weeks past. He had been on a lecturing tour through Pennsylvania and Ohio, until he was taken with a brain fever. On the 15th inst., though in a feeble condition, he was able to sit up, and was thought to be recovering.

NEWS FROM CHINA.

The last English steamer brought intelligence from China to the 25th of July. It is generally of a peaceful complexion, though not of any very great or particular interest. The most profound tranquillity reigns throughout Punjaub, and the Durbar has just proclaimed the abolition of suttee and infanticide throughout their dominions. Labor at public works on the Sunday has been forbidden.

Hon. Alexander Everett, the American Minister, died at Canton, on the 29th of June, aged about 55 years. He was a brother of Hon. Edward Everett, and a man of extensive erudition and marked abilities. He commenced his diplomatic career as Secretary of Legation to St. Petersburgh, at the time John Quincy Adams was Minister; and when Mr. Adams became President he made Mr. E. Minister to Spain. Mr. Everett has left two volumes of miscellaneous writings, which will be a lasting memorial of his talents both as a poet and the master of a clear vigorous prose style.

At Canton, on the 7th of July, Rev. Samuel Cornelius Clopton, died after an illness of fever of about ten days, aged 31 years. He was a missionary from the Foreign Board of the Southern Baptist Convention of the United States.

At Canton, on the evening of the 25th of May, the Rev. Mr. Roberts, missionary from the Southern Baptists of this country, had his habitation destroyed by the people, and every thing that he possessed in his house stolen, including his clothes, caps, and other articles. On the 27th of May he prevailed, by a petition, on the magistrate to seize eleven robbers and examine and punish them, and also to recover some of the stolen goods.

American Tract Society.—A statement of the affairs of this Society for the half year, which closed on the 1st of October, has just been published. It seems that eighty-two colporteurs were commissioned with a view to permanency—making two hundred and three in the regular service. Besides these, ninety-two students, connected with seventeen theological seminaries and colleges, have been employed for their vacations, from one to six months. Nearly every State and Territory, and class of population, has received attention. The German, French, Welsh, Irish, and Norwegian, as well as the American population, have been visited by men speaking and circulating books in their several tongues. The receipts during six months, have been, in donations $40,970; for publications $50,976; total $91,946. The amount of publications sent from the General Depository during the same time was $101,725, exceeding the issues of any previous half year. The present indebtedness of the Society, principally for printing paper, is $29,340. It is estimated that an average of $20,000 a month will be needed for the rest of the year to keep the establishment in operation, without paying up its debt. Probably one half of this will be realized from sales, leaving $60,000, or an average of $10,000 a month, to be supplied by donations.

Mission to Burmah.—The Alliance and Visitor says that in a single year (1844) more than two thousand Karens were added to the churches connected with the Arracan mission; and even during the last year, when so few conversions have taken place in our land, more than twelve hundred Karens have been numbered among the trophies of divine grace. It is estimated that ten thousand of that recently benighted people have begun to live for the glory of their Lord; half of that number have been received into the mission churches; forty of these converts have commenced a regular course of education for the Christian ministry; the New Testament, part of the Old Testament, and numerous tracts, have been translated and published in the Karen language, which has been reduced to writing by our missionaries; and thus does Jehovah animate us with the assurance that he is more ready to answer our prayers than we are to offer them, and that he will ever aid us in our endeavors to improve our race.

Baptist Missions.—The Macedonian for October says that the receipts of the Missionary Union during the six months ending with September were $35,328, being less by $10,173 than were received in the corresponding months of last year. Should the treasury continue to receive at the same diminished retrograding the last six months of the year, its debt, unless violent retrenchment in the expenditures should be practiced, will be swelled by the first of April next from $34,835 to more than $50,000. The annual expenses of the Union are over $90,000; and in order to meet its engagements, it ought to receive $60,000 during the coming six months.

Encouraging Change.—A learned antiquary, who died in 1613, estimated that in his time Christians possessed nearly a sixth part of the known inhabited earth; Mohammedans, a fifth part; and idolaters two-thirds, or a little less. The proportions have been greatly changed in 250 years. According to the best recent estimate, Christians, nominal and real, are nearly one-third; Mohammedans, about one-eighth, and Pagans less than one-half of the population of the globe. Christianity alone is decidedly in the ascendant, a most encouraging fact to the friends of missions.

Shakers and Bibles.—The Boston Traveler says that the Shakers, not long since, called on the Bible Agent at Concord, N. H., (Dr. Chadburn) for four dozen Bibles. Surprised and delighted, the Agent inquired, "How is this? I thought the Shakers in Canterbury did not allow the Bible among their members." "Nay," said the Shakers, "we do now. The Millerites that joined us last fall want Sunday Schools, and Bibles to use in them. How many can thee give us?" "You are able to pay," said the Agent, "and we can not give them all; but if you pay for three dozen, I will throw in one dozen more." "It is well," said the Shakers. It seems that about fifty Millerites, having run through their property, went last fall to the Shakers.

Gone over to Rome.—The Philadelphia Sun says that Rev. George Allen, A. M., a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church, renounced the ministry a few days ago and publicly conformed to the Roman Catholic communion. He was received into the bosom of that church with the usual pomp and solemnity, and partook of the first sacrament at the altar of St. John's Cathedral. Professor Allen was for many years President of Newark College, Delaware, and presided over its affairs with distinguished ability. For the last two years he has been connected with the University of Pennsylvania, and is at this time Professor of Latin and Greek, and Secretary of the Faculty.

The Union Magazine for November is received. From a hasty perusal of it, we conclude that the articles generally equal those of previous numbers. The engravings are real gems. The first, "Steps to Ruin," is a representation, true to life, of a company of youngsters playing at cards on a barrel in the barn, while through an open window the church is seen in the distance, and the congregation gathering. The second, called "The Novel Reader," represents the kitchen of a mechanic on his return from work at a quarter past twelve o'clock, when he finds his wife absorbed in a novel, with the unwashed breakfast dishes on the table before her. Besides these, there are several ingenious wood cuts to illustrate different articles. Published by Israel Post, 140 Nassau-st.

Ecclesiastical Action against the War.—The following preamble and resolutions in relation to the war with Mexico, were adopted by the Synod of the New School Presbyterian Church of New York and New Jersey, at its session in this city last week:—

The Synod of New York and New Jersey, considering the tendency of war to impede the progress of the Gospel, by putting the minds of men in a state unfavorable to the influence of truth and the Holy Spirit, deem it proper and seasonable, in view of the fact that our country is now engaged in war with a neighboring nation, which as far as it has proceeded has been unusually sanguinary and disastrous, to express their solemn convictions in the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Synod regard this war both as an exhibition of human wickedness and as a dreadful scourge from the hand of God, which should lead the Church of Christ to great searchings of heart, to deep humiliation and prostration of spirit, and to earnest supplication before the Throne of Mercy.

Resolved, That it be recommended to all the Ministers of the Word belonging to this Synod, to labor, by prayer, preaching, and all other appropriate means, to impress the minds of men with a sense of the sinfulness and the evils of War, and especially of the existing War with Mexico.

Resolved, That the Synod express the earnest desire that all the people of this land, and especially God's covenant people, see eye to eye in reference to the present and prospective evils of the existing War, and the desirableness of its speedy termination.

An Afflicted Irish Family.—A New York writer mentions an Irish family, consisting of a father and three sons, who lately arrived in that city, poor and weak. On landing, they became separated without any knowledge of each other's locality.

A number of weeks elapsed, when the elder brother of this family called upon the Commissioner of the Almshouse, praying for assistance that he might find his relatives if yet in this land of the living. The story that he told of his own sufferings since his arrival, was most melancholy, for he had been living the life of a sick vagrant, in and about the Tombs. The Commissioner took pity upon him and gave him all the assistance required. Then it was that the pauper and his guide started upon the hunting expedition. The first place they visited was the New York Hospital, where it was ascertained the second brother had died of the loathsome ship fever, and whence his remains were taken to Potter's Field. The second place visited was the Bellevue Hospital, where it was ascertained that the third brother had died of the fever, and was subsequently buried in Potter's Field. The next place they visited was the Lunatic Asylum, where it was ascertained that the father of this emigrant brotherhood had been confined as a raving maniac, but had paid the debt of nature, and was now a resident in the city of the dead. As to the feelings of this poor forlorn son, who had thus been stripped of every tie which bound him to the earth—we cannot attempt to describe them. His only prayer was, that one little spot of earth might be granted him, where he might rebury his dead relatives, provided their bodies could be recognized, and where his own ashes should be deposited after his race was run. The Commissioner promised to do all in his power to bring about the result, and the unhappy pauper took up his abode in Bellevue.

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

Since our paper of last week went to press, farther news from Mexico has been received, with full accounts of the late battles. The New Orleans Picayune publishes letters from Mr. Kendall, dated at the city of Mexico, 28th Sept. Gen. Scott was in full possession of the city. Our losses in the recent battles near the City of Mexico were severe, and the details of the killed and wounded heart-rending. "Thank God," says the Picayune, "none of our Generals are killed;—but Major Gen. Pillow and Gen. Shields were both wounded, but were doing well at last accounts." In the battle of King's Mill, 700 of the 8th division (Gen. Worth's,) were lost, and about 600 in killed and wounded in the battles of the 13th. In the storming of Chapultepec and the attack on the citadel Quitman's division lost 300; Twiggs's 268; Pillow's 142, and Worth's 138, making the loss 848 in all. Worth had scarcely 1,000 men in this action. Our entire loss since leaving Puebla, in killed, wounded, and missing, Kendall sets down at full 3,000. Another authority makes it 4,000; and yet Gen. Scott entered the Valley of Mexico with only a little exceeding 10,000 men. What wonders these ten thousand have achieved! The Picayune says Col. McIntosh and Cranson, Lieut. Col. Martin Scott, Lieut. Col. Graham of infantry, Lieut. Col. Baxter of New-York regiment, and Lieut. Col. Dickinson of the South Carolina regiment, are dead. Another account says, "Major Twiggs, Capt. Van Olinda and Capt. Merrill were also among the killed."

A letter written by a Frenchman in the city of Mexico to his friend in Vera Cruz, contains the following:—

On the 14th, in the morning, the Americans entered the city in a very quiet manner, and Gen. Scott was already at the Palace, when, on a sudden, the people of the low classes commenced throwing stones on the Americans from the tops of the houses, and from all the streets, while individuals of a better standing, fired from the windows and balconies on the Yankees, who were far from expecting such treatment. Gen. Scott ordered immediately pieces of artillery to be placed in all directions, and soon swept the street with grape shot; but this proved insufficient to subdue the insurrection. Gen. Scott then sent a few companies on diverse points, with orders to break open every house out of which the Mexicans should fire; to put to the sword those found within, and lastly, to sack the property therein contained. This order was executed with great moderation, thanks to the secret instructions of Gen. Scott; but in some cases, with stern energy, soon put down the insurrection. These scenes lasted three long and sad days—from the 14th to the 16th—and, I assure you, we were very much alarmed during the whole time. Now we are tranquil; but it is a sad tranquillity, as we fear new disturbances. Our precarious situation will not change for the better until peace be concluded, or the Americans send about 15,000 men.

The following order was issued from the National Palace by Gen. Scott:—

"The General-in-Chief calls upon his brothers in arms to return thanks both in public and private worship, thanks and gratitude to God for the glorious and signal triumph which they have recently achieved for their country; beginning with the 19th of August and ending on the 14th of Sept.

"This army has gallantly fought its way through the fields and Fort of Contreras, San Antonio, Churubusco, Moleno del Rey, Chapultepec and the gates of San Gastea and Tacubaya to the Capital of Mexico. When the very limited numbers who have performed these brilliant deeds shall have become known, the world will be astonished and our country filled with joy.

"But all is not done. The enemy, though scattered and dismayed, has many small fragments of his late army hovering about, aided by an exasperated population. He has again reunited in Toluca. Our numbers are small. They are ready to fall upon us. It will be to their advantage if we rest inactive in the security of past victories.

"Compactness, vigilance, and discipline, are therefore our only securities. Let every good officer and man strictly regard these cautions and enjoin them upon all others."

FOREIGN NEWS.

Just after our last paper went to press, the foreign news by two steamers, one at Boston, and the other at New-York, came to land. It announces a farther decline in the price of cotton and breadstuffs, a great derangement of the money market, and many heavy failures in consequence. The following is a summary of the principal miscellaneous intelligence:—

Coletti, the Greek premier, died in the month of August, his disease having been aggravated by an insurrection which had broken out in several parts of the kingdom. These troubles were still unsettled at the last advices, and without any man at the head of affairs, with an overwhelming foreign debt. Greece is in a bad condition.

Active preparations are making in Switzerland for suppressing the Sonderbund by force of arms. A sanguinary civil war is apprehended from the resolution of the latter to resist the Diet. Two Cantons alone are prepared with 40,000 men to take the field.

The reported marriage of the Duke of Wellington and Miss Coutts, is contradicted. Miss Coutts, it is stated, among her other acts of munificent and somewhat eccentric benevolence, is founding an asylum for convicted and punished felons who have been thrown outcasts on the world.

It is announced by the Belfast Northern Whig that the Baracos, Capt. Owens, has arrived there laden with 2,500 barrels of flour shipped by the Society of Friends at Philadelphia for the use of the destitute Irish.

The Macedonian Frigate, Commodore De Kay, was very near being lost off the Coast of Scotland on the 14th of September. She escaped with loss of jib, foretopmast staysail, foretopsail and other sails; and with great difficulty reached an anchorage under Arran Island. Subsequent accounts announce her perfect safety.

A desperate conflict has taken place in the Malay Seas between H. M. ship Nemesis and eleven piratical proas, in which the latter were defeated, with the loss of 300 in killed and wounded. The loss on the part of the British was 3 men killed and 5 wounded.

A treaty had been concluded between Persia and Turkey, but the Shah refused to ratify it, and is said to be making active preparations for war. He intends to commence the campaign with an army of sixty thousand men. He is incited to this step by Russia.

The great tunnel through the mountain on which stands the town of Weiburg, in the Duchy of Nassau, formed for improving the bed of the Lahn, has just been terminated after five years' continuous labor. The waters of the Lahn were to be let into the tunnel on the 12th, and 2,000 gas lamps were to be lighted and always kept burning.

Mr. Nigre, a Frenchman, who has carried on a large silk manufactory in Vienna for seventeen years, has lately left for Erike, in Asia Minor, where he is charged to establish a silk munufactory for the Turkish Government. He has taken with him 150 French and German workmen, and the machines he will require have been forwarded.

The "Archives Israelites" says: "It is calculated that the total number of Jews spread over the surface of the globe is 6,000,000 of souls. Of these, 180,000 are in the enjoyment of civil rights, viz: 30,000 in the United States of America, 50,000 in Holland, 10,000 in Belgium, and 90,000 in France. In England, 20,000 are as yet incompletely emancipated;" to which common sense may add that England is, so far, not yet quite unbarbarized.

About 700 parochial teachers met at Edinburgh, and formed an institute, entitled "The Educational Institute of Scotland," having for its object increasing and improving the condition of schools throughout the North.

Several French engineers have arrived in Egypt for the purpose of making surveys of the Isthmus of Suez, in order to ascertain whether it will be practicable and advisable to cut a ship-canal from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea.

The cultivation of tobacco has so much increased in Algeria that nearly 300,000 kilogrammes (300 tons) will be purchased during the present year for the French Government, which monopolizes the sale of tobacco in France.

The amount of beet-root sugar made in France during the present year is 107,590,110 lbs., being an increase of 26,596 432 lbs. on the quantity manufactured last year. The duty paid in the 12 months was £250,000 sterling.

Ten Sisters of Charity of Cambray are on the point of taking their departure for China. So zealous are the sisters that the Superiors of the Sisterhood are obliged to make a selection from the great number who offer themselves.

A meeting of Roman Catholics was held on the 20th ult., at the Free-Masons' Tavern, London, to express their sympathy with Pope Pius IX. in his recent reforms, and their indignation at the menacing position assumed by Austria.

Father Mathew has declared his intention of visiting the United States early in the ensuing Spring.

Asiatic Cholera is making fearful ravages in Russia.

California University.—J. Emery, of Wellsboro, Pa., in a letter to the Christian Advocate and Journal, states that a project is on foot for the establishment of a literary institution, to be called the California University, near the Bay of San Francisco. Means are being taken for bringing the subject in its true light, and with all its importance, before the American public. Its friends have strong and well-grounded assurances that Congress, at its next session, will give the subject due attention and substantial aid, by the grant of lands for the endowment of the University, and such other aids as can constitutionally and legitimately be afforded. It is also proposed to establish there an astronomical observatory, with such instruments as the means for that object shall warrant, and from an entirely new point, highly favorable indeed for such pursuits, to study the wonderful works of God, ruling amid a myriad of worlds. For this purpose the "Cincinnati Astronomical Society" have already taken the initiatory steps, and, if nothing farther be done, they will, it is presumed, during the next session, establish, at some eligible point on the Bay of San Francisco, an observatory under their more immediate patronage. The services of two enterprising and scientific members of the bar of Cincinnati have been proffered and accepted, to carry out the intentions of the Society—one of whom is now in Virginia for the purpose of facilitating the enterprise. [Tribune.

A Spotted Negro.—The Raleigh Standard of the 13th inst., published in North Carolina, has the following: On Saturday last we were invited by Mr. Northam, of Johnston County, to examine at Lawrence's Hotel a negro boy he had in charge—and a very strange looking boy he is. He is as black as the negro ordinarily is, and has white rings around his arms and legs; the skin upon his breast and abdomen is white, and there is a white streak commencing at the top of his forehead and running an inch or so up his head, the hair on this part of his head being as white and soft as lamb's wool. The white is remarkably clear, and contrasts singularly with the black skin, which covers the other parts of his body. This boy is three years old, was born in Johnston County in this State, and seems to be smart for one of his age.

A party of six or eight sportsmen of West Jersey went out to hunt bears on Indian Branch in Camden County, about three miles from Dutch Mills. They took their stands to watch, and soon two made their appearance within 30 or 35 yards of Jesse Seran, who was sitting on a stump. He leveled a double-barreled gun at them and fired, (says the Woodbury Constitution,) killing one on the spot and severely wounding the other. She was pursued a little way by their dogs, one of which she wounded severely, when she was shot by one of the party. The first killed weighed about 100 pounds, the second 300 pounds.

SUMMARY.

The papers publish the names of 48 deserters who were recently hung at San Angel and Mixcoac, Mexico. They say also that there were several others who were condemned to be flogged 50 lashes each, branded with the letter D on the cheek, and to wear an iron yoke weighing 8 pounds, with three prongs each one foot in length around the neck, to be confined at hard labor in charge of the guard during the time the army remains in Mexico, and then to have their heads shaved and to be drummed out of the service.

The Kingston (Canada) Chronicle, says, an old settler in that town informs him, that in 1700, his father paid $48 for a bushel of corn to plant, it being a year of almost famine in that vicinity. The Detroit Free Press, copying the above, adds, "We too can say a word about high prices. A cargo of flour arrived here in 1815, from Erie, at $6 per barrel for the freight. In 1816, flour was sold here at $25 a barrel, and early in the spring of 1818, it was retailed by the 20 lbs. at the rate of $50 the barrel, and corn at $8 the bushel."

The Union publishes a schedule, prepared at the office of the Adjutant General, showing that the whole number of reinforcements of Gen. Scott's column, since July 14, including troops now en route, and volunteers being enrolled, is 17,861. These added to the 13 or 14,000 men whom Gen. Scott took with him from Puebla, and making allowance for the 1,600 killed, wounded or missing in the late actions, will swell his force in a few weeks to nearly 30,000 men, according to the Union.

The Jefferson City (Mo.) Metropolitan speaks of seeing, last week, a huge box, labelled—'Her Majesty, Queen Victoria—care of her Lord High Steward—St. James' palace, London.' Its interior has apartments which were filled with venison, hams, buffalo tongues, pickles, jellies, &c., the whole presented by Peter McLain, a native of the Emerald Isle, to her Majesty aforesaid.

A correspondent of the Maine Farmer says: I have seen a variety of methods recommended for keeping eggs, so that they may be fresh and good through the winter; but on trial have always failed to have them come as good as new. About two years ago I thought I would pack some in charcoal. I pounded the charcoal, and packed them in the same manner as recommended in oats, ashes, salt, &c. The result was, they kept perfectly good, and when used were as fresh and good to all appearance as new-layed eggs. We have tried the charcoal two years with the same effect.

Mr. Henry Hall, an Englishman, rented last year one acre and one rood of ground, one and a half miles from Zanesville, Ohio, on one acre of which he raised more than 400 bushels of superior Pink-eye and Mercer potatoes—the result, not of high manuring, but of systematic and thorough cultivation. The spade was the only instrument used in preparing the ground. The tubers were planted early, in drills, and very close, and the ground kept perfectly clean.

It is said that the hedgehog is proof against poisons. Mr. Pallas states that it will eat a hundred cantharides without receiving any injury. More recently a German physician, who wished to dissect one, gave it prussic acid, but it had no effect; he then tried arsenic, opium, and corrosive sublimate, with the same results.

The commissioners appointed at the last session of the Iowa Legislature, to select a new Seat of Government, have selected a spot on a beautiful prairie in Jasper County, thirty miles from the geographical centre of the territory. They call it Monroe City.

The wife of Capt. Thornton, whose fate it was to sacrifice his life in the cause of his country, is now in a county poor house in Delaware, in a state of partial derangement, the result of the unfortunate loss of her husband.

The first orchard ever set out in New England, was on the Pereguin White place, in Plymouth, Mass., in 1638, and one of the trees was living a few years ago, and of course must be over two hundred years old.

The Pittsburgh Gazette states that 609 buildings have been erected in the district burned over by the extensive fire of April, 1845. The greater portion of the buildings are much larger, more commodious, and much better adapted to business purposes, than those destroyed by the fire. There are few cities in the Union of corresponding means where such rapid advancements have been made in business and in buildings as in Pittsburgh.

Russell Cady, covicted of the murder of George Manwaring, jr., in Chenango Co., has been sentenced to be hung on the 23d of November. Dr. Dan Foote, of the same County, convicted of manslaughter, for inflicting blows upon his wife which caused her death, has been sentenced to the State Prison for life.

Judge Hammond is preparing for the press, and will in a few months have ready for publication, a third volume of his Political History, which will contain the history of Political parties from the year 1840 down to the time of the adoption of the present Constitution, and which will also contain a Biography of Hon. Silas Wright.

There was a great procession and display in this city, on Tuesday of last week, at the laying of the corner-stone of the Washington Monument. Gov. Young laid the stone, and Chief Justice Jones delivered the address.

While a regiment of American cavalry was charging on a squadron of Mexican lancers, at Churubusco, a well-dressed lady on a nice little horse, kept company with the Americans in the charge.

Cotton derived its name from Koton, a town in one of the central provinces of China. The quantity annually raised in the world is about 1,000,000,000 lbs., principally in the United States.

Three thousand three hundred and twenty families, in the city of New York, have refused to admit the Bible into their houses, even when offered free.

There was a great fire in Constantinople, on the 13th of September, by which about three hundred houses were destroyed.

The Scientific American says: We have heard that the sum of $75,000 has recently been offered for the patent right of an artificial leg, lately invented in New Hampshire. It is estimated that one leg per day is wanted in New England alone, while the Mexican war is creating a good market at the south.

Capt. Cook's chart of the N. W. coast of America and the N. E. coast of Asia, has been presented to the Cincinnati Mercantile Library by a descendant of the officer in Cook's expedition, who drew it with a pen. It is said to be equal to copper-plate.

A piece of solid stone has been found on the farm of Mr. Silas T. Belding, of Dover, Dutchess Co., having the resemblance of a human foot and leg, of perfect form. This curiosity is supposed by many, who have examined it closely, to have once been a human limb.

It is proposed to remove Madison University from Hamilton, its present location, to a point more central and more easy of access. The two places named for its future location are Syracuse and Rochester.

The Episcopal Board of Missions have decided to establish a mission at San Francisco, California, and to pay $500 a year for its expenses. Rev. Mr. Leavenworth, of N. Y., is to be the missionary.

There is at present being exhibited in Liverpool, a most extraordinary piece of copper, from the mines of Pittsburgh, United States, which, in one block, weighs nearly two tons.

An imperial ukase has been promulgated in Russia, which commands all civil functionaries who possess a fortune to state exactly in their returns by what means they have acquired it.

The number of periodicals in New York city is, says the American Messenger, 500; newspapers 98; miscellaneous schools, 110; moral, benevolent, and literary associations, 116; churches 227.

Twenty-seven ships are now on the docks of this city in the course of construction. They are of the first class, and a number of them steamers.

The editor of the Vera Cruz Eagle says:—"We had the pleasure of enjoying an invitation to be present on the occasion of an amputation of two legs on Saturday last."

The papers say that the hair of a lady in Hartford, Conn., measures 9 feet and 4 inches in length, while she is only 5 feet 1 inch high.

A mere pigmy horse, weighing only 45 lbs., the smallest one that ever lived, has been sent to Gen. Tom Thumb, as a present, from Java.

The Governor of Pennsylvania has followed the Executives of several other States in appointing Nov. 25th as a day of Thanksgiving.

Indiana is to be added to the States which have appointed November 25, for the observance of Thanksgiving—making seven so far as heard from.

A man who is always well satisfied with himself, is seldom so with others, and others are as little pleased with him.

The Bill providing for the abolition of Capital Punishment was voted upon by the Assembly of New York State last week. There were 48 ayes, and 53 noes.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, OCT. 25.

ASHES—Pots $6 75. Pearls 8 00.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 50 a 6 62. Western and Oswego 6 50. Western Meal 3 25; Jersey 3 50. Rye Flour 5 00.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 46; Ohio 1 35. Corn 72 a 75c. Rye 92c. Barley 82c. Oats 48c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork 15 00; Prime 10 50. Prime Beef 7 25; Mess 11 00. Butter 14 a 18c. for State, 11 a 13c. for Ohio. Cheese 6½ a 7½c.

MARRIED,

In Brookfield, N. Y., October 14th, by Rev. Eli S. Bailey, Mr Gideon Babcock, of Plainfield, to Miss Lydia Campbell, of Brookfield.

DIED,

In DeRuyter, N. Y., on the 11th inst., Mrs. Prudence Stillman, widow of the late Mr. Elisha Stillman, of that place, aged 86 years. Mrs. Stillman has long been known in the church as a worthy and pious Christian, and a mother in Israel. She was daughter of Eld. John Burdick, of Hopkinton, R. I., whose memory is still cherished in the churches. She became early a professor of religion, and was for the greater part of her life a member of the 1st Church in Hopkinton, R. I. About twenty years since, she with her family removed to Homer, and was connected with the Church in Scott. Thence she removed to DeRuyter, and became connected with the Seventh-day Baptist Church of that place, where she has closed her earthly career, and now rests in hope of a glorious resurrection. In the few last years, her mental faculties were less vigorous than formerly, but still she enjoyed them in a good degree; and though apparently sensible of her approaching dissolution, she manifested an unshaken confidence in her Saviour, and a willingness to depart. Her friends will long cherish an affectionate remembrance of her worth.

In Richburgh, Allegany Co., N. Y., Mrs. Polly Scott, wife of John Scott, in the 70th year of her age. The subject of this notice had been a professed follower of Christ for nearly fifty years, and for the last twenty years a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Wirt; and though in her death her family and the church of which she was a member have been bereaved, yet her reserved walk, her uniform Christian deportment, and the quiet spirit in which she met approaching dissolution, afford a full assurance that she has gone to the abode of the blessed. A large congregation attended her funeral, who were addressed by Eld. T. E. Babcock, from Job 9: 12—"Behold, he taketh away; who can hinder him? Who will say unto him, What doest thou?"

Drowned, on her passage from Westerly, R. I., to New York, Sept. 25th, Hannah Mary Burdick, daughter of Ichabod Burdick, of West Edmeston, Madison Co., N. Y., aged 20 years. This young lady took passage on board the sloop Catharine Hale, Capt. Brandt, to accompany his wife to the city of New York. When off Eaton's Neck, the vessel was capsized, and all who were in the cabin, consisting of Mrs. Brandt, the cook, and the subject of this notice, were drowned. Surely "in the midst of life we are in death." On the following Sabbath a sermon was preached to the afflicted mourners, by Eld. S. S. Griswold, from Psalm 97: 1, 2—"The Lord reigneth." COMM.

LETTERS.

Eli S. Bailey, O. P. Hull, Daniel Coon, S. S. Griswold, L. Cottrell, T. E. Babcock, N. V. Hull, Joseph A. Potter, Wm. F. Randolph, (next week,) Peleg L. Berry, (all right.)

RECEIPTS.

Jos. A. Potter, Durhamville,	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Benj. West, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Wm. C. Satterlee, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Lyman Cole, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Parmilee, Higginsville,	2 00	"	4	" 52
A. B. Lawton, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
J. R. Irish, DeRuyter,	3 00	"	4	" 52
John Maxson, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
N. & D. Maxson, Richburg,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Jer. Place, Alfred,	1 00	"	4	" 26
Nathan Spencer, Winfield,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Albert Clarke, Brookfield,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Richard Stillman, "	2 00	"	3	" 52

NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its semi-annual meeting at Pawcatuck, R. I., on the 4th day of the week next preceding the 3d Sabbath in November (17th of the month) at 10 o'clock A. M. Thos. B. Brown, Rec. Sec.

MISSIONARY NOTICE.

The regular Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in the city of New York on the evening of the first first-day in November, (7th day of the month,) 1847.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FIRESIDE READING

For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.

"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.

"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author.

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	" "	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	" "	April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, August 3d, 1847.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the next general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

STATE—A Secretary of State, Comptroller, State Treasurer, Attorney General, State Engineer and Surveyor, Three Canal Commissioners, and Three Inspectors of State Prisons.

DISTRICT—One Senator for the Third Senate District, consisting of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Wards of the city of New York; One Senator for the Fourth Senate District, consisting of the Seventh, Tenth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Wards of the said city; One Senator for the Fifth Senate District, consisting of the Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth Wards of the said city; and One Senator for the Sixth Senate District, consisting of the Eleventh Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Eighteenth Wards of the said city.

COUNTY—Also the following officers for the said city and county, to wit:—Sixteen members of Assembly—One to be elected in each Assembly District.

Yours, respectfully,
N. S. BENTON, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 5th, 1847.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided. J. J. V. WESTERVELT,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

☞ All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See revised Statute, vol 1, chap. 6, title 3, article 3d, part 1st, page 140. Sept. 2, te.

Miscellaneous.

Selected for the Recorder.

THE PENSIVE DOVE.

Oh, tell me where the Dove has flown,
To build her downy nest,
And I will search the world around
To win her to my breast.

I sought her in the rosy bower,
Where Pleasure holds her reign—
Where Fancy flies from flower to flower—
But there I sought in vain.

I sought her in the bower of Love—
I knew her tender heart—
But she had flown; that Pensive Dove
Had felt the traitor's dart.

Upon Ambition's craggy hill
I thought this bird might stray;
But there I sought, and vainly still—
She never flew that way.

Faith smiled, and shed a tender tear,
To see me search around,
And whispered, "I can tell thee where
The Dove may yet be found:—

In meek religion's humble cot
She builds her downy nest;
Go, seek that sweet, secluded spot,
And win her to thy breast."

VISIONS WHEN DROWNING.

In the young days of Admiral Beaufort he fell overboard in Portsmouth harbor. He says: With the violent but vain attempts to make myself heard, I had swallowed much water; I was soon exhausted by my struggles, and before any relief reached me I had sunk below the surface, all hope had fled, and all exertion had ceased, and I felt that I was drowning. From the moment that all exertions had ceased—which I imagine was the immediate consequence of complete suffocation—a calm feeling of the most perfect tranquillity superseded the previous sensations—it might be called apathy, certainly not resignation, for drowning no longer appeared to be an evil—I no longer thought of being rescued, nor was I in any bodily pain. On the contrary, my sensations were now of rather a pleasurable cast, partaking of that dull but contented sort of feeling which precedes the sleep produced by fatigue. Though the senses were thus deadened, not so the mind; its activity seemed to be invigorated in a ratio which defies all description, for thought rose after thought with a rapidity of succession that is not only indescribable, but probably inconceivable, by any one who has not himself been in a similar situation. The course of those thoughts I can even now in a great measure retrace—the event which had just taken place, the awkwardness that had produced it, the bustle it must have occasioned, (for I had observed two persons jump from the chains,) the effect it would have on a most affectionate father, the manner in which he would disclose it to the rest of the family, and a thousand other circumstances minutely associated with home, were the first series of reflections that occurred. They then took a wider range—our last cruise, a former voyage and shipwreck, my school, the progress I had made there, and the time I had misspent, and even all my boyish pursuits and adventures. Thus traveling backwards, every past incident of my life seemed to glance across my recollection in retrogade succession; not, however, in mere outlines, as here stated, but the picture filled up with every minute and collateral feature; in short, the whole period of my existence seemed to be placed before me in a kind of panoramic review, and each act of it seemed to be accompanied by a consciousness of right or wrong, or by some reflection on its consequences; indeed, many trifling events which had been long forgotten, then crowded into my imagination, and with the character of recent familiarity.

My feelings while life was returning were the reverse in every point of those which have been described above. One single but confused idea—a miserable belief that I was drowning—dwelt upon my mind, instead of the multitude of clear and definite ideas which had recently rushed through it; a helpless anxiety, a kind of continuous nightmare, seemed to press heavily on every sense and to prevent the formation of any one distinct thought, and it was with difficulty that I became convinced that I was really alive.

Another Case.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, in publishing the above, reports the following, said to have occurred when drowning:

Some years since, A held a bond of B, for several hundred dollars, having some time to run. At its maturity he had put it away so carefully that he was unable to find it. Every search was fruitless. He only knew it had not been paid, nor traded away. In this dilemma he called on B, related the circumstance of its disappearance, and proposed to give him a receipt as an offset to the bond, or an indemnifying bond against its collection, if ever found. To his great surprise, B not only refused to accept his terms of meeting the difficulty, but positively denied owing him anything, and strongly intimated the presence of a fraudulent design on the part of A. Without legal proof, and therefore without redress, he had to endure both the loss of his money, and the suspicion of a dishonorable intention in urging the claim. Several years passed away without any change in the nature of the case or its facts as above given, when one afternoon, while bathing in the James river, A, either from inability to swim, or cramp, or some other cause, was discovered to be drowning. He had sunk and risen several times, and was floating away under the water, when he was seized and drawn ashore. The usual remedies were applied to resuscitate him, and though there were signs of life, there was no appearance of consciousness. He was taken home in a state of complete exhaustion, and remained so for some days. On the first return of strength to walk, he left his bed, went to his bookcase, took out a book, opened it and handed his long-lost bond to a friend who was present. He then informed him that when drowning, and sinking as he supposed to rise no more, in a moment there stood out distinctly before his mind as a picture, every act of his life, from early childhood to the hour of his sinking beneath the water, and among them, the circumstance of his putting the bond in a book, the book itself, and the place in which he had put it in the bookcase. It is needless to say that he recovered "his own with usury."

THE BIRD FAMILY.

The Portland Tribune, which has a good ear for melody, speaks as follows of a musical family, who perhaps are not so much honored by the critical as they ought to be:

Of all the nests of singers—the Rainers, the Hutchinsons, the Bakers, and a score of other "families"—give us, by all odds, the "Bird Family." To hear them in their perfection one must be astir betimes, for their morning carol is by far the sweetest, although their vesper hymn comes next to it. They commence at a very early hour, heralding the sun with their choicest notes, and vieing with each other

"To congratulate the sweet return of morn."

At about half-past three, if you are listening, you will hear the choir preparing—clearing their throats for the opening chorus. At first a faint twitter will come from this and that tree, followed now and then by a short strain of delicious melody, just as you will hear in a choir of girls overflowing with music, a brilliant passage, gushing from the lips of this and that one involuntarily as it were. After trying their voices for a while, the prelude commences, running from tree to tree; then follows the grand chorus, swelling from the faintest dim. to the fullest cres., each songster striving to outdo the other, and every note blending in perfect accord, until

"Every copse
Deep tangled, tree irregular, and bush
Bending with dewy moisture o'er the heads
Of the coy choristers that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony."

Every now and then, too, you will hear the loud voiced chanticleer, introducing a crow matin passage with surprising effect. So the anthem rolls on, now in a charming recitative, now in a sweet bewitching solo, now in a most intricate fugue, and anon in a full chorus, so brilliant in every part that Handel himself might sigh with envy. Thus it continues, until

"The dapple-grey coursers of the morn
Beat up the light with their bright silver hoofs,
And chase it through the sky."

The sun fairly started on his diurnal track, the carol gradually dies away; and, by the time the drowsy citizen begins to rub his waking eyes, the glorious song is at an end, and the "Bird Family," one and all, are busily employed in getting their breakfast.

HINDOO SUPERSTITION.

It may seem incredible, but it is undoubtedly true, that there now exists at the Marmadilla Frank, in the middle of the city and island of Bombay, British India, a human being who has inhabited a summer-house, and held on the palm of his left hand a heavy flower-pot for twenty-one years without intermission. The narrator of this circumstance actually saw the hermit, (for such he is called.) The arm is completely sinew-bound and shriveled, the nails of his fingers are nine inches long, and curved like the talons of a bird. His beard nearly reaches the ground when standing erect.

Whilst sitting, the man rests his elbow on his knee, and whilst walking he supports it with the other hand. His countenance indicates intelligence, and he once had very extensive possessions. All he now possesses is a few rags around the middle of his body, and a servant, who is allowed to attend to his immediate wants, the pecuniary part of which is supplied by visitors.

Twenty one years ago he lost caste by eating mutton! an indulgence in totally forbidden food, and consequently was condemned to hold for thirty years, a large flower-pot filled with earth, in which grows a sacred plant. To lose caste, and not be able to take it up again, according to the superstitions of these deluded idolaters, is to incur the penalty of everlasting misery in the future state. What an example does this poor deluded creature afford, of perseverance, zeal, courage, and devotion worthy of the highest cause. If he live to redeem his caste, most likely he will hereafter be set apart to be worshiped as a God! [Ch. Reflector.

WORK FOR THE FARM.

Immediately after a rainy day, when the land is in such a state of wetness as to prevent any work upon it, and the horses having nothing particular to do upon the road, two or three of the men should each take a mud-hoe and rake the loose straws and liquid mud on all the roads around the steading to the lowest side of the roads, and as much as possible out of the way of carts and people passing along; while the rest should take shovels and form the raked matter into heaps, to be led away when it will bear lifting to the compost-heap or field, as may best suit the purpose at the time. Where there is plenty of straw, as on some farms, some farmers put it upon the roads round the steading to be trampled down and become wetted with rain, and then lead it away to the dung hill in the field. The object aimed at in so far as wetting the straw is attained, but such a littering makes walking upon the roads very damp and plashy. The best state for roads near farm steadings in winter, is to have their surface hard and smooth, and with such an inclination as to cause the water to run easily away into some ditch handy by. A scraping now and then with the mud-hoe will make such a road dry and comfortable. [Book of the Farm.

AMERICAN FARMERS.

Many thousand farmers in New England rear large families, pay all their debts and taxes promptly, and live independently, well clothed and comfortably housed and provided for, and lay up money, on farms of 50 acres. The idea is, that these people labor severely. This is a great mistake. They have much, because they waste no time. With them there is "a place for every thing, and every thing in its place." Their horses and cattle, tools, and implements, are attended to with clock-like regularity. Nothing is put off till to-morrow which can be done to-day. Economy is wealth, and system affords ease. These men are seldom in a hurry, except in harvest time. And in long winter evenings, or severe weather, which forbids employment out of doors, one makes corn brooms, another shoes, a third is a carpenter, cooper, or tailor; and one woman spins, another weaves, a third plaits "Leghorn bonnets." And the families thus occupied, are among the most healthy and cheerful in the world. It is easy with them to reduce their wishes to their means, if inconvenient or imprudent; and to extend their means to their wishes.

THE CHILD'S DREAM.

"Oh! I have had a dream, mother,
So beautiful and strange;
Would I could sleep on, mother,
And the dream never change!"
"What hast thou dreamed, my dear one?
Thy look is bright and wild;
Thy mother's ear is ready
To listen to her child."

"I dreamed I lay asleep, mother,
Beneath an orange tree,
When a white bird came and sang, mother,
So sweetly unto me;
Though it woke me with its warbling,
Its notes were soft and low,
And it bade me rise and follow,
Wherever it might go.

"It led me on and on, mother,
Through groves and realms of light,
Until it came to one, mother,
Which dazzled—'t was so bright.
As tremblingly I entered,
An angel form drew near,
And bade me welcome thither,
Nor pain nor sorrow fear.

"I knew not aught there, mother,
I only felt 't was bliss,
And joined that white bird's song, mother,
O canst thou read me this?"
"Yes, dearest, to thy mother
Such happiness is given—
The Holy Spirit was that bird,
That grove of light was Heaven!"
[Howitt's Journal.

JAMES STEBBINS,

OR, THE WAY TO BE HAPPY.

The next night, as James came into the room, his mother said to him, "I shall not inquire whether you have been happy to-day, my son, for it is evident that you have. But before I bid you good night, I wish you to tell me some of the things which have made you so."

"I will commence, then, with the morning," said James. "I started up as soon as I heard my father's voice calling me, and it did not seem half so hard as when I lay and thought about it: so I had time for a fine run in the garden before breakfast. It was so pleasant, I thought the birds never sung so sweetly before. I did not know it was so pleasant early in the morning."

His mother smiled and said, "The boys that lay in bed till after breakfast are not the boys that make such discoveries."

"When the breakfast bell rang," said James, "I was right glad to hear it, for I had run till I was hungry."

"Did you regain your place at the head of your class?" said his mother.

"No, mother; George Williams came very near missing a word, and for a moment I was ready to hope that he would, but then I thought of what you said, and that perhaps if he should lose his place, he would feel as bad as I did yesterday, and I was glad when he succeeded in spelling the word. When I went out, I found that one of the boys had knocked my hat off the nail in the entry. I was beginning to feel very angry, but I thought how foolish and wicked it was to get angry, for such a trifle. When I had time to think more about it, I was very glad I did not get angry with him, for I did not think he meant to knock it down. When I returned home at night I found Lucy was very busy looking at the pictures in my new book. I wished to finish reading it, and was going to catch it from her; but she looked very unwilling to give it up just then, and I thought I would go out to do something else, so I said to her, "Lucy, I shall want my book when I come in again, and you will make haste and get through with it, won't you?"

"And Lucy said, 'Yes, James,' and when I came back again, she reached out her little hands to give me the book, and I felt very glad I had not snatched it from her."

When James had finished his story, his mother's kind look of approval, and her affectionate kiss, made his heart bound with joy. She went with him to his chamber, and knelt with him to pray that God would still help her little son to conquer all his wicked passions, that he might become a useful and happy man.

I hope my young friends will learn, from the story of James, that neither pleasant weather, nor kind friends, nor any other blessings, will make them happy, if they indulge in wicked and angry passions.

FAMILY RECIPES.

Remedy for a Burn.—Chloride of soda is said, in the London Lancet, to be an effectual cure for burns. An attorney, in attempting to put out the flames that attacked his bed, got his hand burned and blistered, but not broken. He sent for a couple of quarts of lotion, four ounces of the solution to a pint of water, had it poured into soup plates, wrapped his hand in lint, as no skin was kroken, and so kept them for some time. Next morning he was so perfectly well that only one small patch of burns remained. It is added that the same remedy is sufficient to heal scalds and a black eye.

—

Indian Pudding.—Boil a quart of milk, and stir in Indian meal, till it is nearly as thick as you can stir it with a spoon; then a tea-spoonful of salt, a cup full of molasses, a tea-spoonful of ginger or ground cinnamon, and cold milk enough to make a thin batter. Boil in a thin bag for four hours, or bake the same length of time. Care should be taken that the water does not stop boiling while the pudding is in. Pudding made in this way, with the addition of a quart of chopped sweet apples, will be found delicious.

—

Indian Cakes.—Take at night, one quart of Indian meal, about half scald in with boiling water, then cool it with cold water, so as not to kill the brewer's yeast, one tea-spoonful of which is to be stirred in, with a tea-spoonful of wheat flour, and a tea spoonful of salt. Sufficient water must be put in to make a thick batter, and left to rise till morning; then add saleratus enough to sweeten the mass. Two or three eggs beaten and stirred in is an improvement. Then bake on a hot griddle, and you have breakfast cakes fit for Queen Victoria.

Chinese Telegraph.—In the travels of John Bell, from St. Petersburg to Pekin, he describes an ingenious invention, in which the reader will recognize a telegraph. The following is the passage:—

"Near to the densely crowded city of Siangfu, we met with many turrets on the road, called post-houses, and erected at equal distances from one another. On the summit of each is a flag staff from which floats the imperial pendent. These turrets are so contrived as to be in sight of one another, and by signals are made use of to convey intelligence of any remarkable event. By this means the Court is informed in the speediest manner imaginable of whatever disturbance may happen in the most remote provinces of the empire. These posts are also very useful by keeping the country free from highwaymen; for should a person escape in passing by one he would certainly be stopped at the next."

To Ascertain a Horse's Age.—Every horse has six teeth above and below—before three years old he sheds his middle ones—at three he sheds one more each side of the central teeth—at four he sheds the two corner and last of the fore teeth. Between four and five the horse cuts his under tusks; at five he will cut his upper tusks, at which time his mouth will be complete. At six the grooves and hollows will begin to fill up a little—at seven the grooves will be nigh filled up, except the corner teeth, leaving little brown spots where the dark brown spots formerly were. At eight the whole of the hollows and grooves are filled up. At nine there is very often seen a small bill to tho outside corner teeth—the point of the tusk is worn off, and the part that was concave begins to fill up and become rounding—the squars of the central teeth begin to disappear, and the gums leave them small and narrow at the top.

A Puzzler.—A writer in the Baptist Register proposes the following inquiry: "If a Mr. Randall is blessed with a son, whom he names Ezra, and if Mr. R., upon the death of Ezra's mother, marries the daughter of Mr. Alvord, who a few years before had lost his wife, and who subsequently, by a second wife, is blessed with a daughter that is named Mary, but who lives not long to lament the early death of his first daughter Mrs. Randall, or enjoy the society of his companion and daughter Mary; and if, after her death, Mr. Randall takes for his third wife the former wife of his son-in-law, and if his son Ezra choose to marry the daughter of his father's third wife, Miss Mary Alvord, will any law, human or divine, be broken, and what relation will Ezra be to his father, or his children to his father's wife?"

VARIETY.

From the time of Napoleon's retreat from Russia, he constantly carried round his neck in a little silken bag, a poisonous powder which his physician had prepared by his express order. On one occasion, when the sun of fortune was about to set on him, he had recourse to this antidote. "I hesitated no longer," said Napoleon, "but leaping from my bed, mixed the poison in a little water, and drank it with a sort of happiness. But time had taken away its strength; fearful pains drew forth some groans from me; they were heard, and medical assistance arrived. It was not Heaven's will that I should die so soon—St. Helena was in my destiny."

The Chinese tell of one of their countrymen who had been making strenuous efforts to acquire literary information, who, discouraged by difficulties, at length gave up his books in despair. As he returned to manual employment, he saw a woman rubbing a crowbar on a stone; on asking her the reason, she replied she was in want of a needle, and thought she would rub down the crowbar till she got it small enough. The patience of the aged female provoked him to make another attempt, and he succeeded in obtaining the rank of one of the first three men in the empire.

A singular phenomenon, says a French paper, has shown itself in a greenhouse at Lyons. At the time when all the growers of camellias roses, dahlias, &c., are puzzling themselves to get the blue color, the only shade which nature has refused to these kind of plants, chance has thrown a shade of azure blue upon the petals of flowers produced by one single branch of a camellia root of the species ambricala rubra. This plant belongs to M. Dagene. The interior petal of the flowers are of a delicate red, the superior are white, and both are united with blue. The flowers thus unite three additional colors.

The ear of a dog belonging to a man near Sturbridge was severely hurt, and the animal was consequently taken to a chemist's shop where the wound was dressed. During three days the dog was regularly conducted to the shop by his master, but on the fourth morning he found his way there alone, leaped on the counter, and waited till his ear was dressed. This visit he repeated every morning until his ear was wholly healed.

The Portland Washingtonian states, that at the ordination of Rev. Solomon Lombard, which took place in Gorham, Dec. 29, 1750, one hundred and twenty dollars were raised to defray the expenses. Among the articles purchased were 2 barrels of cider, worth £9; 2 gallons of brandy, at £5; 4 gallons rum, at £5 4s. His annual salary was only £54 6s. 8d., while they spent £19 4s.—over one-third the amount of his annual salary for intoxicating liquors. Custom has changed.

Shrink not from a woman of strong sense, for if she becomes attached to you, it is from seeing and viewing the different qualities in yourself. You can consult her, for she is able to advise, and does so at once—with the firmness of reason and consideration of affection. Her love is lasting, and it will not be lightly won, for weak minds are not capable of the loftiest grades of passion.

It is said of Melancthon, that when he made an appointment, he expected not only the hour but the minute to be fixed, that no time might be wasted in idleness or suspense; and of Washington, that when his secretary being repeatedly late in his attendance, laid the blame on his watch, he said, "You must get another watch, or I another secretary."

A Dutch member of the Pennsylvania Assembly, having returned home from a session, was asked by a neighbor what had been done by the legislature. "I don't know what others have done," replied he, "but I have cleared one hundred dollars for mine self."

Sixty years ago, according to a work lately published in Paris, the nobility of Europe numbered five and a half millions; being 1 in every 30 inhabitants. It now comprises but three millions and three-quarters; or 1 in every 57 inhabitants.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus.

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 20. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1847. WHOLE NO. 176.

The Sabbath Recorder.

From the People's Journal.

THE HOLY LAND.—BY HARRIET MARTINEAU.

III. JERUSALEM—THE TEMPLE.

My room opened upon a little terrace,—the flat roof of a lower apartment in our inn at Jerusalem, and from this little terrace I was never tired of gazing. A considerable portion of the city was spread out below me; not with its streets laid open to view, as it would be in one of our cities; but presenting a collection of flat roofs, with small white cupolas rising from them, and the minarets of the mosques springing, tall and light as the poplar from the long grass of the meadow. The narrow, winding lanes, which are the streets of eastern cities, are scarcely traceable from a hight; but there was one visible from our terrace,—with its rough pavement of large stones, the high house-walls on each side, and the arch thrown over it, which is so familiar to all who have seen pictures of Jerusalem. This street is called the Via Dolorosa, the Mournful Way, from its being supposed to be the way by which Jesus went from the Judgment Hall to Calvary, bearing his cross. Many times in a day my eye followed the windings of this street, in which I rarely saw any one walking; and when it was lost among the buildings near the walls, I looked over to the hill which bounded our prospect;—and that hill was the Mount of Olives. It was then the time of full moon, and evening after evening I used to lean on the parapet of the terrace, watching for the coming up of the large yellow moon from behind the ridge of Olivet. By day the slopes of the Mount were green with the springing wheat, and dappled with the shade of the Olive clumps. By night, those clumps and lines of trees were dark amid the lights and shadows cast by the moon; and they guided the eye, in the absence of daylight, to the most interesting points,—the descent to the brook Kedron, the road to Bethany, and the place whence Jesus is believed to have looked over upon the noble city when he pronounced its doom. Such was the view from our terrace.

One of our first walks was along the Via Dolorosa. There is a strange charm in the streets of Jerusalem, from the picturesque character of the walls and archways. The old walls of yellow stone are so beautifully tufted with weeds, that one longs to paint every angle and projection, with their mellow coloring, and dangling and trailing weeds. And the shadowy archways, where the vaulted roofs intersect each other, till they are lost in the dazzle of the sunshine beyond, are a perpetual treat to the eye. The pavement is the worst I ever walked on; large, slippery stones, slanting all manner of ways. Passing such weedy walls and dark archways as I have mentioned, we turned into the Via Dolorosa, and followed it as far as the Governor's House, which stands where Fort Antonia stood when Pilate there tried Him in whom he found, as he declared, no guilt. Here we obtained permission to mount to the roof.

Why did we wish it? For reasons of such force as I despair of making understood by any but those to whom the name of the Temple has been sacred from their earliest years. None but Mohammedans may enter the inclosure now; no Jew nor Christian. The Jew and Christian who repel each other in Christian lands are under the same ban here. They are alike excluded from the place where Solomon built and Christ sanctified the temple of Jehovah; and they are alike mocked and insulted, if they draw near the gates. Of course, we were not satisfied without seeing all we could see of this place—now occupied by the mosque of Omar—the most sacred spot to the Mohammedans, after Mecca. We could sit under the Golden Gate, outside the walls; we could measure with the eye, from the bed of the brook Kedron, the hight of the walls which crowned Moriah, and from amid which once arose the Temple courts; we could sit where Jesus sat on the slope of Olivet, and look over to the hight whence the glorious Temple once commanded the Valley of Jehoshaphat, which lay between us and it; but this was not enough, if we could see more. We had gone to the threshold of one of the gates, as far as the faithful permit the infidel to go; and even there we had insulting warnings not to venture farther, and were mocked by little boys. From this threshold we had looked in; and from the top of the city wall we had looked down upon the inclosure, and seen the external beauty of the buildings, and the pride and prosperity of the Mohammedan usurpers. But we could see yet more from the roof of the Governor's house; and there we went accordingly.

The inclosure was spread out like a map below us; and very beautiful was the mosque, built of variegated marbles, and its vast dome, and its noble marble platform, with its flights of steps and light arcades; and the green lawn sloped away all around, and the row of cypress trees under which a company of worshipers were at their prayers. But how could we, coming from a Christian land, attend much to present things, when the sacred Past seemed spread before our eyes? I was looking, almost all the while, to see where the Sheep-gate was, through which the lambs for sacrifice were brought; and the Water-gate, through which the priest went down to the spring of Siloam for water for the ritual purification. I saw where the Temple itself must have stood, and planned how far the outer courts extended,—the Court of the Gentiles, the Court of the Women, the Treasury, where the chest stood on the right of the entrance, and the right hand might give without the left hand knowing; and the place where the scribes sat to teach, and where Christ so taught in their jealous presence as to make converts of those who were sent to apprehend him. I saw whereabouts the altar must have stood, and where arose, night and morning, for long centuries, the smoke of the sacrifices. I saw where the golden vine must have hung its clusters on the front of the Holy Place, and where, again, the innermost chamber must have been,—the Holy of Holies, the dwelling-place of Jehovah, where none but the High Priest might enter, and he only once a year. These places have been familiar to my mind's eye from my youth up; almost as familiar as my own house; and now I looked at the very ground they had occupied, and the very scenery they had commanded, with an emotion that the ignorant or careless reader of the New Testament could hardly conceive of. And the review of time was hardly less interesting than that of place. Here, my thoughts were led back to the early days when David and Solomon chose the ground, and leveled the summit of Mount Moriah, and began the Temple of Jehovah. I could see the lavishing of Solomon's wealth upon the edifice, and the fall of its pomp under invaders who worshiped the sun; and the rebuilding in the days of Nehemiah, when the citizens worked at the walls with arms in their girdles; and in the full glory and security (as most Jews thought) of their Temple, while they paid tribute to the Romans. O! the proud Mohammedans before my eyes were very like the proud Jews, who mocked at the idea that their Temple should be thrown down. I saw now the area where they stood in their pride, and where before a generation had passed away, no stone was left upon another, and the plow was brought to tear up the last remains of the foundations. Having witnessed this heart-rending sight, the Jews were banished from the city, and were not even permitted to see their Zion from afar off. In the age of Constantine, they were allowed to approach so as to see the city from the surrounding hills;—a mournful liberty, like that of permitting an exile to see his native shores from the sea, but never to land. At length, the Jews were allowed to purchase of the Roman soldiers leave to enter Jerusalem once a year,—on the day when the city fell before Titus.

And what to do? How did they spend that one day of the year? I will tell; for I saw it. The mournful custom abides to this day.

I have said how proud and prosperous looked the Mosque of Omar, with its marble buildings, its green lawns, and gaily dressed people,—some at prayer under the cypresses, some conversing under the arcades;—female devotees in white sitting on the grass, and merry children running on the slopes;—all these ready and eager to stone to death on the instant, any Christian or Jew who should dare to set his foot within the walls. This is what we saw within. Next we went round the outside till we came by a narrow, crooked passage, to a desolate spot, occupied by desolate people. Under a high, massive, and very ancient wall, was a dusty narrow space, inclosed on the other side by the backs of modern dwellings, if I remember right. This ancient wall, where the weeds are springing from the crevices of the stones, is the only part remaining of the old Temple wall; and here the Jews come every Friday, to their Place of Wailing, as it is called, to mourn over the fall of their Temple, and pray for its restoration. What a contrast did these humbled people present to the proud Mohammedans within! The women were seated in the dust,—some wailing aloud, some repeating prayers with moving lips, and others reading them from books on their knees. A few children were at play on the ground; and some aged men sat silent, their heads dropped on their breasts. Several younger men were leaning against the wall,—pressing their foreheads against the stones, and resting their books on their clasped hands in the crevices. With some, this wailing is no form; for I saw tears on their cheeks. I longed to know if any had hope in their hearts, that they or their children of any generation should pass that wall, and should help to swell the cry, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, that the King of Glory may come in!" If they have any such hope, it may give some sweetness to this rite of humiliation. We had no such hope for them; and it was with unspeakable sadness that I, for one, turned away from the thought of the pride and tyranny within those walls, and the desolation without, carrying with me a deep-felt lesson on the strength of human faith, and the weakness of the tie of brotherhood.

Alas! all seem weak alike. Look at the three great places of prayer in the Holy City! Here are the Mohammedans eager to kill any Jew or Christian who may enter the Mosque of Omar. There are the Christians ready to kill any Mohammedan or Jew who may enter the church of the Holy Sepulchre. And here are the Jews pleading against their enemies,—"Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem, who said, raze it, raze it, even to the foundation thereof. O, daughter of Babylon that art to be destroyed, happy shall he be that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones!" Such are the things done and said in the name of Religion!

* * *

Principle.—Never confide in the principle of a timid man. He who has no courage cannot be said to have principle; he may be disposed to virtue, and may prefer good to evil, but he is the sport of chance, and the slave of circumstances. What avails the best inclinations if resolution be wanting to put them in practice. A feeble and irresolute man who means well, is more dangerous than an audacious and confirmed villain. You know the latter, and are on your guard against him; you rely upon the good intentions of the former, and discover too late, like the son of Israel, he is unstable as water, and shall not excel. A timid man can never become great; if he possess talent he cannot apply it; he is trampled upon by the envious, and awed by the swaggering; he is thrust from the direct path which alone leads to honor and fame, by every aspirant who possesses more spirit than himself.

A PSALM OF NIGHT.

BY WM. H. BURLEIGH.

Fades from the West the farewell light
  Flung backward by the setting sun,
And silence deepens as the Night
  Steals with its solemn shadows on!
Gathers the soft, refreshing dew
  On spring grass and floweret stems—
And lo! the everlasting blue
  Is radiant with a thousand gems!

Not only doth the voiceful Day
  Thy loving kindness, Lord, proclaim—
But Night, with its sublime array
  Of worlds, doth magnify Thy name!
Yea—while adoring seraphim
  Before Thee bend the willing knee,
From every star a choral hymn
  Goes up unceasingly to Thee!

Day unto Day doth utter speech,
  And Night to Night thy voice makes known;
Through all the earth where Thought may reach
  Is heard the glad and solemn tone—
And worlds, beyond the farthest star
  Whose light hath reached a human eye,
Catch the high anthem from afar
  That rolls along Immensity!

Oh, Holy Father, 'mid the calm
  And stillness of this evening hour,
We, too, would lift our solemn psalm
  To praise Thy Goodness, and Thy Power!
For over us, as over all,
  Thy tender mercies still extend,
Nor vainly shall the contrite call
  On Thee, our Father and our Friend!

Kept by Thy goodness through the day,
  Thanksgivings to Thy name we pour—
Night o'er us, with its stars, we pray
  Thy Love to guard us evermore!
In grief, console—in gladness, bless—
  In darkness, guide—in sickness, cheer—
Till, in the Saviour's righteousness,
  Before Thy throne our souls appear!

HOW TO MOVE THE WORLD.

One day a philosopher come to Athens, from a far country, to learn the ways of the wonderful Greeks and perhaps to teach them the great lore he treasured in his heart. The wise men heard him; sought his company in the gardens; and talked with him in private. The young men loved him. He passed for a wonder with that wonder-loving people. Among those that followed him, was the son of Sophroniscus, an ill-favored young man, a mechanic of humble rank. He was one of the few that understood the dark, oriental doctrines of the Sage, when he spoke of God, Man, Freedom, Goodness, and of the Life that never dies. The young man saw these doctrines were pregnant with actions, and would one day work a revolution in the affairs of men, disinheriting many an ancient sin now held legitimate.

So he said to himself, when he saw a man rich or famous—Oh, that I also were rich and famous, I would move the world so soon. Here are sins to be plucked up, and truths to be planted. Oh, that I could do it all, I would mend the world right soon. Yet he did nothing but wait for wealth and fame. One day the sage heard him complain with himself, and said, Young man, thou speakest as silly women. The gospel of God is written for all. Let him that would move the world move first himself. He that would do good to men begins with what tools God gives him, and gets more as the work gets on. It asks neither wealth nor fame to live out a noble life, at the end of thy lane in Athens. Make thy light thy life; thy thought, action; others will come round. Thou askest a place to stand on hereafter and move the world. Foolish young man, take it where thou standest, and begin now. So the work shall go forward. Reform thy little self, and thou hast begun to reform the world. Fear not thy work shall die!

The youth took the hint; reformed himself of his coarseness, his sneers, of all meanness that was in him. His idea became his life; and that blameless and lovely. His truth passed into the public mind as the sun into the air. His influence passes like morning, from continent to continent, and the rich and the poor are blessed by the light and warmed by the life of Socrates, though they know not his name.

[Parker.

THE OUTSIDE PASSENGER.

Some years ago, a young lady who was going into a northern county, took a seat in the stage-coach. For many miles she rode alone; but there was enough to amuse her in the scenery through which she passed, and in the pleasing anticipations that occupied her mind. She had been engaged as governess for the grand-children of an earl, and was now traveling to his seat. At mid-day the coach stopped at an inn, where dinner was provided, and she alighted and sat down at the table. An elderly man followed, and sat down also. The young lady arose, rang the bell, and addressing the waiter, said, "Here is an outside passenger. I cannot dine with an outside passenger." The stranger bowed, saying, "I beg your pardon, madam, I can go into another room," and immediately retired. The coach soon afterwards resumed its course, and the passengers their places.

At length the coach stopped at the gate leading to the castle to which the young lady was going; but there was not such prompt attention as she expected. All eyes seemed directed to the outside passenger, who was preparing to dismount. She beckoned, and was answered, "As soon as we have attended to his lordship, we will come to you." A few words of explanation ensued, when, to her dismay, she found that the outside passenger, with whom she had thought it beneath her to dine, was not only a nobleman, but that very nobleman, in whose family she had hoped to be an inmate. What could she do? How could she bear the interview? She felt really ill, and the apology she sent for her non-appearing that evening, was more than pretence.

The venerable peer was a considerate person, who knew the way in which the Scripture speaks of the going down of the sun. "We must not allow the night to pass thus," said he to the countess; "you must send for her, and we must talk to her before bed-time." He reasoned with the foolish girl, insisted on the impropriety of the state of mind that it evinced, assured her that nothing could induce him to allow his children to be taught such notions, refused to accept any apology that did not go the length of acknowledging that the thought was wrong—and when the right impression appeared to be produced, gave her his hand.

The Lord of all, before whose judgment seat every human being must hereafter stand, was for a season in the world, and the world knew him not. When he was on the earth, the Son of God was but an outside passenger. With what consternation will many of those who treated him with disdain, recognize in the Almighty Judge of quick and dead, the despised itinerant from Galilee, whom they scorned and derided! And as it was with him, so it is with his living representatives. By far the greater number of those who belong to the court of the Prince of princes, have been outside passengers. What will be the feelings of many who have treated them contemptuously, when they hear the words—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me?"

Happy would it be for the churches of Christ, if all who belong to them were to remember habitually that they also have a Master who is in heaven, and that nothing is more clearly deducible from his instructions, than that every one who desires to enjoy his favor, should be ready at all times to exercise courtesy towards an outside passenger. [London Baptist Magazine.

THE EDUCATION OF THE HEART.

It is the vice of the age to substitute learning for wisdom—to educate the head, and forget that there is a more important education necessary for the heart. The reason is cultivated at an age when nature does not furnish the elements necessary to a successful cultivation of it; and the child is solicited to reflection, when he is only capable of sensation and emotion. In infancy the attention and the memory are only excited strongly by things which impress the senses, and move the heart; and a father shall instil more solid and available instruction in an hour spent in the fields, where wisdom and goodness are exemplified, seen and felt, than in a month spent in the study, where they are expounded in stereotyped aphorisms.

No physician doubts that precocious children, in fifty cases for one, are much the worse for the discipline they have undergone. The mind seems to have been strained, and the foundations for insanity are laid. When the studies of maturer years are stuffed into the head of a child, people do not reflect on the anatomical fact, that the brain of an infant is not the brain of a man; that the one is confirmed and can bear exertion, the other is growing and requires repose; that to force the attention to abstract facts, to load the memory with chronological and historical or scientific detail; in short, to expect a child's brain to bear with impunity the exertions of a man's, is just as rational as it would be to hazard the same sort of experiment on its muscles.

The first eight or ten years of life should be devoted to the education of the heart—to the formation of principles, rather than to the acquirement of what is usually termed knowledge. Nature herself points out such a course; for the emotions are then the liveliest, and most easily moulded, being as yet unalloyed by passion. It is from this source that the mass of men are hereafter to draw their sum of happiness or misery; the actions of the immense majority are, under all circumstances, determined much more by feeling than reflection; in truth, life presents an infinity of occasions where it is essential to happiness that we should feel rightly; very few where it is at all necessary that we should think profoundly.

Up to the seventh year of life, very great changes are going on in the structure of the brain, and demand, therefore, the utmost attention not to interrupt them by improper or over excitement. Just that degree of exercise should be given to the brain at this period, as is necessary to its health; and the best oral instruction, exemplified by objects which strike the senses.

It is, perhaps, unnecessary to add, that at that period of life, special attention should be given, by parents and teachers, to the physical development of the child. Pure air and free exercise are indispensable, and wherever these are withheld, the consequences will be certain to extend themselves over the whole future life. The seeds of protracted and hopeless suffering have, in innumerable instances, been sown in the constitution of the child simply through ignorance of this great fundamental physical law; and the time has come when the united voices of these innocent victims shall ascend, "trumpet-tongued," to the ears of every parent and teacher in the land, "Give us free air and wholesome exercise; leave to develope our expanding energies, in accordance with the laws of our being, and full scope for the elastic and bounding impulses of our young blood."

[London Quarterly Review.

FAITH OF AN INDIAN MOTHER.

If a mother lost her babe she would cover it with bark and envelope it anxiously in the softest beaver skins; at the burial place she would put by its side its cradle, its beads and rattles; and as a last service of maternal love, would draw milk from her bosom in a cup of bark, and burn it in the fire, that her infant might find nourishment in the land of shades. Yet the new born was buried, not as usual, on a scaffold, but by the way-side; so that its spirit might secretly steal into the bosom of some passing matron, and be born again under happier auspices. On burying her daughter, the Chippewa mother adds, not snow shoes, beads, and moccasins only, but (sad emblems of woman's lot in the wilderness) the carrying belt and paddle. "I know my daughter will be restored to me," one said as she clipped a lock of hair as a memorial, "by the lock of hair I shall discover her, for I shall take it with me," alluding to the day when she, too, with her carrying belt and paddle, and the little relic of her child, should pass through the grave to the dwelling place of her ancestors. [Bancroft.

A RAGE FOR FICTION.

"I want a paper that has long stories in it," said a young lady; and she added, "I don't want a paper for any thing else." Poor girl, much to be pitied, and a pitiful appearance she will make through life at the present rate. She wants nothing serious, no acquaintance with the history of her own times, no intellectual cultivation, nothing but newspaper novels; empty heads they must be, that can find room every week for some ten columns of sham story. Yet these are the heads for which the weekly press toils and groans, throwing off by the ten thousand its sheets of shallow, insipid, and disgusting fiction, and for this an amount of money is paid, which a sounder literature utterly fails to command. Yes, Christian fathers and mothers buy this vile trash for their sons and daughters, and so minister to their scepticism, ignorance, loose morals, and destitution of all taste and fitness for life's duties. Doubtless the periodical press does more than any other one instrumentality to decide the opinions, habits of thought, and general character of the age. A family will very soon begin to show a sympathy with its weekly paper, and the parent and child will become assimilated to its sentiment and feeling; and as families are, so is the community at large. Blind and stupid, therefore—yea worse, are those parents who, professing Christian principle, tolerate in their houses a class of papers which are, first good for nothing, then bad—bad as the "Mysteries of Paris," made up of the writings of silly, ignorant scribblers, who would be "at the foot" in a town school, and much more in a school of good morals. Such are the teachers of half the present generation. So says the Boston Reporter.

From the Cumberland Presbyterian.

A LETTER TO CHILDREN.

Dear young friends, I promised to tell you in this letter more about the cruel customs of the heathen. You sometimes feel very sorry for a little boy or girl when its father dies and is buried in the cold grave. But when the father of a little heathen dies, the people make a large fire and put him into it, and then take the poor weeping mother and burn her alive in the same fire. Oh, how sorry the little children must be to see their father and mother burning in the great fire. How very lonesome they must be. They have no father nor mother, no Bible to read, no Sabbath School to attend, and no Christian friend to pray for them and instruct them how to be good.

The London Christian Observer says that in 1799, only 48 years ago, 22 females were burnt alive with the dead body of Unutio a Brahmin. The fire was kept burning 3 days. When the women arrived, a ceremony was performed and they threw themselves into the blazing fire.

The Brahmins are very wicked and ignorant. Sometimes they have a great many wives. We read of one Brahmin who had married 40 wives, and all but 18 had died before him. On this occasion a fire 10 or 12 yards in length was prepared, into which the remaining wives threw themselves and were burnt to death, leaving more than 40 little children without father or mother.

In Bengal, in only 9 years, from 1815 to 1824, 5997 women were burnt as I have described. Oh how many little orphan children were left without father or mother.

But I must tell you something about the cruel sufferings and death they inflict upon their children.

Mr. Kingsbury, who has traveled among the Cherokees, says that hundreds of helpless children have been murdered by them. Sometimes the mother digs a grave when the child is very young and buries it alive.

Sometimes she kills it by stamping it on the breast, by strangling, or knocking it on the head.

It is not long since a missionary saw a Hindoo woman cast her child, 3 or 4 years old, into the river Ganges as an offering to the goddess. The little child caught hold of a raft of Bamboos that happened to be floating by, and cried to its mother for help. But the cruel mother was so determined that the child should not escape, she plunged into the water, tore it away from the raft, broke its neck, and hurled its lifeless corpse into the middle of the current, by which it was soon drifted out of sight.

The Rev. Mr. Stewart has been in India. He says that when a heathen child is sick the mother will not endure the trouble of taking care of it. She stifles its cries, hurries it into a grave already prepared, and tramples to a level the earth under which the offspring of her bosom is struggling in the agonies of death.

The Rev. Wm. Ward says, it is supposed that 10,000 have been murdered in the province of Bengal in one month. They were offered in sacrifice to the Ganges, burnt alive, hung up in baskets on trees to be devoured by ants and birds of prey, or exposed to be torn to pieces by crocodiles, jackalls, and tigers.

Rev. Mr. Ellis says that the barbarity in the South Sea Islands was dreadful. There a warrior might be seen tossing little children and infants, into the air, and catching them on the point of his spear, where they expire in agonies. Another might be seen dragging in savage triumph five or six little helpless children by a chord, which he passed through their heads from ear to ear. Oh how true it is, that 'their sorrows are multiplied that hasten after another god.'

Dear children, how thankful you ought to be, that you have kind mothers to pray for you and take care of you when you are sick. And how thankful you ought to be that you live in a Christian country where the people have the Bible to read, and know that it is wrong to kill children, and burn parents in great funeral fires. Oh how much you ought to strive to send missionaries and the Bible to these poor heathen.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 4, 1847.

SUNDAY TRAVELING.

We are not disposed to trifle with sacred things, or to amuse ourselves with what evidently troubles our conscientious cotemporaries. But we must confess that it is sometimes hard work to restrain our mirth in view of the comments which are made by grave and pious editors upon what they see fit to style 'the sin of traveling on Sunday.' A case of the kind has just come before us, which may be taken as a specimen of many others. A clergyman in Michigan, it seems, learned that some of his brethren, among whom was a reverend doctor, had remained on board one of the lake steamboats, when they might have stopped at an intermediate port on Saturday, and would only have had to remain over until the following Wednesday for another boat. Hereupon he comes out in a long newspaper tirade, charging them with being violators of the divine law, and exposed to the odium and punishment of Sabbath breakers. The editor of the paper, in commenting upon the matter, says very gravely, that he would have screened the names of these "Sabbath-breaking clergymen," and would not have made known their guilt, except for their own benefit.

Now all this may look very pious and praiseworthy to those who take for granted the positions here assumed, viz., that God has commanded men to rest from labor on Sunday, and that a neglect to do so exposes them to the odium and punishment of Sabbath-breakers. But when the facts in the case are considered—when it is remembered that God's commandment applies exclusively to the seventh-day, or Saturday, which this very conscientious reprover of his brethren does himself devote to secular labor—how superlatively absurd and ridiculous, not to say farcical, does the whole matter appear. An open and flagrant law-breaker pleads the sanction of the law which he has broken against those who have traveled on a day of the week concerning the sacredness of which the law says not a word! The folly and inconsistency of such a course needs no comment. An observer of the first day in alluding to it, says, "Let it first be distinctly shown that the law of Moses, which referred to the seventh day, is by a subsequent enactment applied to the first, and is still in full force, before such uncharitableness be manifested toward respectable and good men, and Christian clergymen."

The folly of these men does not generally stop with charging upon their brethren the breach of a law, so-called, which is no law, but only a tradition of men. They must needs go farther, and set themselves in opposition to all efforts for the elucidation and vindication of God's law. When the claims of the true Sabbath are presented to them, and they are urged to observe it, they are ready enough to deny that the fourth commandment is binding in its original strictness, notwithstanding they have used it to sanction the condemnation of their brethren. Sometimes they go even farther than this, and maintain, that if we return to the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, we ought also to stone to death those who break it—thus endeavoring to cast odium upon the day required in the fourth commandment of the Decalogue, by associating it with a statute which has no more to do with the commandment itself than have the various Sunday statutes of the different States of this Union! Such an accumulation of inconsistencies as is found in the arguments and special pleas for the observance of the first day of the week, can not be found in connection with any other religious doctrine or duty which has been debated since the commencement of the Christian era. We do not wonder that there are great numbers of persons who doubt their obligation to keep any Sabbath; nor do we wonder that those who acknowledge their obligation in general terms neglect it when interest tempts them to do so. We wonder, rather, that there are so many who are to any degree restrained by these arguments and appeals, in which such confusion and inconsistency are apparent. The only reason for it is found in the fact that most men feel the need of a day of rest, and although not satisfied with the arguments for the first day, they continue to observe it under the impression that it is about as good as any other.

But to return to this matter of Sunday traveling. We are no advocate of it; on the contrary, we deprecate the state of mind which induces or permits a man to travel on Sunday while he professes to regard that day as a Sabbath. Nevertheless, we can not charge such a man with breaking the fourth commandment, or any other commandment written in the Word of God relative to the Sabbath. To do so, would be to convey a false impression; it would be to seek a good end by bad means—to do evil that good might come, which God forbid. We would rather insist upon the commandment of God as the standard of duty; and though doing so might seem for a time, especially to superficial observers, to unsettle the foundations of Sunday keeping, we are sure it would in the end most effectually promote the cause of the Sabbath. Hence we feel called upon, instead of sympathizing with the popular articles denunciatory of Sunday traveling, to regard and represent them as calculated to continue the deception under which men have long lived in relation to the Sabbath of Jehovah.

Free-Will Baptists.—One of our exchanges says that this denomination is rapidly augmenting its numbers and its influence. The Thirteenth General Conference of the sect was held recently at Sutton, Vt. The foreign delegates, Messrs. Burns and Goadby, were present, and added greatly to the interest of the meeting. The Morning Star reports the names of forty-five ministers present. It appears that the Conference has a large printing establishment, with surplus funds which were disposed of as follows: $1,200 to the Foreign Mission Society; $1,000 to the Home Mission Society; $1,000 to the Education Society; $500 to the Michigan Central College; and $700 toward paying the expenses of a deputation appointed to visit the English General Baptist Association in June next. The $10,000 subscription for the Educational Fund, was filled up; $1,200 to $1,500 was paid or pledged to be paid within a year, to the Foreign Mission cause; $500 or $600 to Home Missions, and some $300 to the Education cause.

THE "LORD'S DAY" AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

"The Lord's Day and the Lord's Supper are kindred institutions—designed to hold forth to the world the death and resurrection of Christ. On the Lord's Day we commemorate his resurrection; in the Supper we commemorate his sufferings and death." [Baptist Memorial.

It is not uncommon for the advocates of Sunday observance, to draw the analogy supposed to exist between the Lord's Supper and the first day of the week, in order to strengthen their argument; supposing that by this device they secure the minds of their hearers to a consideration of a most convincing proof of the divine authenticity of the "Lord's Day" festival, or "Christian Sabbath." A wolf, carefully dressed up in sheep's clothing, and thus proved to be a real specimen of the "flock," would not be a greater outrage upon the truth, than is this anological mode of reasoning in favor of Sunday as a divine institution. There must be more than a similarity of sound in the name, to convert a human into a divine institution. If the two institutions have a common origin, and are memorials of similar events, or events connected with the work of redemption, then, of course, they must have a similar scope and application—they must both of necessity belong to the church. Let the Lord's Day be consistent with its "sister institution," and the world will be delivered from obligation to its observance, as they are from unconditional obligation to celebrate the Supper. Was the Lord's Supper instituted for believers only? So must the Lord's Day be observed by them only. Was damnation to the soul the penalty of eating and drinking unworthily of the Lord's Supper? So unbelievers most grievously sin, and incur divine displeasure by keeping the "Lord's Day." Christian parents might celebrate the Lord's Supper and the Lord's Day, but must be careful not to lead their unbelieving children into condemnation, by allowing them to participate in either institution. Expelled members of churches, being cut off from the communion of the Lord's Supper, should also not be allowed to join in the keeping of the Lord's Day. Thus considered, the first day of the week can most emphatically be called the CHRISTIAN Sabbath—not made for MAN, as was the seventh day—not to be observed by all within thy gates, as was the Sabbath of the Decalogue, but only by the believing members of the family, while the unbelieving portion must drive the ox and the ass to their accustomed employment!! All this follows as a consequence of the false position which Christians assume in regard to the Sabbath. In order to stigmatize the Heaven-appointed day, they call it Jewish! while the heathen day of sun worship is baptized and dignified with the title of CHRISTIAN SABBATH! There is a delusion in regard to this subject, and we urge upon all the words of our Saviour, "Take heed how ye hear." The truth is, neither distinction of Jewish or Christian, belong to the Sabbath. The institution, as it came from the creator's hand, was above all distinctions of age or nation; it was made for all mankind; and no institution of partial or sectional application can properly subvert its force, or destroy its claims to universal regard as "God's holy day." Constantine consecrated the first day of the week to prayer, and thence this heathen festival dates its claim to divine honors. Compared with the Sabbath, it is but of yesterday. In assuming the place of the Sabbath, its arrogance is manifest; and in claiming kindred with the institution of the Supper, its hypocrisy is clearly discovered. It has no locality on the divine chart, was always a human institution, and as such should be regarded by all who search for the good old paths.

SCRUTATOR.

Honor to the Chief Rabbi.—A London paper says that it having been ascertained that a large number of the houses of a certain description, into which young and inexperienced females are inveigled, are kept by persons of the Jewish nation, the present High Priest or Chief Rabbi (Mr. Adler) has, within the last week or two, caused it to be intimated that no member of the Jewish persuasion who is the keeper of an improper house, either directly or indirectly, will be permitted to attend the synagogue, nor be acknowledged as one of the people; that neither their sons nor their daughters shall be allowed to be married according to the Jewish ritual, nor will any of the religious rites be performed at the birth of a child; and should the party die at the time of keeping such a house, he will be refused the rite of sepulture; no prayers will be read, nor will they be interred amongst their forefathers, but be buried behind what are termed the boards, the same as if the party had died accursed.

SOUTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist South-Western Association convened, agreeable to adjournment, with the Church at Lost Creek, Harrison Co., Va., on fourth-day, Oct. 6, 1847. Eld. J. Hill, who was appointed to preach the introductory discourse, not being present, the discourse was delivered by Samuel D. Davis, from Psalm 133—"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity," &c. After prayer by Eld. P. Davis, the Association organized by appointing Bro. ELI BOND, Moderator, and Wm. F. Randolph and Joshua G. Babcock, Secretaries. Brethren present were invited to a seat, and to participate in the deliberations. Jesse M. Davis, Jephtha F. Randolph, and Eli Vanhorn, were appointed a committee to arrange the order of preaching during the meetings. The letters of the several churches were called for and read, from which the following statistics were taken:—

1st. Lost Creek, Va.—Sam'l D. Davis, licentiate; A. Bond, Sen, L. H. Bond, deacons; T. B. Bond, clerk. Added 1, deceased 1, dismissed 1, total 74. Communion 2d Sabbath in March, and once in three months. Constituted in 1805.

2d. New Salem, Va.—P. Davis, eld; L. H. Davis, deacon; J. J. Davis and W. B. Davis, clerks. Added 0, excluded 0, dismissed 1, deceased 0, total 68. Communion 3d Sabbath in February, and once in three months. Constituted in 1745.

3d. Jackson, O.—S. Babcock, pastor; M. Babcock, C. Davis, and J. B. Davis, licentiates; J. Forsyth and J. D. Maxson, deacons; E. Forsythe, clerk. Added 1, dismissed 0, total 36. Constituted in 1840. Communion 3d Sabbath in February, and once in three months. Post-Office address, Pratt, Shelby Co., O.

Stokes, O.—J. Hill. pastor; J. Vanhorn, deacon; J. Simpson, clerk. Added 0, deceased 0, dismissed 0, total 22. Communion first Sabbath in June, and once in three months.

5th. Port Jefferson, O.—No returns.

6th. Northampton, O.—S. Babcock, elder; L. Lippincott, J. G. Babcock, and J. Furrow, licentiates; J. G. Babcock, deacon; A. D. S. Ayres, clerk. Added 2, excluded 2, total 34. Communion 3d Sabbath in June, and once in three months. Post-Office address, Northampton, O. Constituted 1837.

7th. Scioto, O.—C. Clark, deacon; A. D. Graham, clerk. Added 7, deceased 2, excluded 1, total 22. Communion first Sabbath in November, and once in three months. Post-Office address, South Bloomfield, O.

8th. South Fork Hughes' River—No returns.

9th. North Fork Hughes' River—No returns.

10th. Woodbridgetown, Pa.—No returns.

11th. Madison, Jay Co., Ia.—No returns.

J. M. Davis, A. Bee, J. S. Davis, J. J. Davis, and J. G. Babcock, were appointed a committee to report on the State of Religion.

The Association met on fifth-day morning, and after prayer by J. S. Davis proceeded to business. Eli Vanhorn was appointed Treasurer, and Jeptha F. Randolph, Corresponding Secretary. It was agreed that the next Session of the Association should be held with the church in Jackson, Shelby Co., O., to commence on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in October, 1848, at 10 o'clock A. M. L. A. Davis to preach the Introductory Discourse, and Joshua Hill, his alternate.

The Association met on sixth-day morning, according to adjournment, and after prayer by E. Bee, proceeded to business. The report on the State of Religion was called for, read, and adopted. A copy of a resolution passed in the first-day Baptist Association was presented, expressing a willingness to correspond, if this Association wish the same. After considering the matter, the brethren agreed in the conclusion, that, agreeable to the Constitution of this Association, we stand ready at all times to correspond, through a Corresponding Secretary, not only with the Broad Run Association, but with every other body whereby the cause of truth may be advanced. It was resolved, therefore, that our Corresponding Secretary forward a copy of this record to the Broad Run Association.

Resolved, That the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, in its efforts to propagate the gospel in foreign lands, is entitled to the warmest sympathies and vigorous support of our entire denomination; that we anxiously commend the mission in China to the prayers and liberality of the churches; and that we especially request the ministers and churches of this Association to adopt the plan recommended by W. B. Gillett, in the Sabbath Recorder of Feb. 25, 1847.

Wm. F. Randolph was appointed to write the Corresponding Letter, and W. B. Davis to write the Circular Letter for our next Session.

The Secretaries were ordered to revise the minutes of this meeting, and send them to the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder for publication. They were also directed to furnish each church with a copy of the above resolution relative to our foreign mission.

Joshua S. Davis and Joshua Hill were appointed agents to preach on the subject of the Sabbath, and distribute publications.

Report on the State of Religion.

In looking over our beloved Zion, we have great occasion for gratitude for the harmony and union apparent in most of the churches. The churches generally express an ardent desire to stand fast in the truth, and see the work of the Lord prosper. They have been wading through discouragements and trials, yet hope that they may triumph over them all, and at last reap the reward of the faithful. There is not apparent, however, that lively zeal and holy fervor that should characterize the followers of the Lamb, and we have great need to humble ourselves before God, in hope that in due time he will exalt us and visit us with a gracious revival of pure religion.

WM. F. RANDOLPH, Sec.

The new barque Samoset cleared at Boston, for Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, with a cargo valued at $90,000, of which $84,000 are of domestic products. She carries out Rev. Geo. H. Atkinson and lady, of Andover, missionaries to Oregon; and Samuel E. Dwight, of New York, and Henry Kinney and lady, of do., missionaries from A. B. C. M., for Sandwich Island station.

Incidental Influence of Missions.—The American Messenger says that one of the missionaries at the Sandwich Islands, who has recently taken a somewhat extensive tour in the Islands, states that the incidental influence of the Gospel upon the manners and education of the inhabitants is surprisingly great, especially among the people of Hawaii, where, in a few years more of continued prosperity, not a single vestige will be left of their former degradation and heathenism. Schools are rapidly advancing. The common branches are as well taught, in many of the schools, as they were in this country twenty years ago. The children are clean and well-dressed, and the people are rapidly acquiring property.

Mission to the Zulus in South Africa.—The Boston Traveler says that the reinforcement for this mission (Rev. Samuel D. Marsh and wife, and Rev. David Rood and wife) sailed in the bark Wm. H. Shailer. The religious services on board the vessel were conducted by Rev. S. B. Treat, one of the Secretaries of the Board, who earnestly commended the missionary band to the care of Him who ruleth the winds and the waves. The deck of the Wm. H. Shailer was nearly covered by those who had assembled to witness the embarkation, while about as many more stood upon the wharf within the sound of the speaker's voice.

A Colony of Teachers.—The N. Y. Evangelist says that thirty-five young ladies have just left the City of Hartford, under the care of the National Board of Education, for which Ex. Gov. Slade is General Agent. For three weeks they have been passing through a course of preparatory training, under the care of Miss Catharine Beecher. They received their board gratuitously in various families in that city, to whom they endeared themselves by their Christian deportment.

A Rare Case.—The Boston Traveler says that Rev. Jonathan French, of Northampton, N. H., has been the officiating pastor of the Congregational Church in that town for 46 years. He is nearly 70 years of age, has 11 children, and at least 23 grandchildren; and hitherto no death has occurred in his family, or in the family of any of his children. He has occupied the parsonage where he now lives for more than forty years, and no death has ever occurred in it.

Jews in Rome.—Advices from Rome state that an interesting ceremony took place in that city a short time ago, namely, the installation of a Jewish chief Rabbi. It should be observed, that the Jews of the Ghetto, since the death of their high priest Rabbi Beher, a dozen years ago, had not been allowed to appoint a pontiff in succession. The person elected is named Israel Kassan, who was summoned there from the borders of Lake Gennesareth, where he enjoyed a reputation of sancity and Talmudic lore. His birthplace was Jerusalem, and his lineage is said to be traceable for ten centuries through a long Levitical ancestry.

More Missionaries.—Three missionaries of the American Board, says the New York Observer, sailed from Boston on the 23d ult., for the Sandwich Islands—making the number of laborers now under the direction of this Board, upward of 520. The American Baptist Board of Missions have also recently sent out six new missionaries to various stations in Asia; and are expecting to send out eight more, in the ship Cato, the first week in November.

Difficulties of Educated Men in England.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune mentions a singular case, showing the difficulties under which hundreds of educated and talented men labor in England. The complainant in this instance is Richard Birnie, Esq. of Cambridge, Master of Arts, and son of the late Sir Richard Birnie. He says that he is a starving and desperate man—"struggling for bread"—to use his own language:

"I have maintained an unblemished moral character, and preserved the esteem of many friends of rank and wealth. I have edited a country paper; delivered at athenæums and chapels, lectures, literary, historical and religious; taught boys grammar, school masters latin, and prepared students for ordination; taught clergymen to read the liturgy, and Lancashire men to speak English; yet, with testimonials before me that would promote the interest of any man's son, I am starving, and expect to-morrow to be homeless. Last bitter, bitter Winter, after much suffering, I should have perished in the streets, where I was begging for broken victuals, but for the timely succor of the Lord Chief Baron, my sole practical friend."

Mr. Birnie has made repeated applications for employment. One to the vacant chair in a Scotch College, but the rector wrote to him that the post was beneath him, as the salary was only fifteen pounds per annum! Whenever he begs for a job, however low, the reply is to the same effect. If he asks a tradesman for a nominal post, he is mocked by a similar reply. He is willing and able to work and has no false pride, yet he is banished from every path of honest industry, and is refused the common rights of humanity, merely because peer, judge and shopman think so highly of his claims to the notice of the Goverment, on account of his father's valuable public services, that they cannot insult him with either work or alms! In America such a case as this cannot be understood, but it is a sample of hundreds of similar cases in England, and it shows that there is something wrong in the framework of society.

BAPTISTS IN ENGLAND.

A letter in the Baptist Register, from the pen of Rev. A. Wheelock, who recently visited England, contains the following statement:

"There are in England three classes of open-communion Baptist churches.

1. Those who invite to their communion at the Lord's table only such members of evangelical Pedobaptist churches as have been immersed.
2. Those who invite all members of such churches indiscriminately.
3. Those who not only admit Pedobaptists to the Lord's table, but also to membership in their churches. This last union is denominated "mixed membership," and is the consummation of Robert Hall's plan of 'Christian Union.'"

Mr. Wheelock urges very conclusively, that the first of these three positions naturally tends to the second—and that again to the third—and this again to the overthrow of Baptist churches.

Curious Question Raised.—The right of females to assist vocally at the consecration of a synagogue, appears to have been recently a subject of controversy among the Israelites. The Jewish Chronicle has the following paragraph on the subject:

"May females praise God at the consecration of a synagogue? On this curious case of conscience the Rev. Mr. Leo, of this city, has felt himself constrained, it would appear, by some recent occurrences, to take the best rabbinical counsel. Dr. Adler, of London, informshim, in reply—we give the italics as we find them in the Occident—'that it is by no means correct to permit ladies to assist with their vocal powers at the consecration of a synagogue.' And Mr. L. adds, that the Rev. Dr. Lilienthal, Chief Rabbi here, as well as all the learned men I have consulted upon the subject, expressed the same opinion.

The Bible among the Shakers.—We copied last week, from the Boston Traveler, a paragraph implying that the Shakers had not heretofore been altogether favorable to the circulation of the Scriptures. This implication is denied in a communication to the Traveler from a Shaker, from which we copy as follows:—

"The Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, in the common virsion, has always been used in the society of Shakers as a school-book, and is free, at all times, for the perusal of every member and child. I doubt whether there is a workshop or dwelling in the whole Society, where there are not from one to fifty Bibles and Testaments.

"The writer of this article attended, regularly, Sunday-schools more than twenty years since, for months and years, while a lad among the Shakers, in which no other book was read or commented on but the Bible and Testament. This was no doubt the first Sabbath-school ever established in the town of Canterbury, if not in the whole county of Merrimack."

Destitution of the Bible.—The following facts are from the last Quarterly Paper of the American and Foreign Bible Society. They represent a state of things which it is hard to believe exists. An agent, speaking of the destitution in some parts of Pennsylvania, says:

The first house we entered in the neighborhood of A——, that of a Baptist member, had not the Bible! The brother told me—and unblushingly, although his wife manifested some mortification—that he had a Testament, but the whole Bible he did not possess, nor had ever possessed! I cannot tell, but perhaps ten thousand dollars would purchase his farm alone. Subsequently I was at the house of a Baptist deacon; seeing a tattered Bible on the mantlepiece, I took it up to examine it, but lo! a large cobweb was in the way of our opening the leaves; but we opened the book, and turning to Matthew, found that all to the thirteenth chapter was wanting. I inquired of a member of the family if there was another Bible in the house, and was answered in the negative! The only paper or periodical taken by the family, (as I learned by the same authority,) is a weekly secular from Philadelphia.'"

Jews in Jerusalem.—A letter from Rev. F. C. Ewald, published in the Jewish Chronicle, says:—

It appears that the Jewish population in the Holy City has of late increased too rapidly. I suppose that there are not less than 10,000 residing within the walls of their ancient capital, for many are obliged to leave again. I witnessed the departure of more than a hundred on the 13th and 14th of April. It was an affecting sight to see them take leave outside the Jaffa gate of their friends and relations who had accompanied them. They all wept bitterly. The cause of their departure is want of means of support. The contributions from abroad arrive sparingly. From many places where they had formerly received help and assistance, they obtain nothing more, and I am apprehensive that this will be still more the case every successive year. The farther modern infidelity is spread among the Jews in Europe, the less will they feel inclined to maintain their orthodox brethren in the Holy Land. What will become of so large a population when the sources from abroad fail, is easy to foresee; they must either leave or starve.

Liabilities of those who take Periodicals.—The laws declare that any person, to whom a periodical is sent, is responsible for payment, if he receives the paper, or makes use of it, even if he has never subscribed for it, or has ordered it to be stopped. His duty in such a case is not to take the paper from the office or person with whom the paper is left, but to notify the publisher that he does not wish for it.

If papers are sent to a Post-office, Store, or any other place of deposit, and are not taken by the person to whom they are sent, the Postmaster, Store-keeper, &c., are responsible for the payment, until he returns the paper, or informs the publisher that they are lying dead in the office.

General Intelligence.

War New.—No later news has been received direct from Gen. Scott. From Puebla, however, intelligence has been received of an attack by Santa Anna upon our forces under Col. Childs. After some rather sharp fighting, the former withdrew. It is said that the principal part of his men afterward pronounced against him as unworthy to command, attributing the unfortunate state of the war, and the want of success against the invaders, to his incapacity.

Intemperance in England.—The Boston Traveler says that Rev. Mr. Wight, of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, recently delivered a temperance lecture in Manchester, England, which contains many important facts respecting the progress and influence of dram-drinking in England. The lecturer, among other things, stated the whole number of paupers in the country to be 954,295. If this is the pauper population of England alone, it gives one pauper to about every sixteen inhabitants; if this is the pauper population of the United Kingdom, it gives one pauper to about twenty-eight inhabitants. In either case, the story it a frightful one. The chief cause of this frightful pauperism, the lecturer declared to be the drinking customs of the country. To the same cause might be chiefly attributed the fact that there were 114,193 children (according to Parliamentary statistics) without education, in that enlightened country. To the same cause might be ascribed the fact that in a provincial town, in a single year, 16,000 persons had been taken into custody; and that nearly five-sevenths of the entire population of the country neglected habitually public worship on the Sunday.

Mr. Wight farther stated, as illustrative of the benefit of total abstinence, that in those districts in Ireland, where the people had abandoned the use of intoxicating drinks, crime and pauperism had well nigh disappeared; and that scarcely an individual had fallen a prey to famine in any of the teetotal districts. About 500,000 drunkards had been reclaimed in England and Wales; of whom 70,000 had united with Christian churches. And yet it was calculated that the communicants of England alone spend £11,200,000, or fifty-six millions of dollars, in intoxicating drinks; while, for benevolent and religious institutions, their contributions amounted to only about £500,000 or 2 1-2 millions of dollars.

Bears.—The Detroit (Mich.) Free Press says that on the 9th ult., Dr. Dion Birney, (son of James G. Birney,) of Saginaw, was out hunting about a mile from the town, and was attracted by the peculiar noise of two cubs, which were playing in the boughs of a large oak tree. He had with him a double barreled shot gun, and half axe. He discharged his gun several times at them, and finally brought both to the ground. As he was returning, dragging the two, the old bear was seen approaching. Hastily loading his gun, he discharged it, and wounded the bear so that he took a tree. Going up a short distance, he dropped, and immediately attacked the Doctor, who, with his axe, showed fight. The first stroke hit the bear over the eye, but in striking, the Doctor lost his footing, and fell precarious, but rising before the bear could seize him, by a well-directed stroke, finished the bear in question. A wagon was procured, and the whole city regaled with a bear feast.

The Paris Printers.—The printers of Paris have been for some years past in the habit of dining together about the commencement of sutumn. This year, on applying to the Prefect of Police for the customary permission, a refusal was given. The men, finding a public dinner thus rendered impossible, appointed a committee to seek out private premises suited to receive their usual number of guests, namely, 500 or 600 persons. M. Gerges, a master printer, placed at the orders of the committee an enclosed piece of ground in the commune of Vaugirard, and there they erected a large marquee, under which tables were laid out for dinner. The men, on Sunday, were on the point of sitting down to table, when two Commissaries of Police entered, and, in the name of the authorities ordered the men to disperse.

Frightful Accident.—A letter from Christiana, (Norway,) relates that on the 11th of Sept., between four and five in the afternoon, the immense rock which hung over the vast domain of Helsingard, and which several days before had split in many places, came suddenly down and covered an immense space, crushing thirty-four dwelling houses and their inhabitants, estimated at 230 in number. Attempts were immediately made for their release, but after laboring for a week, when the letter was written, only two bodies had been reached, one of a woman, and the other of a child about 7 years old, both lifeless. Only thirteen of the inhabitants of the place escaped this tremendous disaster, which has occasioned a loss of property estimated at 800,000f.

War Pickings.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Tampico, Oct. 9, says: "Col Yates ordered to be paid from the revenue a salary to each officer of the customs at this port, in addition to the compensation received by them from the Government as commissioned officers. The different salaries are from one to three thousand dollars per annum. His own he has fixed at $2,000. It may not be generally known to your readers, that the Colonel's salary and perquisites exceed that received by the Secretary of War. His pay proper, as Colonel, is about $3,000 per annum; as Governor, from the city treasury, $2,400; and as Supervisor of the Customs the same amount—making his compensation annually, about eight thousand dollars. Who would not be a soldier?"

A new journal has just made its appearance Paris, France. It is to serve as a medium of communication between people who want to get married. Ladies in want of husbands, are to write letters to it, setting forth their personal charms, and the amount of their fortunes, together with any other particulars they may think likely to enhance their value in the matrimonial market; and gentlemen are to write similar communications. It is, in fact, to be an advertising paper for would-be wives and would-be husbands."

SUMMARY.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, under date of Oct. 26, says: Sufficient intimations have been thrown out in regard to the orders recently sent to Gen. Scott to convince me that he has been directed, 1st, to trouble himself no longer about truces, armistices, negotiations or protocols; 2d, to leave undisturbed the shadow of a Government now at Queretaro; 3d, to prepare for permanent occupation and for tranquilizing the country; 4th, to disarm the whole population of the cities and country on the road from Vera Cruz to Mexico, and break up and destroy their arms; and 5th, to levy contributions upon the principal cities and States.

In Canada, the mineral wealth is considerable, although only the iron mines of St. Maurice and Batiscan, in Lower Canada, and Marmora in the upper province, have been rendered productive. Iron, coal and lead mines abound in St. Paul's Bay, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, 60 miles below Quebec. A gold mine is said to exist in Mr. De Lery's seigneury, on the west bank of the Chaudiere. A lead mine has recently been discovered in the parish of St. Ursula, district of Three Rivers, nine miles north of the St. Lawrence.

A large eagle was captured near Jamison's Corner, in Warwick township, Berks County, Penn. The Doylestown Democrat says, A small boy went after the cows in the evening, and was attacked by the bird in a furious manner, and after having battled with it unsuccessfully for some time, was relieved by a dog, that at the time came to his rescue. Between the boy and the dog, the eagle had to surrender, and was taken home in triumph, with the assistance of some of the neighbors. It is said to have been a noble bird. Its length from tip to tip was eight feet.

The London Times says:—"Government have received and are considering a most comprehensive plan for the further growth and greater encouragement of the cultivation of cotton in India, so as to make this country, whenever expedient, entirely independent of the United States for the basis of the greatest of our staple manufactures."

The officers of the army and those who have the means of ascertaining the loss sustained by our army since the commencement of the Mexican war, put it down, says the Telegraph, at 20,000 men, whose bodies mingle with the soil of Mexico. The mortality or sacrifice of life at the present time is estimated at fifty soldiers a day! Think of this! Look at it! What trophies have we gained by this sacrifice of life?

By an official correspondence in the Union, we learn that a seaman named Thomas Dennis, belonging to the steam frigate Princeton, now at Gibraltar, lost both his arms while engaged in firing a salute in honor of Prince Demedoff of Russia, who had paid a visit to the vessel. The Prince, on hearing of the accident, settled a life pension of 400 francs per annum on the unfortunate seaman.

There is a beautiful, accomplished and intelligent woman, very respectably connected, now confined in the Tombs, by request of her friends, to keep her from intoxicating drinks. She commenced sipping wine and cordials at her home—among friends! Contemplate the result, and dash aside the delusive glass.

The Sheriff of Allegany County advertises for sale, on the 11th of November, at the office of the company, the Mount Savage Iron Works, Railroad, &c.,c appraised to be worth half a million of dollars. They are to be sold at the suit of John Wright, Robert Samuel Palmer, and Chas. Weld, trustees for the English bond holders, and Wm. F. Carey and John M. Forbes.

The number of emigrants to Canada, who have died in three months, on ship board, and after they were landed, is seven thousand one hundred and forty. A vessel recently arrived at Grosse Isle, from Londonderry, had when she started 366 passengers, eighteen of whom died on the passage, and 129 were landed sick.

Two mulatto children were kidnapped from their mother on Grand River, and run off into the State. The children are girls, both free, and of Cherokee mixture, and were taken by three men, two of whom were recognized as white men. The wretches entered the house, inquired of the mother where her children were, tied them while in bed, in her presence, and took them off—one of them representing himself as the sheriff of Delaware District.

Maj. W. W. Morris, of the 4th Artillery, has received a letter from his brother, Capt. Gouverneur Morris, 4th U. S. Infantry, dated Jalapa, Sept. 15, in which he states that the command to which he was attached, consisting of between 7 and 800 men, in marching from Vera Cruz to Jalapa, lost, in a conflict with the guerrillas, in killed and wounded—one hundred and fifty men, one fifth of the whole force engaged.

A letter from Chicago, Ill., dated the 14th ult., says: "We had a heavy fall of snow last night and this morning. Sleigh bells were heard in the streets at the same time that we were eating green corn for dinner: something unparalleled in the history of the weather."

A process has been invented by a Mr. Lucas, for converting edge tools, nails, &c., made of cast iron, into good steel. It consists in stratifying the cast articles, in cylindrical metallic vessels, with native oxide of iron, and then submitting the whole to a regular heat, in a furnace built for the purpose.

A contract has just been closed with Messrs. Secor & Co., engine builders, for the engines for a steamer four hundred feet long, to ply between this city and Albany. She is to make the passage both ways in twelve hours, leaving here in the morning, and returning in the evening of the same day.

The Springfield Gazette says that the widow of the late Hon. Isaac C. Bates has presented two hundred bound volumes of Congressional documents to the Young Men's Institute in Northampton.

A hard-working mechanic of Boston, named John E. Tucker, has invented a "Boot Crimping Machine," which, with nineteen pairs of "yaws" firmly fixed within a wheel, makes at every revolution eleven pairs of "uppers," crimped in the most perfect manner.

The Commercial Advertiser says that in September, 1846, a broker of this City had a small draft on the Farmers' Bank of Amsterdam, and inclosed it by mail, with directions to remit the money. The request was not complied with, and on writing again to Amsterdam, it was ascertained that the letter containing the draft had not been received. Subsequent inquiries were made, but no trace of it could be found until the other day, when it came back to the broker, covered with European postmarks, including Amsterdam, Rotterdam, and we know not how many other dams, having been absent more than thirteen months. After being furnished with a new envelop, the draft was again sent off to Amsterdam—the broker being careful to add, (which he did not before) Montgomery Co., New York.

An ingenious down-easter, who has invented a new kind of "Love-letter Ink," which has been selling as a sure safeguard against all actions for breaches of marriage promise, inasmuch as it entirely fades from paper in two months from date, was recently most awfully done brown by a brother down-easter, who purchased a hundred boxes of the article, giving him therefor his note at ninety days. At the expiration of the time, the ink inventor called for payment, but, on unfolding the scrip, found nothing but a piece of blank paper. The note had been written with his own ink.

An atrocious murder was committed in this city on Friday morning of last week. It seems that a poor painter in Ann-st. owed his apprentice a portion of his earnings, and could not or did not pay him. The apprentice, who is a vicious, reckless youth from Philadelphia, is supposed, after making repeated applications for his due, to have taken a piece of iron and knocked his employer on the head, so fatally that he died soon after.

A man who was engaged in blasting upon the line of the contemplated railroad from Nashua to Worcester, was blown twelve feet into the air by the premature explosion of a blast. When he was reached, he was senseless, and was supposed to be dead. But to the surprise of all, he soon recovered, and did not appear to have been much injured materially by his aërial journey, save perhaps a decided darkness of the complexion from the powder.

We learn from the Bangor Courier that a few days since a lady, closely veiled, called at the house of the Secretary of the Female Orphan Asylum and handed to the Secretary a neat note and then departed. The letter contained two one hundred dollar bills and a single line announcing the fact that the money was a donation to the Asylum. The name of the giver of this generous gift, so modestly bestowed, is yet unknown.

Nathan Lampman, of Coxsackie, N. Y., who is now 16 years of age and seven feet one inch in height, bids fair to become a man of higher standing in the world than any man now living, having grown nine inches during the past year, and, on the usual rules of growth, will probably reach at least one foot more. He weighs 162 pounds.

The Michigan Central Railroad Company have presented the widow of the late engineer who was killed on the road, $500. Subscriptions are in circulation throughout the line of the road in her behalf, and about $300 more is already subscribed.

Dr. Davis, of South Carolina, having established a model farm near Constantinople, under the patronage of the Sultan, has succeeded in raising cotton which bids fair to equal the American staple, both in quality and productiveness.

Mr. Harmon, of Cleveland, Ohio, has invented a new method of taking portraits by the daguerreotype, whereby all the outlines are like the common portraits, but having a fine gold color.

The whole of the crops of wheat and oats of four of the Mormon farmers, who are settled in Iowa, were set on fire and destroyed on the night of the 14th of September.

G. S. Webb of Buffalo is nominated for Member of Assembly, and Mr. Follett of Batavia for Canal Commisioner, both typos by trade.

The Cathedral at Salisbury has in it as many windows as there are days in the year, as many marble pillars as hours, and as many doors as months.

The highest shot tower in the world is the Merchant's Tower, in Pittsburg, being 250 feet, 1 foot higher than that of Villack Carinthia.

In the city of London, with about a million and a half of inhabitants, the deaths average about 1,000 per week and the births about 1,200.

Among the exports from Boston, was a case of baby jumpers, for the use of the Spanish señoras in the West Indies.

The Catholic priest who restored the money and papers robbed from Mr. Holten, at Baltimore, which came into his hands through the Romish rite of confession, refused to testify in court on the subject, and was sustained by the court in his refusal.

Watches only one-eighth of an inch thick are now maufactured at Geneva, the hands being placed on a dial aside from the movement, instead of being in front.

Mr. Longworth, of Cincinnati, has made from his last season's vintage of Catawba Grapes 6000 bottles of Champaigne, which promises to be of superior quality.

The Tribune says that the late Peter G. Stuyvesant left an annuity of $1,000 to Bishop Onderdonk, on condition that he resigned his office.

Mr. W. Beals, of Boston, has invented a cannon ball so constructed that when it leaves the gun, four long knives extend from its sides to quarter those it may hit.

Partridges are so abundant in Iowa that one individual at Burlington last year took 13,820 of them, the year before 9,000, and this fall expects to take 10,000.

The estate belonging to the heirs of the late Gov. Fenner, of Rhode Island, situated in the center of the city of Providence, was sold at auction to Samuel Dexter, Esq., for $124,950.

A great conflagration occurred at Achangel, in Russia, about two months since, which destroyed five hundred buildings. The quarter occupied by foreigners escaped.

The citizens of Troy have presented Gen. Wool with a splendid sword. The scabbard is richly engraved with numerous battle scenes, arms, and banners, and other suitable devices, and bears the following inscription: "Queenstown, Oct. 13, 1812; Plattsburg, Sept. 11, 1814; Buena Vista, Feb. 22 and 23, 1847."

The train of cars going westward on the Central Railroad, Michigan, ran off the track, and the locomotive fell down an embankment twelve feet high, and landed bottom side up, with the engineer underneath, and so fastened that immediate extrication was impossible. He was killed, but the passengers escaped uninjured.

A new Baptist Church, just erected, and nearly completed, on St. Francis street, in Mobile, was destroyed by fire. The Advertiser says that it was a beautiful edifice, and erected at a heavy expense. The fire was evidently the work of an incendiary.

It was decided in the Boston Court of Common Pleas, in the case of William White, vs. Asaph E. Buss, that money lent at a card table while the parties were playing is not recoverable at law.

The Mormon Prophet Strang, has ordered all his followers to Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan. He has bought up that spot, containing 40 square miles, and expects to gather the Mormons there this fall.

Grace Aguilar, the author of so many popular works in favor of the Jews, and urging their claims to free and equal civil and religious rights, throughout the civilized world, died on the 10th of September, at Frankfort, in her 32d year.

A soldier was sworn into the service of the United States at Cincinnati, last week, who was in the battles of Palo Alto, Monterey, and Buena Vista, and in the last one fell and was left for dead upon the field, reported as dead to headquarters, and published as dead in the official dispatches.

The American Bible Society have resolved to publish an edition of the Bible in the Danish language. It is said that there are now more than twenty thousand Danes in Illinois and Wisconsin, and that two thousand more are expected to join them in the coming Spring.

The Government of Peru is indebted to English creditors to a very large amount, and it is a curious fact that the debt can only be liquidated by the sale of Peruvian Guano.

A patent has been taken out for dispensing with sewing, in the manufacture of shirts, collars, and linen articles. The pieces are fastened together by indissoluble glue.

The "Needle Woman's Friend" is the name of a Society lately organized by the benevolent ladies of Boston. Its object is to open a market for the sale of articles manufactured by poor seamstresses.

At the late Cattle Show, in Hampshire Co., Mr. Edward Graves, of Northampton, exhibited 15 ears of corn, grown the present season from a single seed. After being shelled, the seeds were counted, and the product 3,767.

A man by the name of Clark, a resident of Quebec, walked on the 9th ult., 50 miles within 11 hours and 22 minutes. Of this time, he stopped 50 minntes for refreshments—so that the actual walking time was only 10 hours and 27 minutes.

In Salem (Mass.) Post Office, the increase on receipts for nine months of 1847, over the same period in 1846, is $1,116 72; increase in number of letters, 9,312.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, NOV. 1.

ASHES—Pots $6 56; Pearls 8 50.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 62; Oswego and Michigan 6 56. Meal 3 25 for State, and 3 50 for Jersey. Rye 5 00

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 46; Ohio 1 40. Corn 74 a 78c. Rye 96c. Oats 50c.

PROVISIONS—Mess Pork 14 87; Prime 10 62. Beef 6 75 a 9 75. Butter 11 a 13c. for Ohio, and 14 a 18 for table. Cheese 6½ a 7½c.

MARRIED,

In Friendship, N, Y., Oct. 7, 1847, by Wm. H. King, Esq., Mr. Enoch K. Crandall to Miss Persis Farr, both of Friendship.

In Berlin, N. Y., Oct. 23, by Eld. J. E. Scott, Mr. Christopher Brown, Jr., to Miss Abigail Kendal, all of Berlin.

DIED,

In Hounsfield, on the 16th inst., at the residence of her son, Henry Brown, of apoplexy, Mrs. Ruth Brown, relict of Eleazer Brown, Esq., in the 77th year of her age. Mrs. B. made a public profession of religion in early life, and for more than half a century was an exemplary and valuable member of the visible church. "As a shock of corn cometh in, in his season," so has this mature disciple of the Redeemer been gathered to her rest. She was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church.

In Stonington, Ct., Sept. 23d, Harriet Maria, daughter of John W. and Lucetta Spicer, in the seventeenth year of her age.

His time was short; he did not live
Life's bitter cup to drain—
To toil in search of happiness,
And find his efforts vain.

But oh! he died, that cherub boy,
Like some ill-blighted flower,
And yielded up his early breath
In childhood's happy hour.

In Hopkinton, R. I., September 17th, Charles H. Spicer, son of George H. and Harriet Spicer, aged six months and twenty-seven days.

"As vernal flowers, that scent the morn,
But wither in the rising day,
Thus lovely was this infant's dawn,
Thus swiftly fled his life away.

He died to sin; he died to care;
But for a moment felt the rod;
Then, rising on the viewless air,
Spread his light wings, and soared to God."

In Friendsdip, Oct. 19, 1847, very suddenly, of croup, William Deloss, son of Thomas and Diana M. Clarke, aged 2 years, 2 months, and 3 days.

LETTERS.

Daniel Coon, Joseph Goodrich, John Edwards, H. W. Stillman, J. Sherman, M. Whipple, H. P. Burdick, Geo. Tomlinson, R. W. Utter.

RECEIPTS.

F. W. & J. Potter, Hopkinton,	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Phebe Potter, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Rob't Burdick, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Oliver Babcock, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Geo. S. Burdick, Milton, W. T.	2 00	"	4	" 52
Sam'l Hamilton, "	2 00	"	5	" 44
Leonard Woolworth, "	2 00	"	4	" 20
Abel Babcock, "	2 00	"	3	" 52
G. Tomlinson, Roadstown, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
Lois Edwards, Little Genesee,	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Saunders, Almond,	2 00	"	4	" 13
Elliott Smith, West Genesee,	2 00	"	4	" 19
Porter Witter, Nile,	2 00	"	4	" 13

NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its semi-annual meeting at Pawcatuck, R. I., on the 4th day of the week next preceding the 3d Sabbath in November (17th of the month) at 10 o'clock A. M. Thos. B. Brown, Rec. Sec.

MISSIONARY NOTICE.

The regular Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, will be held in the city of New York on the evening of the first first-day in November, (7th day of the month,) 1847.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto. gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FIRESIDE READING

For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.

"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.

"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author.

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	" "	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	" "	April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

STATE OF NEW YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, August 3d, 1847.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir—Notice is hereby given, that at the next general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday in November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

STATE—A Secretary of State, Comptroller, State Treasurer, Attorney General, State Engineer and Surveyor, Three Canal Commissioners, and Three Inspectors of State Prisons.

DISTRICT—One Senator for the Third Senate District, consisting of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Wards of the city of New York; One Senator for the Fourth Senate District, consisting of the Seventh, Tenth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth Wards of the said city; One Senator for the Fifth Senate District, consisting of the Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth Wards of the said city; and One Senator for the Sixth Senate District, consisting of the Eleventh Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Eighteenth Wards of the said city.

COUNTY—Also the following officers for the said city and county, to wit:—Sixteen members of Assembly—One to be elected in each Assembly District.

Yours, respectfully,
N. S. BENTON, Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 5th, 1847.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided. J. J. V. WESTERVELT,
Sheriff of the City and County of New York.

☞ All the public newspapers in the county will publish the above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See revised Statute, vol 1, chap. 6, title 3, article 3d, part 1st, page 140. Sept. 2, te.

Miscellaneous.

FOUR GRAVES.

Beside a cheerful, winter fire,
Three children drew their little chairs,
And laughed and talked with guileless tongues,
Of toys, and sports, and childish cares.

Their mother, with an aspect meek,
Was smiling at their feintless joy,
While frequent from her knee she raised
And kissed her beauteous infant boy.

But oh! that hearth—the fated shrine!
That idol of her full heart's all;
There sorrow fixed her sable throne,
And gloom o'erspread it like a pall!

Death came with secret, silent tread,
And touched them in the vernal hours;
And one by one their pulses ceased,
They withered like the gentle flowers!

Meekly the mother bowed her head,
While from her eyes the tear-drops came,
"The Lord did give, and take away,
And blessed be His holy name."

Beneath the village church-yard turf,
Four little graves are side by side;
And one large slab, that covers all,
Tells who they are and how they died!

ADVENTURES WITH A LION.

The following fact will show the fearful danger to which solitary travelers are sometimes exposed. A man belonging to Mr. Schmelen's congregation, at Bethany, returning homewards from a visit to his friends, took a circuitous course in order to pass a small fountain, or rather pool, where he hoped to kill an antelope to carry home to his family. The sun had risen to some height by the time he reached the spot, and seeing no game, he laid his gun down on a shelving low rock, the back part of which was covered over with a species of dwarf thorn-bushes. He went to the water, took a hearty drink, and returned to the rock, smoked his pipe, and being a little tired, fell asleep. In a short time the heat reflected from the rock awoke him, and opening his eyes, he saw a large lion crouching before him, with its eyes glaring in his face, and within little more than a yard of his feet. He sat motionless for some minutes, till he had recovered his presence of mind, then eying his gun, moved his hand slowly towards it; the lion seeing him, raised its head, and gave a tremendous roar; he made another and another attempt, but the gun being far beyond his reach, he gave it up, as the lion seemed well aware of his object, and was enraged whenever he attempted to move his hand. His situation now became painful in the extreme; the rock on which he sat became so hot that he could scarcely bear his naked feet to touch it, and kept moving them, alternately placing one above the other. The day passed, and the night also, but the lion never moved from the spot; the sun rose again, and its intense heat soon rendered his feet past feeling. At noon the lion rose and walked to the water, only a few yards distant, looking behind as it went, lest the man should move, and seeing him stretch out his hand to take his gun, turned in a rage, and was on the point of springing upon him. The animal went to the water, drank, and returning, lay down again at the edge of the rock. Another night passed; the man, in describing it, said he knew not whether he slept, but if he did, it must have been with his eyes open, for he always saw the lion at his feet. Next day, in the forenoon, the animal went again to the water, and while there, he listened to some noise apparently from an opposite quarter, and disappeared in the bushes. The man now made another effort, and seized his gun; but on attempting to rise, he fell, his ankles being without power. With his gun in his hand, he crept towards the water, and drank, but looking at his feet, he saw, as he expressed it, his "toes roasted," and the skin torn off with the grass. There he sat a few moments, expecting the lion's return, when he was resolved to send the contents of the gun through its head; but as it did not appear, tying his gun to his back, the poor man made the best of his way on his hands and knees, to the nearest path, hoping some solitary individual might pass. He could go no farther, when, providentially, a person came up, who took him to a place of safety, from whence he obtained help, though he lost his toes, and was a cripple for life.

Mr. Moffat says, with all their boldness, lions are sometimes great cowards.

"On one occasion a man coming unexpectedly on a lion, fainted. The lion raised himself to look over the bushes, and seeing no one, seemed to suspect a plot, and scampered off with his tail between his legs. It is but justice to add, that the man was no less cowardly; for, on awaking from his swoon, and looking this way and that, he imagined the object of his terror was still there, and taking to his heels, he made towards the wagon. I have known Bushmen, and even women, drive the lion away from the prey he had just seized, by beating their clubs on dry hides, and shouting; nevertheless, by day, and especially by night, he is an object of terror. Such subjects as these served sometimes to amuse our evening ours; more frequently, however, I requested my companions to propose questions on Scriptural and other important subjects, in answering which I had an opportunity of communicating much useful and edifying instuction." [The Buchuans.

DESPERATE DEPRAVITY.

The New York Correspondent of the Baptist Register says that some most startling instances of depravity are brought to light by the detection of criminals in our courts, as well as in the courts of our sister city. Mr. Hotchkiss, a very respectable gentleman of Brooklyn, was knocked down, robbed, and left for dead in one of the streets of that city, on the third of May last. Though by the most persevering efforts his life has been preserved, yet by the injuries he sustained, he has entirely lost the faculties of his mind, and will doubtless, for the residue of his life, be a helpless imbecile. A man by the name of Baily has lately been tried as one of the persons who attempted to assassinate Mr. H., and having been found guilty, has been sentenced to the State Prison for life. The history of this man, as it has recently come to light, presents an instance of incorrigible wickedness rarely equaled.

He was, at the age of sixteen years, sentenced to transportation for life, in an English court for burglary. He remained at Van Dieman's Land for several years, and secreted himself on board a whaling vessel, for the purpose of making his escape. His absence was discovered before the vessel sailed, and as it was suspected that he was on board the whaler, the authorities had lances thrust among the oil barrels in order to ascertain whether Baily was on board or not. He was secreted near the kelson, perfectly safe, as he thought; having a friend in one of the sailors to furnish him with food. The searchers in thrusting down the lance passed it through his leg. Baily knowing that if blood was found on the instrument he would be discovered, took a handkerchief from his pocket, and wiped the blade as it was withdrawn from the wound, thereby escaping discovery. The vessel was afterwards smoked with brimstone, but he succeeded in keeping his place, and remained in it for thirty days after the vessel left port, living on what his friend, the sailor, secretly furnished him. Baily has written out his own history, which has been promised for publication. In crime it almost equals that of "Jack Shepard." He left his parents at the age of seven years, and subsisted by petty thefts until twelve, before being detected. He was then tried and imprisoned. He was twice tried in England, and transported for life, and each time made his escape; the second time to this country. He here entered the naval service, robbed the vessel in which he was of a large amount of money, which he thrust into one of the guns, was caught—flogged through the fleet then in the Mediterranean—again reached America, and was sent to the State Prison for knocking down and robbing a boy of a large amount of bank bills, in Wall street, in broad daylight. Having served out his time, about six months since, he was turned adrift; since when he has committed several robberies. The last in which he was concerned was that of Bennett, at Williamsburgh, which was committed some three days after he and his comrades attempted to assassinate Mr. Hotchkiss.

AN EDITOR NOT A GENTLEMAN.

Marcanson, of the Dayton Transcript, tells the following good one, as a spark of his experience:—

We have traveled some 1500 miles, within the last few days, by land and water. The tavern keepers, steamboat captains, &c., have uniformly chalked our hat, and indignantly refused to permit us to pay our way. In short, upon the 'raging canawl,' upon the expansive lake, in the packets, hotels, and floating palaces of Lake Erie, we have had a 'free blow,' and uniformly been regarded among the 'dead heads.' This you will regard as a very agreeable and advantageous way of traveling. But there was one 'free blow' we received, which came near knocking us into the middle of next week. The incident is so comical that we will relate it, if the joke is at our own expense.

While on board one of the splendid steamers which ply between Buffalo and Chicago, the fuz on our chin grew rather longer than was agreeable, and we repaired to the barber shop on board to have it taken off. The fellow did it up in first rate style. After he had combed and oiled our head, brushed our clothes, and slicked us up fine, we felt gratified, pulled out a dime, and proffered it to him as a reward for his services. He drew himself up with considerable pomposity—

"I understand," said he, "dat you is an editor."

"Well, what of it?" said we.

"We nebber charge editors nofin," said he.

"But, my wooly friend," said we, "there are a good many editors traveling now-a-days, and such liberality on your part will prove a ruinous business."

"Oh, nebber mind," said he, "we makes it all up off de gemmen."

POWER OF IMAGINATION.

An honest New England farmer started, on a very cold day in winter, with his sled and oxen, into the forest, a half mile from home, for the purpose of chopping some wood. Having felled a tree, he drove the team alongside, and commenced chopping it up. By an unlucky hit he brought the whole bit of the axe across his foot, with a sidelong stroke. The immense gash so alarmed him as to deprive him of all strength. He fell, the warm blood filling his shoe. With great difficulty he succeeded in rolling himself on to the sled, and started the oxen for home. As he reached the door he called eagerly for help. His terrified wife and daughter with much effort lifted him into the house, as he was wholly unable to help himself, saying his foot was nearly severed from the leg. He was laid carefully on the bed, groaning all the while very bitterly. His wife hastily prepared dressings, and removed the shoe and sock, expecting to see a desperate wound, when, lo! the skin was not even broken. Before going out in the morning he wrapped his feet up in red flannel, to protect them from the cold; the gash laid this open to view, and he thought it flesh and blood. His reason not correcting the mistake, all the pain and loss of power which attends a real wound followed. Man often suffers more from imaginary evils than real ones.

'OUT OF THAT.'

Take your fingers out of that bowl, boy? What, its only a lump of sugar, is it? A lump of sugar, hey!

'Great aches from little toe corns grow.'

Remember that, boy, as long as you live. Only a lump of sugar, is it? It is only fourpence ha'penny, says the shop boy running his hand into his master's drawer! It is only a five dollar bill, says the larger clerk, rumpling the note in his pocket! It's only a fifty spot, says the head clerk as he figures up his cash book! It's only a thousand, says the cashier! It's only a few hundred thousand, says Swartwout.

See how your lump of sugar has accumulated, youngster! It isn't the value of the saccharine matter we are thinking of; it is the principle of the thing. A boy-rogue will very likely be a man-rogue. The child is father of the man. Honesty is the best policy. Never do a dishonest act, no matter how trivial it may be. These little beginnings—ah, they play the mischief with one's morality. A rogue may escape detection—some rogues do; but they always feel and look as though they had a halter around their necks.

No, my little fellow, if you want a lump of sugar, come and ask for it manfully, but mind, now, keep your fingers out of the bowl!

MUSIC IN THE FAMILY.

Its beneficial effects may not be doubted. No family should fail to encourage the largest possible amount of musical talent. Independent of its happy influences on the mind, it should be fostered on account of its physical advantages. The late Dr. Rush said, "The Germans rarely die of consumption, because they are always singing."

If this beautiful accomplishment tends in any degree to mitigate a malady so terrible, for the world's sake, let us have a world of it. But there are other reasons; it induces amiability, and banishes bad passions.

We have somewhere read the testimony of an excellent clergyman, possessing much knowledge of human nature, who instructed a large family of daughters in the ordinary practice of music. They were observed to be amiable and happy. A friend inquired if there was any secret in his mode of education, to which he replied,

"When anything disturbs their temper, I say to them, sing; and if I hear them speaking against any person, I call them to sing to me; and they sing away all couses of discontent, and every disposition to scandal."

Such a use of this accomplishment, might seem to fit a family for the company of angels; young voices around the domestic altar, breathing sacred music at the hour of morning and evening devotion, are a sweet and touching accompaniment. [Neal's Gazette.

SINGULAR MAGNETIC ATTRACTION OF MUD.—Sir A. Mackenzie was the first to notice the attractive power of the mud at the bottom of some of the lakes of North America, which is sometimes so great that boats can with difficulty proceed along the surface. This extraordinary fact is thus stated: "At the portage or carrying place of Matress, on Rose Lake, the water is only three or four feet deep, and the bottom is muddy. I have often plunged into it a pole twelve feet long with as much ease as if I merely plunged it into water. Nevertheless, this mud has a sort of magnetic effect on the boats, which is such that the paddles can with difficulty urge them on. This effect is not perceptible on the south side of the lake, where the water is deep, but it is more and more sensibly felt as you approach the opposite shore. I have been assured that loaded boats have often been in danger of sinking, and could only be extricated by being towed by lighter boats. As for myself, I have never been in danger of foundering, but I have several times had great difficulty in passing the spot with six stout rowers, whose efforts could scarcely overcome the attraction of the mud. A similar phenomenon is observed on the Lake Saginaw, where it is with difficulty that a loaded boat can be made to advance; but fortunately the spot is only four hundred yards over." This statement has since received confirmation from Capt. Back, and others, during the arctic land expedition. [Mining Journal.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A SHEPHERD AND A DROVER.—We listened, with heartfelt satisfaction, the other day, to a sermon by a dear brother who has recently drunk copiously at the deep flowing River of Life—so much so that he knows how to "feed the flock of God over which the Holy Ghost has made him overseer." During his sermon he related this anecdote: A lady, he said, eminent for piety said to him one day—"Sir, I can always tell the difference between a shepherd and a drover. The shepherd always goes before his flock and feeds them. The drover goes behind with a large whip, makes a great noise and flourish, but never feeds well." Now says the preacher, I have no doubt God's children sometimes need chastisement, but he has not given that work into our hands. He has reserved the rod in his own hands, for he knows infinitely better than we do when chastisement is necessary.

THAT OLD TEA-KETTLE.—Don't throw away that old cracked tea-kettle, I say, said Aunt Patty Parley. It is one of the most useful articles in the pot closet. When you have a cracked tea-kettle, then you have the best thing in the world for cooking potatoes. Wash them, cut off the end where the eyes are thick, and then put them in the tea-kettle without any water, and hang it over a moderate fire, and in half an hour or so, you will have your potatoes baked, dried and mealy, and just the very thing for a good dinner. The nose of the kettle allows all the moisture of the vegetable to escape, and a cracked tea-kettle is essential to good eating.

SERVIAN CHARM TO OBTAIN RAIN.—A maiden is divested of her usual garments and so wrapped round with grass, herbs, and flowers, that hardly any part, even of her face, can be seen. She is called the Dodola, and in this state, like a walking bundle of grass, she goes from house to house: the housewife then pours a pailful of water over her as a smybol. Her companions chant a prayer for rain, and the people feel almost certain of obtaining their object. They have a song expressly composed for the occasion; its purport is that the clouds should outrun the procession and bedew the grapes and corn as it advances.

INFLUENCE OF THE PERIODS OF THE DAY UPON BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Dr. Caspar has arrived at the following conclusions: "The greatest number of births occur between nine o'clock in the evening and six in the morning, whilst the smallest number occur between six o'clock in the morning and nine in the evening. Individually regarded, the ratio of deaths from inflammations, phthisis, and pulmonary hemorrhage, is greater in the afternoon; from fevers and exanthemata, just before midnight; from cerebral apoplexy, during the day; and from diseases of the nervous system in general, in the hours which immediately follow midnight."

The Courier de Lyon relates that a few days since the priest of a town near the Loire, while returning from receiving his salary, riding a spirited horse, was stopped by two robbers, who took all his money and exchanged horses, not losing by the exchange. On returning home and examining his new steed, he found tied to the saddle a bag containing 2,000 francs, and before he could ascertain the extent of his riches, his horse, which had thrown its rider, came running home.

VARIETY.

A certain preacher somewhere, it may be in Boston, had concluded, being in debt, to sell a part of his library, to meet his expenses. One of his parishioners, learning his circumstances, canceled with his own means, bills against him for fifty-five dollars, made a call at his minister's house, conversed a while, presented a paper containing a receipt, and bade him 'good night.' The Christian Watchman says, 'We will warrant the poor minister preached the next day, with, at least, a third more life and vigor, than he would have done, had not this agreeable incident occurred the evening previous.' We should not wonder.

The famous philosopher, the really great Czar Peter, of Russia, whose memory will ever be the admiration of Europe, always rose two hours before day, and when he saw the morning break, would express his wonder that any man should be so stupid as not to rise every morning to behold one of the most glorious sights in the universe. "Men take delight," said he, "in gazing on a picture, the trifling work of a mortal, and at the same time neglect one painted by the Deity himself. For my part," added he, "I am for making my life as long as I can, and therefore sleep as little as possible."

At the recent presentation of plate to Mr. S. P. Westhead, by the shareholders of the Manchester and Birmingham portion of the London and North Western Railroad Company, Capt. Huish stated, that the number of servants employed by the company, exclusive of about 2000 plate layers, was 6418; and that in a period stretching over 19 years, from the time at which the Manchester and Liverpool line was opened, the company had carried 55,000,000 passengers, while the late unfortunate accident at Wolverton was the first calamity that had occurred.

The cream, of which butter is made, consists of minute globule,s about one-ten-thousandth part of an inch in diameter, each surrounded by a transparent pellicle of film, that prevents them from adhering to one another. During the agitation of churning, these little pellicles break, and the fatty portions of the globules unite into a mass, forming butter, whilst the buttermilk is left behind which consists principally of cassein, (the basis of cheese,) milk sugar and a watery fluid, called serum.

A short time ago, at Capenherst, England, a hen belonging to a farmer took it into her head to build a nest, and laid several eggs in a field adjoining his house. During the same interval a partridge also laid several eggs in the same nest. When the period for incubation arrived, the hen first began to sit. Not long, however, had she been in possession before the partridge made her appearance, when a general fight took place. The partridge proved conqueror, hatched the eggs, and the varied brood now range the fields together, the chickens equally as wild as the young partridges.

A French æronaut, named Rosset, made an ascent at Bagdad last month, which excited the utmost astonishment amongst the spectators, totally unaccustomed to such sights. The weather becoming cloudy the balloon disappeared. M. Rosset, in descending fell into the Tigris, and escaped with some difficulty. Meanwhile, a report prevailed amongst the population, that he had gone to the moon, so that when he appeared in public, he was such an object of curiosity, that the French Consul was obliged to demand a detachment from the Pacha to protect the house in which he resided.

An old-fashioned writer, who is a great friend and admirer of women, says, "We know of no situation in which a lady appears to more advantage than in the care of a garden. Surrounded by her plants, with their beautiful blossoms, she resembles Persephone gathering flowers, admired and celebrated in the olden time. Healthful, happy and unostentatious, she combines pleasure and utility. Could the ladies only imagine how much exercise adds to their charms, we should hear less of shawls costing fortunes, and more of matrimonial felicity."

Nothing can be imagined more luxurious, in the way of seat, than a first class French car. You sit upon figured white silk or damask, and cushions yielding to your slightest movement. You have them at your side, you have them for your head. Brussels carpet to tread upon, silk curtains to shut out the sun, and their construction below is such that you feel no jar, but seem to be swimming through the air.

It is stated that the muddy creeks and shoals around Bombay, in the East Indies, abound with a species of fish which produce the most exquisite music like a musical bell, or the strains of an Æolian harp. The fish closely resembles in size and shape the fresh-water perch of the North of Europe. It is supposed that the fish are confined to particular localities—shallows, estuaries, and muddy creeks rarely visited by Europeans; and that is the reason why hitherto no mention, as far as we know, has been made of this peculiarity in any work on natural history.

An Illinois lawyer, defending a thief, wound up his speech to the jury in behalf of his injured client, with the following rousing appeal:—"True, he was rude—so are our bars. True, he was rough—so are our buffalers. But he was a child of freedom, and his answer to the despot and the tyrant was, that his home was in the bright setting sun."

The body of a young Swedish miner was lately discovered in one of the mines of Dalecarlia, fresh, and in a state of perfect preservation, from the action of the mineral waters in which it had been immersed. An old woman of seventy recognized it as the body of her former lover, who had perished more than fifty years before!

We have some pretty tall officers in Mexico. Gen. Scott stands six feet four. Generals Worth and Twiggs, Col. Harney and May, and Major Lally, are all six feet or over; Col. Doniphan six feet two; Capt. Pike, him of "the lyre and sword," about the same height.

In the earlier part of the reign of Henry VIII. it was death to teach the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, or the Apostle's Creed, in the mother tongue. For this crime, six men and a woman were burnt at Coventry, April 4, 1519.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired,

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Eorte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

ALFRED, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 21. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1847. WHOLE NO. 177.

The Sabbath Recorder.

SUNDAY NO SABBATH:

Proved by the Origin and History of its Observance.

Sunday was undoubtedly a very ancient heathen festival day—a day devoted to the pagan worship of the sun. Every historian of heathen mythology, of accredited reputation, attests this fact. Buck's Theological Dictionary says, "The ancient Saxons called it by this name, because upon it they worshiped the sun." The worship of the sun is spoken of in Holy Scripture with abhorrence. The day, Sunday, is never named; but in Deuteronomy 4: 15, 19, there is a solemn warning, saying, "Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, lest thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, even all the host of heaven, shouldst be drawn to worship them, and serve them." Is it likely that Jehovah, who had given Israel such solemn warning against the idolatry of sun-worshipers, should ever revoke his own holy Sabbath day to command the observance of SUNDAY? It is universally confessed, that prior to the resurrection of Christ, no such command ever existed. The New Testament contains the history of Christianity during the first century, nearly, and affords not a particle of evidence of such a change. It is confessed, by the ablest writers on Sunday-keeping, that "there is no precept or passage of Scripture authorizing, in so many words, the change." All the inferential reasonings of first-day writers upon certain incidental circumstances mentioned in the New Testament, have been proved to be as unsubstantial as "the baseless fabric of a vision." Besides, there are great facts against it, viz: The writers of the New Testament, whenever they have occasion to mention particular days of the week, always keep up the same distinction as their predecessors, the prophets of Israel, had done; the seventh day is uniformly called the Sabbath, and the first day of the week is never called by any other name than "the first day of the week." The Evangelist Luke, writing thirty years after the resurrection of Christ, says, "The women rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." No instance is given of their secularizing the seventh day; whereas Paul and his company set sail from Troas on the first day of the week, and that on a long journey. Whenever the author of the Acts of the Apostles mentions the Sabbath, it is in connection with religious worship observed thereon.

In the next century, we have some writings of five Christian Fathers, so called, viz., Ignatius, Barnabas, Clement, Ireneus, and Justin Martyr. In their epistles, whether interpolated or genuine, they do not speak of the first day of the week as the Sabbath. They speak of it as the writers of the next century do of other days which had then come into observance as festival days. Ignatius says, "Let us keep the Lord's day, on which our life arose." (Epis. od Magnes. p. 35.) So Ireneus says, "Some esteem that they must fast but one day, others two, others more, and some allow to this fast forty hours," "i. e. the fast before Easter, beginning at twelve o'clock on Good Friday, about which time Christ was dying, and ending Sunday morning, when Christ arose." (See Lord King on the worship and ceremonies of the primitive church, vol. 2, p. 135; printed in the year 1713.) Indeed, their writings show that many differences of opinion respecting their observances had speedily grown up after the death of the apostles. (See Eusebius, who quotes Ireneus, book 5, chap. 24, page 209 of Philadelphia edition.)

The Jews were a fractious people, and very much despised in all parts of the Roman Empire, from the days of Titus and Vespasian to the time of Constantine; and Christians were very careful to make it appear that they were not of that hated sect. The Gnostics, particularly, rejected the "Mosaic account of the creation and the fall of man, and would not listen with patience to the repose of the Deity after six days labor." Thus controversies ensued between Christian Jews and Christian Gentiles, and each party excommunicated the other. (See Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. I. page 224 and 226.) So also Dr. Neander says, "Opposition to Judaism introduced the particular festival of Sunday very early." (History, p. 184.)

Facts appear still plainer in Constantine's day. Gibbon, whose reputation for a veritable historian is established above all reasonable question, speaks of the matter as follows:—

"It was long since established, as a fundamental maxim of the Roman constitution, that every rank of citizens were alike subject to the laws, and that the care of religion was the right as well as the duty of the civil magistrate. Constantine and his successors could not easily persuade themselves that they had forfeited, by their conversion, any branch of the imperial prerogatives, or that they were incapable of giving laws to a religion which they had protected and embraced. The Emperors still continued to exercise a supreme jurisdiction over the ecclesiastical order. The sixteenth book of the Theodosian code represents, under a variety of titles, the authority which they assumed in the government of the Catholic Church. But the distinction of the spiritual and the temporal powers, which had never been imposed on the free spirit of Greece and Rome, was introduced and confirmed by the legal establishment of Christianity. The office of a supreme Pontiff, which, from the time of Numa to that of Augustus, had always been exercised by one of the senators, was at length united to the imperial dignity."* "The first magistrate of the State, as often as he was prompted by superstition or policy, performed with his own hands, the sacerdotal functions; nor was there any order of priests, either at Rome or in the provinces, who claimed a more sacred character among men, or a more intimate communication with the gods." (Decline and Fall, vol. I., page 375, Philadelphia edition.)

"Whatever symptoms of Christian piety might transpire in the discourses or actions of Constantine, he persevered till he was near forty years of age in the practice of the established religion, (i. e. of Pagan Rome.) . . . . His liberality restored and enriched the temples of the gods; the medals which issued from his imperial mint were impressed with the figures and attributes of Jupiter and Apollo, of Mars and Hercules; and his filial piety increased the council of Olympus by the solemn apotheosis (i. e. deification) of his (deceased) father Constantius. But the devotion of Constantine was more peculiarly directed to the genius of the sun, the Apollo of the Greek and Roman mythology; and he was pleased to be represented with the symbols of the god of light and poetry. The altars of Apollo were crowned with the votive offerings of Constantine; and the credulous multitude were taught to believe that the Emperor was permitted to behold with mortal eyes the visible majesty of their tutelar deity, and that, either waking or in a vision, he was blessed with the auspicious omens of a long and victorious reign. The sun was universally celebrated as the invincible guide and protector of Constantine."

"The Christianity of Constantine must be allowed in a much more vague and qualified sense; and the nicest accuracy is required in tracing the slow and almost imperceptible gradations by which the monarch declared himself the protector, and at length the proselyte of the church. It was an arduous task to eradicate the habits and prejudices of his education, to acknowledge the divine power of Christ, and to understand that the truth of his revelation was incompatible with the worship of the gods. The obstacles which he had probably experienced in his own mind, instructed him to proceed with caution in the momentous change of a national religion; and he insensibly discovered his new opinions, as far as he could enforce them with safety and with effect. . . . His ministers were permitted to signify the intentions of their master in the various language which was adapted to their principles; and he artfully balanced the hopes and fears of his subjects, by publishing the same year [A. D. 321] two edicts, the first of which enjoined the solemn observance of Sunday, [Constantine styles the Lord's day, Dies Solis, or day of the sun, a name which could not offend the ears of his pagan subjects.] At the same time the Christian party professed to honor it by worshiping thereon the sun of righteousness. Eusebius says, 'In memory, as it seems to me, of those events occurring thereon to our common Saviour.'" (Life of Constantine, book 4, ch. 18.) The second edict directed the regular consultation of the Auspices. While this important revolution yet remained in suspense, the Christians and the pagans watched the conduct of their sovereign with the same anxiety, but with very different sentiments. The former were prompted by every motive of zeal, as well as vanity, to exaggerate the marks of his favor, and the evidence of his faith. The latter, till their just apprehensions were changed into despair and resentment, attempted to conceal from the world, and from themselves, that the gods of Rome could no longer reckon the Emperor in the number of their votaries." (Ibid., pages 362—3.)

In all these testimonies to the sacredness of Sunday, as the "legal, most holy, and catholic day for prayers," we are unable to discover a single intimation that it was regarded as the Sabbath, or as the substitute for it. Nay, Eusebius expressly distinguishes it from the Sabbath, by saying, "He determined that those obeying Roman power should abstain from work upon the days named after the Saviour, that they should venerate also the day before the Sabbath," [i. e. Friday.] (Life of Constantine, B. 4, ch. 18.) Constantine, so far as we can find, left the Sabbath of Jehovah, without Roman law for or against it, to the consciences of his subjects. The ecclesiastical Council of Leodicea, A. D. 360, prohibited sabbatizing, while they confirmed the popular observance of Sunday as a festival day. In this character the Council of Orleans, A. D. 538, endeavored to enforce its better observance; as have other authorities of the Roman Catholic Church at different periods to the times of the Reformation. It is so held by them, and many other State churches to the present day. Indeed, it was never regarded as the Sabbath till the rise of the English Puritans. Their views respecting it were first publicly promulgated by Dr. Nicholas Bound, A. D. 1595, in his famous book "Sabbatum Veritis et Novi Testamenti; or, The True Doctrine of the Sabbath."

In the fifth year of Edward VI., A D. 1552, the British Parliament passed the following act:

"Be it therefore enacted, by the King our Sovereign Lord, with the assent of the Lord's spiritual and temporal, and the Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, That all the days hereafter mentioned, shall be kept holy days; that is to say, all Sundays in the year; St. Matthew's, St. Mark's, St. John the Baptist's, St. Peter's, St. James', &c., provided always, and it is enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be lawful to every husbandman, laborer, or fisherman, and to all and every other person or persons, upon the holy days aforesaid, in harvest, or at other times of the year when necessity shall require, to labor, ride, fish, or work any kind of work, at their free-wills and pleasure, any thing in this act to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding."

This was in the very spirit of Constantine's Sunday edict, and all others of the Catholic Church. It was in consideration of these views, that the Puritans opposed the governmental Sunday, through the reigns of Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I., till at length they brough Charles to the scaffold. It was in opposition to the Puritan strictness, that these menarchs ordered the Book of Sports to be read on Sundays after public worship.

At the Reformation, there were two sorts of Dissenters; one, as the Puritans, who sought to model the state church according to their views of scriptural requirements; the other, as the Baptists of different grades, who were opposed to all state churches, sought a separate and purely voluntary association of Christian men, to be guided in their religious faith alone by the precepts and doctrines of holy scripture. These, being much in advance of the spirit of the times, never acquired much political importance, and were therefore at times suppressed and nearly exterminated by the ruling powers. The Puritans, on the other hand, combining with their religious views a reformation of the civil polity, and an enlargement of men's freedom, obtained considerable influence, and at length somewhat modified the views of the nation. They formed the codes of the New England colonies, and exerted a controling influence in the early governments of the North American States.

The observance of Sunday as a Christian Sabbath, originated with them, and has been indentified with their history. Its success has been owing, not to the truthfulness of the sentiment, but to its having been all along identified with a stern defense of human rights against arbitrary and oppressive power. It has been closely allied with much of the evangelical and vital in religion, against a withering and dominant formalism. Men took all for truth which had so close an alliance with what was obviously right and good. They had not time and interest to investigate single points, while time and soul and all elementary means were required to prosecute the great obsorbing objects of their age and parties. Circumstances are changed; the war now is not for the reformation of state churches, but for their entire abolition; hence the Sunday observance, as part and parcel of the hierarichal system, is involved in the issue of the contest. Even the President of the Evangelical Alliance, Sir Culling Eardly Smith, thus pronounced against the compulsory Sunday laws. He says:—

"I will contend as strongly as my committee, for the duty of Parliament, in legislating on matters within its sphere, to embody avowals of divine truth. But it is one thing to acknowledge the law of God—another thing to enforce it. Religious liberty is with me a part of my religion; and desiring unfeignedly to hold myself open to conviction if I am wrong, I must avow my present opinion, that to forbid Sabbath (?) trains by law would be inconsistent with religious liberty."

The Voluntary Church Association is spreading similar sentiments in England from Land's End to the Orkneys. A variety of sects and circumstances are urging forward the same sentiments in the North American States; and the Puritan Christian Sabbath must unavoidably soon appear before the nation in its true character. Reader, what is its true character? Has it any divine authority? Let Timothy Dwight, LL. D., late President of Yale College, say:—"The Christian Sabbath was originally introduced into the church much more successfully, and happily, than it could have been done by an express injunction." Theology, Ser. CVII. The American and Foreign Sabbath Union, say: "No identical period of duration is in itself intrinsically holy." They affirm that two colonies may keep two separate days, and yet conform to the spirit and to the letter of the Sabbath law." Permanent Documents, No. 2, page 7.

How did the so-called Christian Fathers regard it? Dr. Dwight quotes Ignatius, a companion of the apostles, as saying, "Let us no more sabbatize, but keep the Lord's day, on which our life arose." Eusebius calls it "a suitable time for prayers." Constantine, and all other legislators, but those under the influence of the Puritans, have always treated it as a festival day, and allowed agricultural labors, and public amusements, and common sports thereon. The established churches of England, Denmark, Germany, and France, and the whole Roman Catholic Church, have decided that it is a day of human origin, and supported alone by human authority.

It may be that the reader venerates Sunday as a sacred day. So does the Roman Catholic his saints' days, the Lutheran his Christmas day, and the Episcopalian his Good Friday; and these have as much divine authority for their veneration of days, as the Puritan Congregationalists or Presbyterians or Baptists have for their holy Sunday.

There are a few things we would seriously commend to every reader. First, to whom will God say, "Who hath required this at your hands?" To him who has followed the popular customs of the day, and supported the powers of this would in their adulterous admixture of things human and divine?—or to him who, abjuring these, cleaves simply to the word of God? Who will be least in the kingdom of heaven?—he who, cleaving to traditions of his fathers, and breaking the fourth commandment, teaches men so?—or he who, fulfilling the royal law, according to the Scriptures, has taken hold of the Sabbath of the fourth commandment to keep it? Who is giving countenance to profligacy and infidelity? The man who urges a human institution in the place of a divine law?—or the man who walks in all the law of the Lord, and keepeth all his righteous statutes diligently? On whom will ultimately come the blessing of the Lord?—on him who keeps a festival day?—or on "the man that doeth this, the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil?"

S. D.

TRIUMPHANT DEATHS IN BENGAL.

Of Khrishna Pal, and Ananda, another brahman, it is said, 'Thus the first and the last of native converts finished their course nearly together. Both died in full hope of eternal life.' Thus did Khrishna Pal maintain to the end the devotion of Christ expressed in his well-known beautiful Bengalee hymn—two verses from which we cannot refrain from giving:—

O thou my soul, forget no more
The man who all thy misery bore;
Let every idol be forgot,—
But, O my soul, forget him not.

Ah no, till life itself depart,
His name shall cheer and warm my heart;
And lisping this from earth I'll rise,
And join the chorus in the skies.

Abdool Messeech, whose life and labors are well-known, composed the following lines a short time before his death, and joined with fervor in singing them on the day of his departure:—

Beloved Saviour, let not me
In thy kind heart forgotten be;
Of all that decks the field or bower,
Thou art the sweetest, fairest flower.

Youth's morn has fled, old age comes on;
But sin distracts my heart alone;
Beloved Saviour, let not me
In thy kind heart forgotten be.

Some of his last words were, that he felt perfectly resigned, that death had no fears for him, for that our Saviour had deprived death of its sting.

Brindaban, at first a barriagi and afterwards a devoted minister of the gospel, is said to have suffered much during the last few weeks of his life, but always happy, longing to depart and to, be with Christ. When asked, the day before he died, if he would take any thing, he said, 'No;' and, putting his hand on a part of the Scriptures which lay near him, added, 'this is my meat, drink, and medicine.' This good man had said, on first presenting himself to the ministry, 'I have a flower which I wish to give to some one who is worthy of it; I have for many years traveled about the country to find such a person, but in vain; but to-day I have found one that is, and he shall have it. Jesus Christ is worthy of my flower. He is worthy of my heart.'

Hingham Misser was a brahman of Monghyr, and the testimony to the excellence of his life is most decided. In his last illness he was during the whole time patient and cheerful. Just before he died, he called his wife to him, and gave her directions about his son, and exhorted her to trust in God, and then folding his hands began to pray. While so engaged his spirit took its flight, and he fell asleep in Jesus, without a sigh or a struggle. This believer had made many hymns, and translated the book of Genesis into Hindoo, all which were found only after his death.

The account of the dying experience of a youth named Madhu, at Burdwan, is another case in point. His minister said to him, 'You appear to be dying; should you like to go to Jesus?' 'O sir,' he replied, 'whom else have I now but Jesus? what earthly friend is of any avail to me?' To some other questions he added, 'whom have I but Jesus?' Then joining his hands in supplication, and closing his languid eyes, he said, 'O yes, Jesus, dear Jesus, thou art my Saviour; come, O come quickly, and save me. Send thy holy angels, and take me to thee.'

A poor man at Khari, named Muchiram Singh, who died recently at the advanced age of eighty-five years, commanded, during the fifteen years of his Christian profession, the respect and love of all. He was remarkable for the fervor with which he always spoke of the Saviour. When asked if he loved Christ, he would always put his hands together, and lift them up and his eyes to heaven, and with tears in his eyes would say, 'Not love him who gave his life to save sinners? O yes, I loved him, and trust in him with all my heart.' For three or four years before his death he was blind, and spent much of his time in prayer.

[Calcutta Christian Observer.

THE TEMPLE OF SOLOMON.

This structure, for beauty, magnificence, and expense, exceeded every building in the world. It was built with large white marble stones, hewn out in a most curious manner, and so artfully joined together that they deceived the eye and looked like one entire stone. Its inner walls, beams, posts, doors, floors and ceilings, were made of cedar wood, olive tree, and planks of fir, covered all over with plates of gold, engraved with works of all sorts, and adorned with most precious jewels of many colors disposed in running order. The nails which fastened these plates of gold, had heads of curious workmanship. The roof was of olive wood, covered with plates of gold, which made a glorious sight, and when the sun shone thereon it reflected such a dazzling brightness as dazzled the eyes of all who beheld it. The court in which the temple stood, and those without it, were built on all sides with stately buildings and cloisters, and the gates entering therein were very beautiful and sumptuous. The vessels consecrated to the perpetual use of the Temple were no less noble than the pile itself. Josephus counts one hundred and twenty thousand of them which were made of gold, and one million three hundred and forty thousand of silver, ten thousand vestments of silk and purple girdles for the priests, and two millions of purple vestments for singers. There were likewise two hundred thousand trumpets, and forty thousand other musical instruments, made use of in praising God. By Villalpandus' computation of the number of talents of gold, silver, and brass laid out upon the Temple, the sum amounts to six thousand nine hundred and forty-four millions eight hundred and twenty-two thousand and five hundred pounds sterling, and the jewels are reckoned to exceed this sum, and according to Capel's reduction of the talents contained in the gold and silver vessels in the use of the Temple, the sum of the gold ones amount to five hundred and forty-five millions two hundred and ninety-six thousand and three hundred pounds and four shillings sterling, and the silver ware to four thousand and thirty millions two hundred and forty-four thousand pounds, and besides these there were charges for the other materials, and of forty thousand men per month in Lebanon, to hew down timber, seventy thousand to carry burthens, eighty thousand to hew stones, and three thousand three hundred overseers, who were all employed for seven years, whom, besides their diet. Solomon gave as a free gift, six millions seven hundred and thirty-three thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven pounds. The treasure left by David, towards carrying on this work, is, by Villalpandus, reckoned to be nine hundred and forty-four millions four hundred and sixteen thousand two hundred and seven pounds, to which, if we add Solomon's annual revenue, his trading to Ophir for gold, and the presents made him by all the earth, as mentioned 1 K. 10: 24, 25, we are not to wonder at his being able to carry on so expensive a work.

MORNING PRAYER

So fit and useful is morning devotion, it ought not to be omitted without necessity. If our circumstances will allow the privilege, it is a bad sign when no part of the morning is spent in prayer. If God find no place in our minds at that early and peaceful hour, he will hardly recur to us in the tumults of life. If the benefits of the morning do not soften us, we can hardly expect the heart to melt with gratitude through the day. If the world then rush in and take possession of us, when we are at some distance, and have had a respite from its cares, how can we hope to shake it off when we shall be in the midst of it, pressed and agitated by it on every side? Let a part of the morning, if possible, be set apart to devotion; and to this end we should fix the hour of rising, so that we may have an early hour at our own disposal. Our piety is suspicious, if we can renounce, as too many do, the pleasures and benefits of early prayer, rather than forego the senseless indulgence of unnecessary sleep. What! we can rise early enough for business. We can even anticipate the dawn, if a favorite pleasure or an uncommon gain requires the effort. But we cannot rise, that we may bless our great Benefactor, that we may arm ourselves for the severe conflicts to which our principles are to be exposed! We are willing to rush into the world, without thanks offered, or a blessing sought! From a day thus begun, what ought we to expect but thoughtlessness and guilt.

[Dr. Channing.

KINDNESS.—Not only religion and humanity, but self-respect, forbids us to inflict one single useless pang upon a fallen foe. Genuine obedience to God is the free choice and adoption of a law, the great principles of which our minds approve, and our own consciences bind on us, which is not an arbitrary injunction, but an emanation and expansion of the Divine Mind; and which is intended throughout to give energy, dignity, and enlargement to our best powers. He, and he only obeys God virtuously and acceptably, who reverences right, not power; who has chosen rectitude as his supreme rule; who sees and reveres in God the fullness and brightness of moral excellence, and who sees in obedience the progress and perfection of his own nature.

[Channing.

---

* M. de la Bastie, Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. XV., pages 38 to 61, has clearly proved that Augustus and his successors exercised in person all the sacred functions of pontifex maximus, or high priest of the Roman Empire.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 11, 1847.

POLITICAL THANKSGIVING SERMONS.

The season is at hand when the people of several States of the Union are expected to observe a day of public thanksgiving to God for his mercies bestowed upon them during the past year. It is quite common for clergymen, in their sermons on that day, to take occasion to review the sins of the nation, and not unfrequently to express opinions concerning them which are liable to be called political or sectarian. His Excellency the Governor of Maine seems to have been particularly thoughtful upon that point; and hence recommended, in his thanksgiving proclamation, that the day should be "kept free from all political harangues or exhibitions of sectarian zeal." No doubt the preachers in his State, who may have occasion to hold forth on thanksgiving day, will remember the recommendation; but we presume that most of them will follow their own judgments, rather than his recommendation, in reference to the proper subjects of discourse.

To us it seems almost impossible to review the events of the past year, sufficiently to speak understandingly of God's mercies, without touching upon some points which most people denominate political. Our nation has been engaged during the whole year in a sanguinary war upon a neighboring Republic, in the progress of which thousands of lives have been sacrificed, towns have been laid waste, female virtue has been violated, and other nameless horrors inflicted. An allusion to these facts would no doubt be regarded by some as a "political harangue." But how can the events of the past year be reviewed without such an allusion? We do not doubt that in nine-tenths of the pulpits of Maine in which thanksgiving sermons are preached, reference will be made to the late awful murder in Waterville, and lessons of admonition drawn from it. But what is that one murder in comparison with the hundreds which have been committed in Mexico, not merely in the heat of battle, but in cold blood, and all under the sanction of a Government calling itself Christian? It is but as a drop in the bucket. An allusion to it in a sermon which should not also rebuke the present war, would be most unreasonable and unjustifiable. It would be straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. Indeed, so essential an item in the history of the past year does the Mexican war appear to us, that we do not see how any minister of Christ can consistently review the year without alluding to and condemning it.

Closely connected with the war, and perhaps inseparable from it, is the subject of slavery. There is little room to doubt that the difficulties which led to the war grew out of a desire to extend the area of slavery—of that system which involves a breach of every divine commandment, and transforms a man made in God's image into a mere chattel. How can an honest man thank God for his own personal freedom, and still forget or neglect to plead the cause of nearly three millions of his own countrymen, who are robbed of every right, and subjected to the most galling oppression? It can not be done. Yet an allusion to this subject would doubtless be regarded by many as smacking strongly of politics; and they would, therefore, wave it entirely. With such a fear of politics, and such a time-serving policy, we have no fellowship. It is unworthy of those who profess a religion which is designed not only to abolish war and slavery, but to control the politics of men.

By the foregoing we would not be understood as implying, that discourses condemnatory of war and slavery are appropriate to thanksgiving days only. They are appropriate to the Sabbath likewise. If a preacher may properly address his audience on the Sabbath in relation to the command, "Thou shalt not kill," we see no reason why he may not with propriety so apply it as to condemn killing by the wholesale as well as by individuals. If he may on the Sabbath properly insist upon the equality of men from the text, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," we see no objection to his applying the subject so as to condemn slavery, and require men to treat their neighbors, even if they have a black skin, as they would be treated themselves. The truth is, that the preaching of both Sabbath days and thanksgiving days needs to be made more practical than it commonly is. Until a general reformation in this respect takes place, we shall continue to hear about political and sectarian discourses whenever an independent man ventures to apply the principles of the Gospel to the every-day business and duties of men.

◆

Longevity of Missionaries.—Dr. Devan, who recently returned from the Baptist Mission in China, has published in the Baptist Missionary Magazine for November, some interesting facts in relation to the longevity of missionaries in China and other places. From the commencement of the China mission to Feb., 1847, twenty-six female missionary have died, the average duration of their missionaries life being four years and four months. Of male missionaries, thirteen; average term of service seven years and six months. Twenty-six male missionaries have been compelled to retire from the field, whose service averaged five years and four months. In this number are not included ten missionaries temporarily absent from various causes, a part of whom will, probably, rejoin their respective missions. Of the sixty-three missionaries in China,—thirty-nine men and twenty-four women,—the average missionary service to the above date was, of males, five years and six months; and of females, three years and three months. Of nearly one-third of the twenty-six female missionaries who have died, the cause of decease was dysentery. Of the missionaries employed in Eastern Asia by the A. B. M. Union, the average service of thirty-nine men has been nine years and eight months; and of forty-eight women, seven years and six months nearly.

◆

John Quincy Adams at the Theatre.—The New York Tribune of Thursday morning last says that John Quincy Adams visited the Park Theatre on the previous evening, and was greeted in a most enthusiastic manner by the crowded house. "The venerable patriot made his appearance just as the curtain had fallen on the first act of "La Somnambula." He was immediately recognized by several gentlemen in the pit. The honored name passed in an instant over the house, and inspired by one common impulse the auditory burst into three cordial shouts of welcome. The 'old man eloquent' bowed his acknowledgments, and another cheer shook the walls of the Theatre." A good many of the editors of our religious exchanges have a great horror of theatre-going. We wonder what they will say when they learn that the President of the largest "Sabbath Convention" ever held in this country of whose example they have made not a little ado, is in the habit of attending theatres, and thus giving countenance to the custom. Having strained out the gnat, are they now prepared to swallow the camel?

◆

THE CHRISTIAN CHRONICLE.

A good while ago there appeared in the Christian Chronicle a controversial examination of the Sabbath question, by two writers, who subscribed themselves respectively "E. W. D." and "Indagator" It was gratifying to us, that the question was regarded by those writers as worthy of their attention, for we hoped that the discussion of it would provoke many of the readers of the Chronicle to give the subject a thorough investigation. The entire discussion was copied into the columns of the Recorder, that its readers might have the full benefit of every thing that could be said on this important subject. When the discussion was ended, we undertook a series of articles in review of it, not for the sake of guarding our own people against any influence it might exert, for that was quite unnecessary, but in the hope that the editor of the Chronicle—who had made such great professions of liberality, and had spoken of us in a way that virtually amounted to a promise to give to his readers any thing we might have to say—would publish them in his columns. Our articles, if not written with much ability, were at least couched in respectful language, and were prompted by a feeling of brotherly kindness towards those for whose special benefit they were intended. But small as was the ability displayed in them, we are satisfied that they were sufficient for the purpose intended to be answered by them. We have waited a long time for their appearance in the Chronicle. Supposing that the editor might have a press of matter on hand, we concluded to give him ample time to make room for us. He has had it, even more than enough; but still all is silent. Neither what we have written, nor any allusion to it, has been given. We are quite sure that he has now no excuse. The meagerness of his columns of late gives ample proof that his subscribers would be glad of something better calculated to instruct and entertain them; and we are considerate enough to think that our articles would very well supply the desideratum. We mean no reflection upon the editor's ability. His time may be too much occupied with other duties to give his paper the interest which hungry readers look for. If so, it is just the time to introduce our articles to their notice. We once more ask, whether he will do so, or not? If he will not, we shall infer, either that he fears the effect they will have upon his readers, or that he considers them too puerile to merit any notice. It is most likely he will affect the latter, that is, if he can so far overcome his non-committal spirit as to say what he thinks of them. But we can be very well content that he should think them puerile, if he will but give his readers an opportunity to think for themselves. It is not at all probable, that he will confess any dread of the effect of our sentiments upon his brethren. But, as we happen to understand human nature well enough to know, that, under the show of confidence of security, there sometimes lurks a small suspicion of danger, we shall take his professions on that score at such a discount as will consist with the charity that "hopeth all things," yet "rejoiceth in the truth." However, we admit that our sentiments would not probably exert a very extensive influence among his readers, even if they were made acquainted with them. But we make this admission on a ground not very flattering to their piety, which we can explain more fully hereafter, if the editor desires.

Statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church.—From the official minutes of this Church, for 1847, we gather some rather interesting statistics, though not of the most gratifying character. There is a decrease of membership amounting to 12,741; of this number 12,184 are whites. There are twenty-four conferences in union with the Church, of which the Baltimore conference has the largest membership, viz, 52,338 white and 16,387 colored. Ohio stands next numerically, having a white membership of 61,684 and colored 514. Philadelphia, New York and Pittsburgh are next. The Vermont conference has the smallest. The total membership in the twenty-four conferences is, white 600,941; colored 29,901; Indians 716; total 631,538. There are 3296 traveling preachers, 346 superannuated, 4913 local; total, 8,555. These statistics do not include the Southern branch of the Methodist Church.

◆

An Example.—Somebody, in one of our exchanges, says that he recently went to attend the dedication of a Roman Catholic Church in East Machias. The interior of the building was crowded—a capital sermon was preached—and every one was waiting for the ceremonies of the dedication, when the officiating priest quietly remarked, that having learned that the building was unpaid for by the congregation, he could not in conscience dedicate it—"he could not give from them to God what was not theirs to render. When the church legally belonged to them, he would with pleasure be the medium of presenting it to Heaven." An example, this, not unworthy of being followed by Protestants.

◆

Infamous.—The New York Tribune says that the Corporation of Washington, our National Capital, have passed a new edict, requiring all free colored persons in the city to give good white security each in a thousand dollars for their good behavior for one year; and to pay $2 each for a certificate that they have given such security. This is an infamous act, and the whole nation ought to cry shame upon its authors. It is unconstitutional also—that is, if any thing can be unconstitutional which is done by slaveholders against people of color and in behalf of the 'peculiar institution.' What right has the Corporation of Washington to require men not convicted or even accused of crime to give bonds for their good behavior?

◆

Bishop Onderdonk.—The case of this suspended "successor of the Apostles" occupied a large place in the discussions of the General Episcopal Convention recently held in this city. A letter or petition was sent in by the bishop, complaining of injustice, and asking for relief. After a good deal of discussion, the matter was referred to the Bench of Bishops, who gave Mr. Onderdonk permission to withdraw his petition, accompanied with a pretty distinct intimation that there is no prospect of his restoration, except upon satisfactory evidence of repentance and reformation.

◆

Mexican Hostility to Slavery.—During the armistice between Gen. Scott and Santa Anna, the conditions of peace were considered by commissioners from this country and Mexico. One condition required by the Mexicans was, that "the United States shall engage not to permit slavery in any part of the territory acquired from Mexico." Here we have the degraded Mexicans endeavoring to prevent the intelligent freemen of the United States from extending their slave territory. What a lesson does it teach.

◆

A Family of Clergymen.—The Boston Traveler says that Mr. Jeremiah Taylor, late of the New Haven Theological Seminary, was recently ordained pastor of the Congregational Church in Wenham. Three brothers assisted in the ordaining services: Rev. Oliver A. Taylor, of Manchester, Rev. Rufus Taylor, of Shrewsbury, N. J., and Rev. Timothy Taylor, of Slatersville, R. I. The entire family of brothers are now pastors of churches.

◆

Significant Seal.—The Alliance and Visitor says that the original seal of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, who arrived and settled at Salem in 1682, had on it a North American Indian, with these words proceeding from his mouth, "Come over and help us!" This device on the seal of their Colony published to the world the fact that they regarded themselves as foreign missionaries to North America. This was also the case with the brethren of the Plymouth Colony, who arrived eight years before.

◆

The New York State Election was held on Tuesday of last week. It resulted in the choice of Whig State Officers, and a majority of the same party for the Legislature. The New York Tribune says that the State Administration for the ensuing year will be as follows:—

John Young, of Livingston Co., Governor;
Hamilton Fish, of New York, Lieut. Governor;
Christopher Morgan, of Cayuga, Sec. of State;
Millard Fillmore, of Erie, Controller;
Alvah Hunt, of Chenango, Treasurer;
Ambrose L. Jordan, of New York, Att'y Gen.;
Charles B. Stuart, of Monroe, State Eng'r;
Jacob Hinds, of Orleans, } Canal Com's.
Nelson J. Beach, of Lewis, }
Charles Cook, of Chemung, }

◆

☞ Eld. C. Chester, having removed from Hopkinton, R. I., to Verona, N. Y., requests his correspondents to address him at New London, Oneida Co., N. Y.

Finances of the American Board.—At a missionary meeting held in this city on the first Monday evening of November, in reference to the missions of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, it was stated that the receipts of the Board the last month had amounted to $25,000; yet the debt had still increased, during the past three months, $15,000, owing to the manifestly pressing call for sending out several companies of new missionaries. This fact was urged as a reason why the churches should arouse to more vigorous efforts for sustaining a Society which has upward of 520 missionary laborers now dependent upon it chiefly for their daily bread.

◆

Baptist Mission in Hayti.—A correspondent of the Albany Spectator says that the Island of Hayti is about 400 miles long and 150 broad, and is second only in size to one other of the West India islands. Its population is near one million. This population is colored, but sustain a government of their own, which is free and independent. Slavery was broken up in the Island in 1792; and independence achieved in 1802. In 1844 the American Baptist Free Mission Society commenced its efforts of preaching the gospel in Hayti, by sending to that interesting field of missionary labor a missionary family, consisting of Rev. Wm. M. Jones and wife and Miss P. T. Young. In December of 1846 the station was reinforced by sending another family, consisting of Rev. W. L. Judd and wife and Miss Lake. These missionaries are stationed at Port-au-Prince, the Capital of the Haytien Republic. The last-named family were members of the State-st. Baptist Church in Albany, and through the labors of these missionaries a little church has already been gathered, and is enjoying a precious revival at the present time. This mission has struggled against trials from its commencement. Mr. Jones, on account of his health, has been laid aside from his labors frequently, and is now spending a few months in this country, and soliciting means to build a chapel in Port-au-Prince. The health of Miss Young has been greatly impaired, but is now better. The present encouragements and prospects of the mission are subjects of devout gratitude and praise.

◆

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

It is common for private Christians to throw off from themselves upon their ministers the responsibility of engaging in active labor for the salvation of men. There is occasionally an exception, however. The case of a Dea. Gorham, of Western New York, has been heretofore mentioned in the Recorder. He was an independent farmer; but feeling anxious to do something in the vineyard of his Master, he leased his farm, and voluntarily offered himself as a colporteur of the American Baptist Publication Society in the Great Western Valley. The following extract from a letter in the Baptist Record will show his present feelings:—

"I feel very much at home, feel contented and when most diligently engaged in distributing books and tracts, or recommending religion from house to house, I am the most happy. It is my calculation now, that if God permits me to live till the time expires that I leased my farm for, to return to New York and sell it and move West. Society is forming, and in every place meeting houses are to be built. Where the Baptists have gone in as others, they are ahead, but when others have gone in and got established, it is slow overcoming the prejudices of the mind. The colporteur system is one in my estimation well calculated to do good. It throws broad-cast all over the land the good seed of the kingdom. The colporteur preaches from house to house, and in so plain a manner that all can understand. If his words fail to reach the heart, the books that he may sell or tract that he may give, may be read in some place or leisure hour, and God may thus bring the sinner to repentance."

◆

SOUTH AFRICA.

Mr. Lewis Grant has written a letter giving an account of the land journey of himself and Mrs. Grant to the station of Mr. A. Grout, in South Africa. They traveled in an ox wagon, as is the custom in that country, "without being troubled to inquire concerning railroad routes, times of starting, or the respective merits of hotels on the way." The rivers were much swollen, and considerable difficulty, as well as danger, was experienced in crossing them. To add to their discomfort, the rain poured in torrents. Mr. G. describes the country as fertil in soil, and beautiful in scenery; the language as remarkably philosophical and euphonious, and worthy to rank with the Greek. The people are morally degraded to the lowest point of humanity.

Polygamy is practiced by all; the wives being bought in exchange for cattle; sometimes on trust—the woman working for her husband till she has earned her own price. A poor man will buy an old woman, or widow, and with her labor raise the means to buy a more agreeable wife, when the old woman is turned off to perform the same service for another, or die of neglect. Parents value their daughters at the number of cattle they are likely to receive in exchange for them. Yet there is encouragement in the manifest desire of the people for improvement. During the last year 30,000 bushels of corn were sent off and sold from a district of eight by ten miles—an amount unknown before. The people are anxious to learn; and large and respectable congregations assemble to hear the gospel preached; many of the men, and even some women, coming eight or ten miles to the Mission-House. Many young men are making commendable efforts to learn, sitting up at night to read by a dim rush light.

On the fourth of June, two German missionaries arrived on the Cape Coast, having been sent out by the German Missionary Society, instructed to settle in the neighborhood of the River Danger. One of them died in a few days of the fever, and the other had been quite sick.

☞ We cheerfully make room for the following article, which was sent us from the office of the American Peace Society. The object at which it aims is one in which we feel a deep and lively interest. God grant that by some means or other the next Congress may be aroused to a sense of its responsibility to take efficient steps to prevent farther bloodshed in Mexico.

RENEWED PETITIONS FOR PEACE WITH MEXICO.

We all have, in this land of freedom, an acknowledged right to address our rulers upon every question of public interest submitted to their decision; and, as Congress is soon to assemble in the midst of a war whose continuance or cessation depends more or less upon them, the American Peace Society would respectfully submit to all good citizens, but especially to those who are also professed followers of the Prince of peace, whether their obligations to God and their country do not imperatively require of them far greater efforts than they have yet made to arrest the progress of this war, and restore to these bleeding Republics the blessings of settled, permanent peace.

This duty we would press upon men of all parties alike. It is a matter strictly common to them all; and earnestly do we hope they will treat it as such, and use their best endeavors, without reference to political parties, for a speedy termination of this war. We need not here inquire how or why it began, or who may be most to blame for its rise, its progress, or its anticipated results; it is enough for our present purpose to know, that the war is actually upon us, and that every one should, as all good men must, desire most fervently to see this work of carnage and devastation, of crime and misery, brought to an immediate close. Surely enough of blood has been shed, enough of property wasted, enough of suffering inflicted, enough of lamentation and woe spread among the families of these sister Republics. Religion, humanity, patriotism, all unite in demanding immediate peace as the interest and duty alike of both; nor can they continue this unnatural conflict without irreparable injury to themselves, and deep, lasting disgrace to the cause of free, popular government, which they chiefly represent before the world.

We would not dictate in what way the friends of peace should address Congress. The mode we leave to them, and merely urge the duty of general, earnest petitions for this object. We suggest below two forms, either of which they may adopt, or frame another to suit themselves better. Do it as you please; only DO IT, and do it in season to reach Congress at or near the opening of their session, when the war will of course meet them on the threshold, and form the chief burden of their deliberations. Will each pastor look after the thing, or any person who has a heart for the service, just copy one of the subjoined petitions, and then set himself to procure signatures? Thus might a petition, with a goodly array of names, be forwarded from every town and village in the land.

Do you say, "all this would do no good?" We cannot think so. Our rulers will and must heed the people's voice; and, if the latter should as a body express unequivocally their desire for the speedy termination of this war in some way—it is not their province to say precisely how—the men at the helm of the State, whose business it is, would soon find a way to get peace. We deem it quite probable, that Congress would hail with pleasure a fair and full expression of the people's wishes, as an index to its own course on this whole subject.

But such petitions, however received, would relieve our consciences before God and man. If silent, we shall justly be held responsible for the acts of our rulers, as our chosen agents and representatives, in continuing this war for whatever purposes it seeks to accomplish. Are we willing to lie under such responsibilities? Can we, with a clear conscience before God, abet or sanction the continued butcheries, and bombardments, and devastations, and wide-spreading calamities of this war? If not, then let us at once beseech our rulers to arrest its progress, and thus clear our skirts of all responsibility for its farther atrocities and horrors.

Here, at all events, is one way, and a very good one, of making known the principles and aims of Peace. The occasion calls for it, and opens the general ear to our testimony on this great, momentous theme of common interest. It is a fitting as well as hopeful opportunity; and we may, if we will, use the government as a sort of flag-staff on which to hang out the peace colors before all men.

We rejoice, that the religious press has so generally taken a firm, decided stand on the side of peace; and we trust that we shall not rely in vain upon its spontaneous, efficient seconding of our present endeavor to rally good men of all parties for the speedy termination of this war.

In behalf of the Am. Peace Society,
Geo. C. Beckwith, Cor. Sec.

Boston, Nov. 3, 1847.

PETITIONS

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:—

The undersigned, inhabitants of ——, in the State of ——, respectfully but most earnestly petition your Honorable Bodies to use all your constitutional powers, in whatever way your collected wisdom may deem best, for bringing the present war with Mexico to an immediate close.

OR,

The undersigned, &c., painfully impressed with the sins and calamities inseparable from war in any case, deeply deploring especially the manifold evils already occasioned by the present war with Mexico, and dreading still more the evils which its continuance threatens to both the belligerent parties; regarding the sword as neither a Christian nor a rational arbiter of right, and believing it incumbent particularly on Christian Republics, in such an age as this, to employ other and better means for the adjustment of their difficulties; respectfully but very earnestly petition your Honorable Bodies to use all your constitutional powers for a speedy termination of this war by withdrawing our troops within the limits of our own territory, and then settling the points in dispute either by negociation, or by some form of fair and honorable reference.

N. B. The petition, when properly signed, should at once be sent in an envelop to some member of Congress, with a note requesting his special attention to the subject. It might be well to have two petitions signed at the same time—one for the Senate, and the other for the House of Representatives.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston on Friday last, bringing intelligence from England to Oct. 19.

The disastrous monetary pressure has, during the last fortnight, continued to rage with unabated severity, involving several additional failures, and diffusing a deep and impenetrable gloom throughout the whole commercial community of Great Britain. Altogether 55 houses have either broken down or suspended payment since the last steamer.

The corn market is of course sensibly influenced by the unparalleled stringency of the money market, and shows a general decline, particularly in quotations for inferior parcels. Indian corn has depreciated from 2s to 3d a quarter, and meal has also receded in value, and is in very limited demand.

The cotton market also largely participates in the general vicissitudes of trade, and shows a gradual deterioration. The quantity of cotton pressing upon the market greatly exceeds the demand, producing large sacrifices on the part of sellers.

In the manufacturing districts business wears the gloomiest possible aspect, every week adding to the number of mills working short time or closing entirely.

The prospects for Ireland during the approaching Winter are gloomy enough. Famine in an aggravated form has already appeared, and the Queen has issued a letter commanding general collections to be made in the Church Establishment.

* * *

RAILROAD ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—The N. Y. Tribune of Monday morning last says:—By a passenger who arrived at the Astor House yesterday morning, we learn that a frightful accident occurred on the Norwich and Worcester Railroad near Boston on Saturday morning. It seems that the switch was not properly adjusted, and as the train from Boston for Springfield was crossing the Mill-Dam, (Brooklyne,) some part of the leading cars started up the iron on the track, which striking against the bottom of a second-class car, in which twenty passengers were seated, precipitated all except seven into the water. Those seven were scattered out upon the track, and all killed by the train as it passed on, cutting off heads, limbs, and horribly mangling and cutting bodies entirely to pieces. Those who fell into the water were all saved.

—We have a telegraphic despatch from Springfield which states that the bottom of the car was smashed to pieces by the break becoming detached and falling under the car, and that beside the seven who were instantly killed, several were seriously injured. We were unable to obtain the names of the killed, but understand they were Irishmen.

* * *

BULL FIGHTS IN NEW ORLEANS.—From La Patria of the 29th ult., we learn that New Orleans is about to add to the list of public amusements the elegant recreation of the bull fight. The arena was already completed, and the first entertainment was to take place on the following Sunday. The managers had spared no pains to insure a diverting spectacle on that occasion. A company of regular bull-fighters was every moment expected from Matamoros, and the animals were to arrive the next morning from Attakapas. The manager is Don Francisco Lopez, and La Patria is in hope that he may be encouraged in his new branch of industry, especially as he offers his patrons a large amount of an agreeable diversion new in these regions.

* * *

THE SKIRT EXPANDER—A NEW INVENTION.—It appears that a gentleman of the city of Troy, has invented an article he calls the Skirt Expander, for which he is about to procure a patent. The inventor says it will entirely do away with the cotton bustle. It is said to be principally made of India Rubber, air-tight, and is capable of being inflated or contracted at any time. If a lady should be walking and wish to appear larger or smaller, the Skirt is so constructed that she may enlarge or diminish her apparent size at pleasure; and yet a person may be walking with her, and not discover how, or by what means her apparent size is diminished or increased. The inventor also says that the appearance of a lady with one of these skirts is much improved—the dress setting much better and easier; and that it will save the labor of carrying about the streets quite a small bale of cotton, and from eight to twelve skirts. [Farmer & Mechanic.

* * *

A BASTILE.—A Southern religious paper chronicles the return of a fugitive slave, who preferred his former condition, and thereupon says, that it proves that slavery is better than freedom, in the estimation of the colored race, and in fact. To enforce it, it adds that the case of a fugitive slave is like that of the aged prisoner in the Bastile, who could not endure his sensations upon release, and went back to die in the prison! So, then, according to this writer, slavery exerts the same benumbing influence on the human faculties that close imprisonment does. What an outcry would be made if an abolitionist used such language! Could a stronger illustration be made to show the innate hostility of slavery to the fundamental laws of human nature?

* * *

WAR NEWS.—Files of Mexican papers have been received to Oct. 7. Profound tranquillity then reigned in the city. Santa Anna had been called again to take the reins of government. The Mexican Congress met at Queretaro on the 5th, but nothing was done for want of a quorum. The feelings of the people are said to be strenuously opposed to any compromise with the Americans.

* * *

At Adine, in Friule, a poor man suffering under the agonizing tortures of hydrophobia, was cured by draughts of vinegar, given him by mistake, instead of another potion. Another physician at Padua got intelligence of this event, and tried the same remedy upon a patient at the hospital, administering a pound of vinegar in the morning, another at noon, and a third at sunset, and the man was speedily and perfectly cured.

SUMMARY.

The railroads of New York commenced carrying freight, Nov. 1st, under the new law. The roads are required by the law to pay the State the same tolls which are paid by the canals. The amount of these tolls, therefore, must be added to the ordinary rates of freight. The distances, too, are to be reckoned, not by railroad, but by canal. Thus the distance from Albany to Buffalo is to be reckoned 364 miles, because that is the distance by canal; whereas the distance by railroad is only 328 miles. The canal toll for first class merchandise is 33 cents per 100 pounds from Albany to Buffalo. Including this toll, the railroad freight will be 125 cents. Flour is to be transported at a special rate of 125 cents a barrel from Buffalo to Albany.

An explosion took place at the powder mill of Messers. Latham & Smith, seven miles from Catskill, on Monday morning of last week, instantly killing three workmen who were in the building at the time. One man left the building a few moments before the explosion took place, and thereby saved his life. The names of those killed are Overbagh, Westcott, and Scribner, all married men, and two of them have large families. The building contained about 4,000 pounds of powder. The explosion was so great that it was heard for 20 miles, and sensibly shook the buildings for 7 miles around.

A Mr. Chipfell, of St. Joseph's Co., Mich., was struck on the head with an iron bar by his son. The skull was so badly fractured that he died in an hour. The murderer took his gun and walked off, muttering that after he had killed some more he would finish himself. He went to an old brewery, stayed the night, and in the morning blew his brains out. The father's age was 89 and the son's 51. The reason he committed the murder was because the old man had often rebuked him for his intemperance.

The Geneva Gazette says that Mr. George Wilkie, one of the oldest and best farmers in that region, residing on the lake road about four miles south of the village, met with his death a few days since in the following shocking manner: His clothes accidentally caught in the shaft connected with the threshing machine which was in operation in his barn, and he was whirled round the shaft several times with great rapidity, his head striking the floor with great violence at each revolution. He lived about an hour and a half after the accident.

The London Magazine of Science for last month states that the Electric Company have invented a machine which will communicate intelligence simultaneously to some forty or fifty British cities—among them Liverpool, Glasgow, Manchester, Bristol, Leeds, Sheffield, Nottingham, Hull, and York. It can transmit at once to all these places from one thousand to two thousand letters per minute.

On Saturday, as Mr. Thomas Stevens was in the act of joining two cars while they were in slow motion, at the dépôt in Lawrence, they came together before he could escape, and crushed him between them, injuring him so seriously that he lived but twelve hours after. Mr. Stevens was a native of Canada, but has recently resided in Dover, N. H., and was about 25 years of age.

At the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, recently held in Baltimere, they protested against wars in general, and the war with Mexico in particular, against the institution of slavery and its farther extension, and against Odd Fellowship, Free Masonry, and secret institutions generally, as well as a paid or hired ministry.

The Art Union says that M. Brunel, a contractor on the Italian and Austrian railroad from Florence to Pistoja, has a daguerreotype picture sent him every evening, which represents the state of the works at the point where it was taken. Thus he has, at the end of every day, exact information of the work at both ends of the line, and the style in which the building has been conducted.

Gen. Verplanck, the Commissioner to negotiate a treaty with the Chipewas, in speaking of the wild rice which grows abundantly in Minnesota, says it is better than the Southern rice. The berries are larger and its flavor is better; for when boiled and stewed and left to cool it forms a consistent mass like good wheat bread, and more nutritious. Any quantity of it grows on all the lakes in this Northern country. The outlets and bays are filled with it. It ripens in the month of August, and is the main reliance of the Indians during the winter months for their sustenance.

The Chilian papers make a great parade in regard to a fall of snow in the city of Santiago, which happened about the 1st of August; it had not occurred before for 11 years. The climate of Chili is most delightful—snow or ice being scarcely ever seen. The city of Santiago is situated at the very base of the highest peaks of the Andes, and it frequently happens that during a bright day in the city, clouds will gather on the tops of the mountains, and then, clearing away, leave a covering of the purest snow. In the night volcanoes are sometimes seen.

Joseph Robinson, of Chester, N. H., has an apple orchard, planted and raised by himself, covering but two acres of land, the product of which this year is nine hundred bushels, exclusive of a second picking of inferior quality. Mr. Robinson has sold four hundred bushels for cash down, at one dollar per bushel—reserving five hundred bushels for a future sale. The entire income this year will not be below $1,000, and at far less labor than is bestowed upon a small farm.

We learn from the Charleston News, that the steamer Narraganset, from Charleston, bound for New-Orleans, went ashore near the Mosquito Inlet, Florida, and it is supposed will be a total loss—crew and passengers saved. The Narraganset was formerly in the line between this City and Stonington. She had recently undergone extensive alteration for the purpose of navigating the Gulf of Mexico. The weather on the Southern coast has been very severe recently.

It is stated that the steamer Bay State, plying between Fall River and New York, has netted to her owners at the rate of $50,000 profit for the season.

The Cleveland Daily Herald of Nov. 2d, says that about half an acre of the high lake-bank at the foot of Erie-street, slid off, Canada ward, carrying down and smashing to flinders the dwelling house of Mr. Alexander Colahan, from which, fortunately, the family had taken the precaution to remove the day previous. The land at the break has sunk about 30 feet nearly perpendicular, and the break extends some 20 rods. The quicksand and earth at the foot of the bank is crowded out into the lake, forming quite an upheaval.

A fearful and fatal railroad accident occurred on Wednesday evening on the Vermont and Massachusetts railroad. A freight train, consisting of an engine and two cars, loaded with railroad iron, was crossing a new bridge between South Royalston and Athol, when, the bridge giving way, the engine and cars were precipitated into the river, a distance of about forty feet. By this casualty six persons, at least, are known to have been killed, and it is feared that other dead bodies may be found beneath the cars, which remained in the river.

On Sunday evening, as the Rev. Mr. Tappen, the excellent chaplain of the Bellevue almshouse, was concluding his opening prayer in the chapel of the institution during Divine service, his voice faltered, and he suddenly fell in the pulpit in an apoplectic fit. Dr. Reese, the resident physician, with several of his assistants, being present in the congregation, immediately rendered every assistance; but, though partial consciousness returned by the use of restoratives, the venerable man sank during the night under universal paralysis.

The schooner Mayflower (Captain Hupper) arrived in Hampton Roads on Saturday, from Thomaston, bound to York river. The captain and several persons from the schooner embarked for Norfolk in a small sailboat, which was capsized before leaving the Roads, and John Alley, of St. George, one of the crew, and James Winkepaw and Moses Lawrence, passengers, were drowned.

It is stated, on what is considered authentic information, that not less than 150,000 bushels of wheat were raised in Oregon during the year 1846. Wheat appears to be the principal crop, and this year, it is said, it will be much more abundant than it was last year. The inhabitants complain much on account of the scarcity of vessels. They would export considerable grain if they had the means.

The Hon. Geo. P. Marsh and the Hon. Charles Paine, who were appointed a committee, under a resolve of the Legislature, to take measures for procuring statues of Ethan Allen and Thomas Chittenden for the Capitol, from the chisel of Powers, who is a native of Vermont, have reported their correspondence with the artist. He proposes six years as the time within which he could complete them, and $20,000 as the compensation.

The great bell for the Montreal cathedral, just received, is said to be the largest bell in the British Empire. It weighs 13 1-2 tons, and is 8 feet 7 inches in diameter. It is ornamented, and has cast upon it the effigies of the Virgin and St. John the Baptist; besides a medallion illustrative of agriculture, manufactures and commerce.

The late English papers give the particulars of another of those sad disasters which are somewhat frequently occurring in the British coal mines. Six men, in Wales, were precipitated a distance of ninety fathom, and literally dashed to pieces by the breaking of the chain (owing to a flaw in one link) by which the men were being hoisted out of the pit.

The aristocracy of England now maintain the following standing army: 300,000 servants; 500,000 dogs; 2,000,000 horses; 600,000 of different kinds of game to minister to their indolence, pride and hollow pomp, while hundreds and thousands have been starving for a morsel of food.

The New York & Erie Railroad is expected to be open for travel as far west as Port Jervis, Delaware county, before the close of the present calender year. From Port Jervis to Binghampton, a distance of 130 miles, the railroad is under contract—5000 men being employed on that section—and is expected to be completed in the fall of 1848, or about one year hence.

It is said a cow requires two tons of hay in a season—and should have from one to two quarts of meal a day, and about a peck of vegetables. Soiling is well adapted for the cow: grass, oats and corn, cut green, furnish excellent food for this purpose. Carrots are invaluable through the winter.

We see it mentioned as an instance of the growth of the West, that there are now forty-five thriving villages in Wisconsin, where there were none four years ago.

The Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania, now in session at Pittsburgh, the Harrisburg Tribune says, have decided the "No License Law" of Pennsylvania to be unconstitutional. The opinion has not yet been published. If this be the case, then the decision amounts to this, that anybody and everybody has the right to sell liquor without the sanction of the county.

Lieut. Diggle, of the 82d regiment of foot, was fined $80 at Amerstburgh, Canada West, for throwing a stone through the window of a lady's chamber, breaking the blinds and glass and striking her on the arm.

Married, at Mount Pleasant, Iowa, October 11, by J. T. Morton, Esq (hight 6 feet 3 inches,) Silas G. Weeks, Esq. of Warren Co., Ill., (hight 6 feet 4 inches,) to Mrs. Mary Robb, of M. P., (hight 6 feet 1 inch.)

Mr. Garrison reached Boston the latter part of last week. He is much reduced and is very feeble, but is gradually recovering.

A sailor was tried and acquitted in Boston a few days ago for whipping a shipmate. There was no proof of his guilt, except his own confessson, which the Court did not consider sufficient to warrant a conviction.

Gov. Stratton, of New Jersey, has appointed Nav. 25 as the day for Thanksgiving in that State. Some fifteen or sixteen States have appointed the same day, and no State has yet appointed any other.

Mrs. Nancy Beebe, of Portersville, Conn., was instantly killed, a few days since, by being thrown from a wagon.

A society in Cincinnati, called the 'Last Man,' held its anniversary meeting in that city on Wednesday. It was organized sixteen years ago, and but four of its members now survive,—which remnant met. No new members are taken in after organization, and the society continues annually to meet as long as one survives.

A company has been formed in the city of Schenectady, for the purpose of manufacturing carpets and rugs. The corporate name of this company is, "Schenectady Steam Mills," its capital stock is $30,000, divided into six hundred shares of fifty dollars each. Its business is to be transacted by five trustees.

A steamboat of 300 tons has just been built on the Kentucky river, in the mountains, fifteen miles from Lexington, and 100 miles deeper in the interior than a boat was ever constructed. She has been built, out and out, from the forest tree to the builder's finish, by four men only.

The Toronto Globe says, "An application will be made at the next session of the Legislature for an Act to incorporate a Company to construct a Railroad from the town of Brantford, to the shores of the Niagara river, opposite Buffalo, under the name and style of the 'Buffalo and Brantford Railroad Company.'"

A sheep of the Cheviot breed was clipped at Southerland, recently, the fleece of which was found to weigh nineteen and a half imperial pounds.

Twelve thousand emigrants arrived at this port last month, being about seven thousand more than during the month of October, 1846.

On the whole of the English Railways, the dividends of last year averaged seven and a half per cent. The profits on some were enormous, for a number of the lines in the returns were but partially opened.

The steamer Governor is to run on the Fall River route during the winter in the place of the Rhode Island. The Massachusetts goes on the Stonington route in the place of the C. Vanderbilt.

There was an increase of tolls on the Erie Canal from the opening of navigation until the 7th of October, over those of last year, of $773,277.

* * *

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, NOV. 8.

ASHES—Pots $6 62. Pearls 8 87.

FLOUR ANL MEAL—Flour fell about 12c. per barrel on the receipt of the Caledonia's news. Genesee sold at 6 56; Western 6 50. Western Meal 3 25. Rye Flour 5 12.

GRAIN—Wheat has fallen 4 cents per bushel. Pennsylvania old sold for 1 39, and Ohio mixed for 1 40. Corn 72 a 78c. Rye 98c. Oats 49c.

PROVISIONS—No changes to note.

MARRIED,

On the 27th of October, by Eld. W. B. Gillett, Mr. DANIEL DUNHAM to Miss ELIZABETH DUNN, all of Piscataway, N. J.

In Berlin, N. Y., Oct. 30th, by Eld. J. L. Scott, Mr. JOHN T. VARS, of Wirt, Allegany Co., and Miss DORCAS PECKHAM, of Grafton.

In Edmeston, N. Y., Oct. 28th, by Willis Delong, Esq., Mr. RICHARD E. SAUNDERS, of West Edmeston, and Miss JULIA ANN RAINEY, of Brookfield.

DIED,

Near Meadville, Pa., Oct. 10th, AMASA CROSBEY, in the 25th year of his age. He was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hayfield, Crawford Co., Pa., and died in the triumph of faith. A. A. F. R.

In Lima, W. T., Oct. 15th, MATTHEW S. PIERCE, son of Nathan Pierce, aged 25 years.

In Wirt, N. Y., of congestive fever, ERVILLA E. COON. daughter of Jared Coon of Alfred, in the 23d year of her age

Thou hast taken thy flight for the spirit land,
Thou hast left us, dear sister, a weeping band;
Together we breathe the bitter sigh,
With the mourner's sad tear in each trembling eye.

While we lingering bend o'er thy early grave,
And our hearts, overflowing, sink in sorrow's wave,
Hope bids us rejoice—thy spirit, now free,
With thy Saviour and God forever will be.

Yes, we know, happy angel, in that bright sphere,
Thou wilt know neither sorrow nor care nor tear;
And thy voice, could it speak from those fair skies,
Would exhort us to dry these tears from our eyes.

Then, the happy and blest shall we longer mourn?
Or thy rest would we break, since thy spirit is gone?
Oh no, sister, no! we'll wish no more
For thy presence again on earth's dreary shore. S. M. C.

Also, in Alfred, Oct. 19, of congestive fever, FANNY BURDICK, daughter of Asa Burdick, Esq., in the 29th year of her age.

Also, in Almond, Oct. 29, of puerperal fever, MIRANDA POTTER, wife of Elisha Potter, in the 37th year of her age.

The subjects of the above notices were all worthy members of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church of Alfred, all of whom have in a most unexpected time been called from us to their reward in heaven. N. V. HULL.

ERRATUM—In the list of deaths published last week, two verses which should have followed the obituary of a child in Friendship, were by mistake placed after the obitnary of a young lady in Stonington, Ct.

LETTERS.

Daniel Coon, J. L. Scott, Samuel Davison, Ezra Whitford, Ephraim Maxson, Daniel Potter, S. P. Stillman, Z. Campbell, H. H. Baker, Luke P. Babcock, N. V. Hull, P. C. Burdick, S. S. Griswold (right—yes.)

RECEIPTS.

A. Stillman,	Westerly, R. I.	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
B. W. Bentley,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Geo. Gavitt,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Wm. Potter,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
C. C. Lewis, Jr.	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
E. Gavitt,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
S. Wilcox,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
D. Stillman, Jr.	"	2 00	"	4	" 26
Lydia Cottrell,	"	2 00	"	4	" 26
Welcome Prosser,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
David Greene,	"	4 00	"	5	" 7
T. G. Wilbor,	"	2 00	"	5	" 26
J. C. Ayres,	New Market, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
A. G. Coon,	DeRuyter,	2 00	"	4	" 52
I. Burdick,	Edmeston,	2 00	"	4	" 52
W. Williams,	Watson,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Ezra Whitford,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
L. P. Babcock,	Scott,	2 00	"	4	" 52
A. L. Whiting,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
A. G. Lewis,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52

NOTICE.

The following are the names of Life Members of the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, who consented to let their share of the standing fund be made available to cancel the debts of the Society:—

Samuel Babcock,	$10 00	Luke Maxson and wife	20 00
M. Greene and wife	20 00	Silas Stillman	10 00
Adonis Trowbridge,	10 00	D. Randolph and wife	20 00
Henry C. Babcock,	10 00	R. Dunham and wife	20 00
Tacy Babcock,	10 00	Joel Dunn and wife	20 00
Martha Babcock,	10 00	Asa Dunn and wife	20 00
Augustus Saunders,	10 00	Catharine Stelle,	10 00
Ezra Babcock,	10 00	Paul Stillman,	10 00
Silas Davis,	10 00	B. Randolph and wife	20 00
I. D. Titsworth and wife	10 00	Edmund Randolph,	10 00

The above members having relinquished their claim, need not forward their names. But all others who are life members, are requested to substantiate their claims and forward the same either to H. C. Hubbard, Scott, N. Y., or S. S. Griswold, Hopkinton, R. I. S. S. GRISWOLD, Agent.
HOPKINTON, R. I., Nov. 1, 1847.

NOTICE.

The Executive Committee of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association will hold its semi-annual meeting at Pawcatuck, R. I., on the 4th day of the week next preceding the 3d Sabbath in November (17th of the month) at 10 o'clock A. M. THOS. B. BROWN, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

☞ Since the first publication of the above notice, it has been found necessary to increase the price of books in morocco. Persons ordering them in future, will please note the fact, and act accordingly.

PROCLAMATION,

BY JOHN YOUNG, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

A day of Public Thanksgiving is due to Almighty God, for blessings bestowed upon the people of this State during the past year.

While a sanguinary war has been raging upon our national frontier—while the principal city of a sister State has been scourged with a pestilence that walketh at noonday, and while gaunt famine and disease afflict the fairest portion of the mother country, the State of New York presents a gladsome picture of universal happiness and prosperity. Seed time and harvest have been continued to the husbandman—the laborer and the artisan have not sought in vain for employment—the ships of the merchant have traded in peace with the nations of the earth, and plenty has crowned the efforts of all classes of society.

The blessings of free Government—the means of universal education—the security of person and property, and the supremacy of law and order, have been vouchsafed to us in an eminent degree.

For all these, and for other good gifts, we are indebted to that Providence whose bounty and protection are conferred upon all, without regard to country or condition.

I, therefore, respectfully recommend to the people of this State, to observe the 25th day of November next, as a day of Public Thanksgiving; to abstain on that day from their usual avocations, and mingle, with their thanksgivings, prayers to Heaven for the continuance of its smiles, and for its protection against famine, disease and crime.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the Privy Seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at [L. S.] the City of Albany, this eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven. JOHN YOUNG.

By the Governor,
HENRY V. COLT, Private Secretary.

FIRESIDE READING

For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.

"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.

"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author.

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second " "	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third " "	April 5,	"	July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Miscellaneous.

THE BLIND BOY.

BY REV. DR. HAWKS.

"Dear Mary," said the poor blind boy,
"That little bird sings very long;
Say, do you see him in his joy,
And is he pretty as his song?"

"Yes, Edward, yes;" replied the maid,
"I see the bird on yonder tree."
The poor boy sigh'd, and gently said,
"Sister, I wish that I could see.

"The flowers you say are very fair,
And bright green leaves are on the trees,
And pretty birds are singing there;
How beautiful, for one who sees!

"Yet I the fragrant flowers can smell,
And I can feel the green leaf's shade,
And I can hear the notes that swell
From these dear birds that God hath made.

"So, sister, God to me is kind,
Though sight, alas! he has not given;
But tell me, are there any blind,
Among the children up in heaven?"

"No, dearest Edward; there, all see;
But why ask me a thing so odd?"
"Oh, Mary! He's so good to me,
I thought I'd like to look at God."

* * * * *

Ere long disease his hand had laid
On that dear boy, so meek and mild;
His widow'd mother wept and pray'd
That God would spare her sightless child.

He felt her warm tears on his face,
And said:—"O never weep for me;
I'm going to a bright, bright place,
Where, Mary says, I God shall see.

"And you'll come there; dear Mary too;
But, mother! when you get up there,
Tell Edward, mother, that 'tis you;
You know I never saw you here."

He spake no more, but sweetly smil'd,
Until the final blow was given;
When God took up the poor blind child,
And open'd first his eyes in heaven.

TRUTH AND HONESTY.

A LESSON FOR LITTLE BOYS.

Two boys, of nearly the same age, were one day amusing themselves with that dangerous, though not uncommon pastime, pelting each other with stones. They had chosen one of the squares for the playground, thinking by this means to avoid doing mischief. To the consternation of the thrower, however, a missile, instead of resting on the shoulders of the boy at whom it was aimed, entered the library window of one of the lordly mansions forming the quadrangle.

"Why don't you take to your heels, you blockhead; you will have the police after you whilst you are standing staring there," was the exclamation of his companion, and he caught him by the arm in order to drag him from the spot. The author of the mischief still retained his thoughtful position.

"If your father is obliged to pay for this, you will stand a chance of having a good threshing, Jack," the other boy urged.

"Never mind, Tom; leave me to myself," was the reply, and the young delinquent moved with unfaltering step towards the door of the mansion, the knocker of which he unhesitatingly raised. The summons was answered by a footman.

"Is the master of the house at home?" he with some diffidence inquired.

"He is."

"Then I wish to see him if you please."

"That you can't do, my man, but I will deliver any message for you."

"No, that will not do. I must—indeed I must see the gentleman himself." The earnestness and perseverance of the boy at length induced him to comply with his request, and opening the door of the library, he apologized for asking his master to see a shabby little fellow; and added, that he could neither learn his business nor get rid of him.

"Bring him in," said the gentleman addressed, who having witnessed the transaction, and over heard the conversation, was curious to know the object of the boy's visit. The poor child, whose ideas had never soared above his father's second floor, stood for some moments in stupified amazement when ushered into an elegantly furnished apartment; but remembering the painful circumstances which had brought him into this scene of enchantment, he in some measure regained his self-possession.

"I am very sorry, sir," he began in a faltering voice, "but I have broken your window. My father is out of work just now, and cannot pay for it; but if you will be kind enough to take the money a little at a time, as I can get it, I will be sure to make it up;" and as he spoke, he drew a few half-pence from his pocket and laid them on the table.

"That's an honest speech, my lad, but how am I to be sure that you will fulfil your engagement?" Mr. Cavendish returned. "Do you know that I could have sent you to the station house till the money is made up?"

"Oh, don't send me there, sir! it would break my dear mother's heart. I will pay you all—indeed I will sir," and the poor boy burst into tears.

"I am glad you have so much consideration for your mother's feelings; and for her sake, I will trust to your honesty."

"Oh, thank you, sir—thank you!"

"But when do you expect to be able to make another payment? This is a very small sum towards the price of a large plate glass," and as he spoke he glanced at the four half-pence which the boy had spread out.

"This day week, sir, if you please."

"Very well, let it be so. At this hour I shall be at home to see you." Poor Jack made his very best bow and retired.

True to his apointment, our high principled boy appeared at the door of Mr. Cavendish's mansion. As the footman had previously received orders to admit him, he was immediately shown into the library.

"I have a shilling for you to-day, sir!" he said exultingly, and his countenance was radiant with smiles.

"Indeed! That is a large sum for a boy like you to obtain in so short a time. I hope you came by it honestly?"

A flush of crimson mounted to the cheek of poor Jack, but it was not the flush of shame.

"I earned every penny of it, sir, excepting one my mother gave me to make it up," he energetically replied; and he proceeded to say, that he had been on the look out for jobs all the week; that he held the horse for one gentleman, and run on an errand for another; in this way accounting for eleven pence.

"Your industry and perseverance do you credit, my lad," Mr. Cavendish replied, his benevolent countenance lighting up with a smile. "And now I should like to know your name and place of residence."

"I will write it, sir, if you please. Indeed I brought a piece of paper for the purpose of putting down the money. I hope I shall be able to make it all up in a few weeks, for I am trying to get a situation as an errand boy."

"You can write, then? do you go to school?"

"Oh, yes sir. I go to free school!" And Jack stepped forward to take the pen which Mr. Cavendish held towards him.

"You write a tolerable good hand, my little man. You may, I think, do better than take an errand boy's place. Let me see if you have any knowledge of arithmetic."

Jack stood boldly up, and unhesitatingly replied to the various questions which were put to him.

"That will do, my good boy. Now, when do you think you will be able to come and bring me more money?"

"I will come again this time next week, if I'm alive and well, sir.

"That was wisely added, my lad; for our lives are not in our own keeping. This I see you have been taught."

Another week passed, and again Jack appeared, but his countenance wore an aspect of sadness.

"I am very sorry, sir," he said, "I have been unfortunate and have only a small sum to give you." And, as he spoke, he laid three pennyworth of half pence before Mr. Cavendish. "I assure you, sir," he earnestly added, "I have offered my services to every gentleman on horseback that I could see."

"I believe you, my boy; I am pleased with your honest intentions. Perhaps you will meet with better success another time. Let me see, you have now paid one shilling and five-pence, that is not amiss for the time;" and with an encouraging smile Mr. Cavendish suffered him to depart.

Though Mr. Cavendish had, from the first, coocealed his intentions, his heart was planning a work of benevolence, which was nothing less than to befriend the poor boy whose noble conduct had won his admiration. For this end he, a few days subsequently, paid the parents a visit, when he knew that the son would be at school. He related the incident which had brought him under his notice, and proceeded to ask whether his conduct toward themselves was equally praiseworthy.

"Oh yes sir," exclaimed his mother, her eyes filling with tears. "He has ever been a dutiful child to us, and always acts in this honest, straight-forward manner."

"He has, indeed, a noble spirit, sir," the father rejoined; "and I am as proud of him as if he were a prince."

"Would you part with him?" Mr. Cavendish asked. "I have something in view for his future benefit."

"Undoubtedly we would for his benefit," was the reply of both.

"Well, then, purchase him a new suit of apparel with these two guineas, and bring him to my residence this day week. I will acquaint you with my views for him for the future."

Language cannot describe the heartfelt gratitude which beamed in the eyes of the happy parents, nor could they find words to give it utterance.

When next our young hero came into the presence of his benefactor, his appearance was certainly altered for the better, though no disadvantages of dress could rob his noble countenance of its lofty expression.

Mr. Cavendish had previously made arrangements for him to become an inmate of his own house, and had also entered his name as a pupil in a neighboring school.

John Williams is now receiving a liberal education, and enjoying all the advantages which wealth can procure. Such a sudden change of position and prospects, would in many instances prove injurious to the moral character, but with a mind based upon the solid principles which our young friend possesses, little fear may be entertained that such will be the result.

The above little sketch is authentic in every respect, excepting the names of the parties concerned. The events occurred a few months ago, and are here made public with the hope that the truth and honesty, and judicious benevolence exhibited, may stimulate others to "go and do likewise."

HISTORY OF A MILLIONAIRE.

One great lion of the fashionable world to gaze at has been the house and establishment of the late Jonathan Hunt, the millionaire, which recently came to the hammer. As the origin of such as he gives a zest to subsequent history, it may be well to say, that Mr. Hunt was born at Troy, in this State, and commenced his career as a merchant by selling peanuts, cakes, and apples, from a basket. He soon extended his means, moved to Mobile, and, in the course of time, was known as a man of wealth, and retired to New York, where he fitted up an elegant mansion. After all was done his mind was shattered, and he engaged in speculations of the greatest hazard, yet all prospered. One of them was in cotton, which he bought to the extent of his credit, and made a fortune to the chagrin of those who doubted his sense, and refused him the facilities. He filled his house with the works of the painter and sculptor, and surrounded himself with all the luxuries of life—not forgetting a library, containing books the choicest scholars would covet. While his mind was wavering, it was a favorite recreation with him to talk with old apple-women, and tell them his present wealth and its origin, holding out to them the same golden future that attracted him. In his sane moments, like most others who have risen from honest poverty, he scorned the poor commencement, and hated malignantly those who brought it to mind. After years of impaired reason, he went to Charleston, and drowned himself by walking off the dock at night by mistake. He was a bachelor, and his remote kindred, after contesting his will, have at last been obliged to receive the proportion of his wealth he named. A thousand gibes have been uttered in the house of the ci-devant apple merchant, and he has passed off without causing a shade of grief. [N. Y. Letter.

A Remarkable Experiment.—A recent work of science gives the following novel experiment, which settles questions of some importance in philosophy:—

"Two hundred pounds weight of earth were dried in an oven, and afterwards put into an earthen vessel. The earth was then moistened with rain water, and a willow tree, weighing 5 pounds, was planted therein. During the space of 5 years the earth was carefully watered with rain water, or pure water; the willow grew and flourished; and to prevent the earth being mixed with fresh earth, or dust blown on it by the winds, it was covered with a metal plate, perforated with a great number of small holes, suitable for the free admission of air only. After growing in the air for 5 years, the tree was removed, and found to weigh 169 pounds and about 3 ounces; the leaves which fell from the tree every autumn were not included in this weight. The earth was then removed from the vessel, again dried in the oven, and afterwards weighed; it was discovered to have lost only about 2 ounces of its original weight; thus 160 pounds of woody fibre bark or roots were certainly produced; but from what source? The air has been discovered to be the source of the solid element at least. This statement may at first appear incredible, but on slight reflection its truth is proved, because the atmosphere contains carbonic acid, and is a compound of 714 parts, by weight, of oxygen, and 388 parts, by weight, of carbon."

A Beautiful Epitaph.—At a mason's yard in this city is a headstone, with these words—and only these words:—"Our Dear Little Baby;" and the marble upon which affection has cut the sentence, is as small and pure as an infant. Surely, here is perfection in an epitaph! The age of a dying child is nothing, and need not be recorded; and what is there in a name when the heart yearns for the form. This little stone has no mark for curiosity, and cold history would frown on it;—but a parent—any parent—entering the graveyard where that baby rests, and that small marble tablet may stand, would carefully avoid treading on the little grave, and yet would stand there conjuring up the once bright eyes of that baby fixed on a mother's love, and its arms opening for a father's fondness;—and then, alas, the dimming of those eyes, and the drooping of those arms—the silence, and what more sad of a dead child,—and the father and mother bereft of all but this cry of nature—"Our Dear Little Baby."

[Home Journal.

Economical Saw-Mill.—The Cincinnati Atlas says, nearly every body has heard of the saw-mill, some where "out West," which was driven by the "force of circumstances." This is as desirable a motive power for a mill as could be thought of, not only economical but having the very fine quality, as every body knows, of gaining force as the money market tightens. We traveled West a few miles the other day, and we found one driven by a power nearly as economical. Mr. Watkins, of Aurora, Ia., has a steam saw-mill lately put in operation, in which the only fuel is the dust made by the mill itself. There are two boilers, two engines, two saws, and the average work of this mill is about two thousand feet per day. Upon occasion this amount of work can be nearly doubled. We have heard of mills where the boilers were heated by the saw dust and slabs, but here the slabs are applied to other uses, and none of them used for fuel except a very small quantity when the dust has become very damp from wet weather.

Harvest without Previous Sowing.—In the Schnellpost we find an account of a method of compelling the wheat plant to become perennial, like grass, and to perfect its grains annually without annual sowing of seed, which has been successfully practiced at Constance in Germany. It was discovered by the steward of an estate named Kern. His method, after ploughing and manuring the land, and sowing it with summer or winter wheat, is to mow it in the spring before the ear makes its appearance. This process is repeated several times in the season, and the product is used as hay. The plant is then allowed to grow in the ordinary manner. The next year it ripens earlier, and bears more abundantly than wheat treated in the ordinary manner. It is manured in the autumn like grass in the meadows, and in the spring cleared from weeds. In this manner, from one field four successive harvests have been gathered.

Preserved Quinces.—Pare and core your quinces, taking out the parts that are knotty and defective; cut them in quarters, or round slices; put them in your preserving kettle—cover them with the pairings and a very little water—lay a large plate over them to keep in steam, and boil them till they are tender. Take out the quinces, and strain the liquor through a bag. To every pint of liquor allow a pound of loaf sugar. Boil the juice and sugar together about ten minutes, skimming it well; put in the quince and boil them gently for twenty minutes. When the sugar has completely penetrated them, take them out, put them in a glass jar, and turn the juice over them warm. Tie them up when cold, with paper dipped in clarified sugar.

Preserved Pippins.—Pare and core some of the finest; put them in your preserving kettle, with some lemon peel and all the pairings, add a very little water, cover closely, boil till tender, taking care that they do not burn; take out the apples, spreading them on a large dish to cool; pour the liquor into a bag and strain it; put it in your kettle with a pound of loaf sugar to a pint of juice, adding lemon juice to the taste; boil them slowly half an hour, or till they are quite soft and clear; put them with the liquor into your jar, and when quite cold, tie them up with clarified, or with brandy paper. They are not intended for long keeping. Hard pears may be done in the same way, either whole or halved, flavoring them to the taste.

Story of a Murderer.—I remember one man taken up twelve years after the deed. He made his escape, and though every search was made he could not be discovered. Twelve years afterwards, the brother of the murdered man was at Liverpool in a public house. He fell asleep, and was awoke by some one picking his pocket; he started, exclaiming, 'Good God! the man that killed my brother twelve years ago!' Assistance came to him; the man was secured, tried, and condemned. He had enlisted as a soldier, and gone to India, immediately after the deed was committed, and had just landed at Liverpool on his return, when his first act was to pick the pocket of the brother of the man he had murdered twelve years before. It was very extraordinary that the man waking out of his sleep should so instantly know him. [Lord Eldon

Curious Marriage Contract.—In the Royal Library of Paris is a written contract, drawn up in 1297, between two persons of noble birth in Armagnac. The document bound the husband and the wife to faithful wedlock for seven years. It stipulated that the parties should have the right to renew the tie at the end of that time if they mutually agreed; but if not the children were to be equally divided, and if the number should chance to be unequal, they were to draw lots for the odd one.

There is, in the same alcove of the library, a contract between Saint Bernard, of the Diocese of Rheims, and the Seigneur of Chatillon, by which the Saint binds himself to give the said nobleman the same number of acres of land in heaven as the Church receives of him on earth.

Order of Agriculture.—The King of Prussia has lately created an Order destined exclusively to agriculture—that is to say, to cultivators and persons who distinguish themselves in this department of industry. The decoration bears on one side the effigy of the King of Prussia, on the other the motto, "For agricultural merit," surrounded with a crown of wheat, with vine and olive leaves. The exergue bears the name of the designer. Three classes are to be established in this order. The King reserves to himself the exclusive right to distribute the Order of the first class: the second and third will be granted to farmers, presented by the College of Economy. The distribution will take place annually, on occasion of agricultural festivals and the solemn session of Agricultural Societies in the Prussian Monarchy.

[Scientific American.

Extraordinary Tree.—We regret to state, says the Liverpool Mercury, that during a late heavy storm, a portion of the famed lime tree at Nestadt, in Wirtemberg, was blown down by the wind which prevailed. This tree, which was planted more than 500 years ago, is thirty-six feet in circumference at the base, and the twelve main branches of this gigantic trunk were as thick as oak trees, being more than six feet in circumference. These twelve branches, thickly covered with foliage, formed a circumference of 450 feet, and rested upon 115 props, which, since the year 1554, were, for the most part, set up by noblemen, bishops, and other persons of distinction. The trunk of this once majestic tree is now standing, a mournful wreck of its ancient beauty.

Cold Bedrooms.—A person accustomed to undress in a room without a fire, and to seek repose in a cold bed, will not experience the least inconvenience, even in the severest weather. The natural heat of his body will very speedily render him more comfortably warm than the individual who sleeps in a heated apartment, and in a bed thus artificially warmed, and who will be extremely liable to a sensation of chilliness as soon as the artificial heat is dissipated. But this is not all: the constitution of the former will be rendered more robust, and far less susceptible to the influence of atmospherical vicissitudes than that of the latter. [Journal of Health.

VARIETY.

A stove has just been introduced from Paris, which in its use ingeniously manufactures superior gas for burning from the coal which is consumed. Thus the same fire which warms the building supplies the gas, without additional expense. It is stated that it can be applied to any other stove or furnace. An ingenious mechanic in the same city, has constructed an apparatus, which he has attached to an ordinary stove, and from experiments made, it is thought that this mode of obtaining a supply of gas in large buildings will be generally adopted.

There is no book so cheap as a newspaper; none so interesting, because it consists of a variety measured out in suitable portions as to time and quality. Being new every week or day, it invites to a habit of reading, and affords an easy and agreeable mode of acquiring knowledge so essential to the individual and the community. It causes many hours to pass away pleasantly, and profitably, which would otherwise have been spent in idleness and mischief.

Uncourteous habits have prevented many a man's success in life. Hasty, hot-brained, care-for-nobody individuals often plunge themselves into difficulties in consequence of their arrogant or overbearing manners, or their rude and ungentlemanly language, though it may be thoughtlessly expressed. It is often, not the great, but the little acts of incivility that are treasured up and remembered.

Sheridan wrote: "Women govern us; let us try to render them perfect. The more they are enlightened, so much the more so shall we be. On the cultivation of the minds of women, depends the wisdom of men." Napoleon said: "The future destiny of the child is always the work of the mother."

A lawyer once wrote "rascal" in the hat of a brother lawyer, who, on discovering it, entered a complaint in open court against the trespasser, who, he said, had not only taken his hat, but had written his own name in it.

Dr. Achilli, who has recently seceded from the Romish church, and who is now Professor of Divinity in St. Julian's College, Malta, has under his tuition fifty students who were recently Romish priests.

The Presbytery of Harrisburgh, Canada, have declared dancing sinful, and resolved to suppress it by admonition and every other means in their power.

The number of Baptists in London is about 14,000, and 12,000 children are connected with their Sabbath Schools.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the pess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 22. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1847. WHOLE NO. 178.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE FOREIGN MISSION—CHANGE OF LOCATION.

The recently-published Annual Report of the Missionary Association, contains a very full and interesting sketch of the rise and progress of our Foreign Mission. That part of it which gives the reasons for changof location from Abyssinia to China, will be particularly interesting to our readers, and we therefore copy it. We hope, however, that this extract will not diminish, but rather increase, their anxiety to read the complete Report:—

Since our last Anniversary the location of the Foreign Mission has been changed. It is proper, in this connection, to give a succinct statement of the reasons which have led to the change. That portion of Eastern Africa to which our accepted missionaries had been designated, was found to be by no means easy of access. Not only was it isolated in a geographical point of view, but the way to it was infested by a ferocious race of people, rendering it perilous to attempt the passage except under a very strong escort. It was certain, in the mind of the Board, that, even should our missionaries succeed in forcing their way into the country, a very long season must elapse before we could hear from them, and between all subsequent communications the longest and most discouraging intervals must take place, while all our remittances to them must be made at extreme hazard. These considerations were of themselves sufficient to bring the Board to a stand, notwithstanding the steps taken in the premises. However strong the claims of Abyssinia upon our Christian benevolence, and however intense the longings of enthusiastic ardor to proclaim to its inhabitants the gospel of peace, a dispassionate review of the subject could not fail to awaken reflections like these: That this was our first experiment in foreign missions—that we were ignorant of the mode of managing such a work, and had every thing yet to learn—that our people, few in numbers, were widely scattered, and hence great difficulty in concentrating, at any one point, a Board of Managers of sufficient strength to grapple so mighty an undertaking as a mission to the very heart of Abyssinia—that to undertake so great a responsibility in our scattered and comparatively undisciplined state, was viewed by many of the denomination as a zeal beyond prudence—that our benevolent operations had heretofore been mismanaged, so that many of our people were discouraged from farther efforts—that it was necessary now, in order to revive their courage, to direct our operations in such a way, that they should not be kept long in suspense as to the result—that a successful experiment, first made in some accessible region, would reanimate the drooping faith of the denomination, so that we should be better prepared for a more difficult work—and, farther, that our accepted missionaries themselves were of frail and delicate constitution, quite unsuited to the perils and hardships of an expedition into Abyssinia. Still these considerations, though weighty, would not have brought the Board to assume the responsibility of changing the location of the mission, had not other reasons of great importance been presented.

A reference to the Annual Report of last year will show, that the Board, at that time, was not without its misgivings of the impracticability of the contemplated mission to Shoa. For, after recommending that our missionaries "proceed to Aden, and embrace the first safe and favorable opportunity to proceed to the kingdom of Shoa," it is added, "and should farther information be unfavorable to the occupancy of a station in Shoa, and the opportunities for missionary labor in Aden not warrant their continuance there, that they be instructed to proceed to Zanzibar." The same Report also holds the following language: "Much attention has been given by the Board to inquiries respecting the particular field to be occupied, and the most eligible station at which to commence the intended mission. As the Board desire the most attainable unanimity in the denomination in all undertakings, they have not judged it best positively to determine either of these important points." Notwithstanding, therefore, the Report of the Board, recommending Eastern Africa as the field to be occupied, was adopted by the Association at its last meeting, yet as the recommendation itself was accompanied with these provisionary clauses, your present Board have felt fully justified in the course since adopted, inasmuch as weighty reasons have led to it.

It was understood that there resided at Salem, Mass., a merchant, who had spent several years upon the coast of Eastern Africa, and was intimately acquainted with all that country. Judging that we could obtain from him more correct information than from any other source, at a meeting of the Board held on the 7th of June, 1846, Bro. Carpenter was instructed to visit Salem and Boston, to obtain such knowledge as might be necessary for us in reference to the projected mission. Accordingly Bro. C. visited those places, and at a subsequent meeting of the Board, on July 19th, reported that he had obtained some valuable information respecting Eastern Africa, Aden, and Zanzibar. The following is extracted from the minutes of that meeting:—"From information obtained, we deem it not expedient to attempt a mission to the kingdom of Shoa, on account of the hostility of the government; and at Aden, it is thought, the climate is not congenial to an American or European. Resolved, That in view of the information before us, we deem it advisable that our missionaries, brother and sister Carpenter, proceed direct to Zanzibar, and from thence direct their efforts to the main land, and proceed to the interior of the country as circumstances may dictate." But upon still closer inquiry it was found that Zanzibar was extremely unhealthy; and that if Aden was objectionable on this ground, Zanzibar was still more so. The great object of the mission was ultimately the kingdom of Shoa. The developments respecting that country had given life to the whole project, and created all its supposed eligibility as a field for Seventh-day Baptists. Apart from those developments it possessed no stronger claims upon us than any other country. But if the hostility of its government was a sufficient reason for withholding the undertaking, the Board could see no good reason for planting its missionaries in some neighboring province, exposed to an early death, to wait for the removal of the obstacle. There was no certainty that the obstacle would be removed very soon, and the neighboring provinces, where they might remain unmolested, possessed no such relative importance as to entitle them to our labors above all other places.

In view of all the facts laid before the Board, it was thought, that to send our missionaries to Zanzibar, would not only be jeopardizing their lives unnecessarily, but would, in the event of their actually falling victims, be fatal to the whole project of a foreign mission, by crushing that spirit in reference to it which had just begun to prevail in the denomination. Moreover, as it had been from the beginning an object to have "the most attainable unanimity in the denomination in all undertakings," and as there was every reason to think that the selection of another field would meet the views of our people to as great an extent, if not greater, than the one already designated, your Board could not doubt the expediency of entertaining the design. Accordingly, at a meeting held in October last, a committee was appointed to collect information in regard to the most desirable field for foreign effort, and to lay the same before the Board at its next meeting. Not long before this, we were advised that Bro. Nathan Wardner, of Alfred, was willing to engage in the work of foreign missions. Bro. W. was a student in the Alfred Seminary, and, although he had not yet completed his studies, it was judged so necessary that brother and sister Carpenter have one or more companions in the work, that, at the advice of some of our most influential brethren, he gave himself up to the Board, and was accepted, together with his wife.

At the next meeting of the Board, held in Metouchen, N. J., our accepted missionaries were all present. The subject of changing the location of the mission was considered. It was a deeply interesting season. A sense of the great responsibilities entrusted to us seemed to pervade every heart. After a consideration of the report of the Committee, much deliberation, and a free expression of views on the part of all, it was determined that our missionaries should be designated to China, rather than to Africa. China contained a vast population; and, other things being equal, it appears to be our first duty to proclaim the gospel where it can be made to bear upon the greatest number of minds at once. The Chinese were a shrewd and intelligent race, and therefore likely to exercise a greater influence upon the world than most other heathen nations. Their country was continually growing in importance, and extending its intercourse with other nations. Add to this, the facilities of communication with that country would give us early information of the arrival of our missionaries, and the result of their operations, and also enable us to attend to their wants more promptly. On the whole, it was thought that to send our missionaries to that country would produce, at an earlier period, those results which would serve as fuel to feed and keep alive the flame, which had now begun to burn in the hearts of our brethren at home; and that at some subsequent period, which we hope may be not far distant, when we shall have acquired more strength in the work, we would occupy the kingdom of Shoa as originally contemplated.

It was gratifying to find, as we did afterwards, that this resolution of the Board met with a hearty response in the feelings of the missionaries themselves. They had, it is true, dedicated themselves to the work, to go whithersoever the Board might decide. But it was not without the most painful anxieties that they contemplated the appalling difficulties of a mission to Zanzibar and Shoa.

That the change has been satisfactory to the denomination, we have no reason to doubt. As far as we have heard, there has been but one voice. All have justified the measure, and by their contributions manifested their readiness to sustain the Board. We therefore submit our Report in the full conviction that the Association will sanction our course.

A GOOD CONSCIENCE.

There can not be found a better example than we met with in reading some memoirs of the great and good Colston, the founder of those excellent charities in London, Bristol, and elsewhere. It happened that one of his most richly laden vessels was so long missing, and the violent storms having given every reason to suppose that she had perished, Colston gave her up for lost. Upon this occasion, it is said, he did not lament his unhappiness, as many are apt to do, and perpetually count up his losses; but, with dutiful submission, fell upon his knees, and with thankfulness for what Providence had been pleased to leave him, and with the utmost resignation, relinquished even the smallest hope of her recovery. When, therefore, his people came soon afterwards, to tell him that his ship had come safely to port, he did not show the signs of self-gratulation which his friends expected to see. He was devoutly thankful for the preservation of the lives of so many seamen; but as for the vessel and cargo, they were no longer his; he had resigned them—he could not in conscience take them back. He looked upon all as the gift of Providence to the poor; and, as such, he sold the ship and cargo, and most valuable they were, and praying for a right guidance, distributed the proceeds among the poor. How beautiful is such charity! Here is no false lustre thrown upon the riches and goods of this world, that, reflected, blind the eyes that they see not aright. The conscience of such a man as Colston was an arbiter even against himself, sat within him in judgment, to put aside his worldly interest, and make a steady light for itself to see by, where naturally was either a glare or an obscurity, that alike might bewilder a less honest vision. [The Church.

PRAY.

Pray when the morning cometh,
With beams of rosy light;
Pray when the eve returneth;
Pray in the hush of night.

Pray when the noon-tide splendor
Of the day-god wide is spread;
Pray when the dying ember
Of hope from the heart has fled.

Pray without ceasing, ever,
While God shall give thee breath;
Soon earthly ties will sever,
And prayer be hushed in death. GERTRUDE.

MORAL AND SOCIAL CONDITION OF CHINA.

The Christian Watchman contains a report of remarks on the moral and social condition of China, recently made by Dr. Devan, in the Union Street Baptist Church, Boston, of which the following is an abridgement:

Dr. Devan observed, in commencing, that it is well known that the people of China have reached the highest civil and social elevation of all the heathen nations. His object, he said, was to set before the audience such facts respecting their social and moral state, their customs and opinions, as would lead us to pity their condition, and to do something for their relief.

The Chinese look with much solicitude at the birth of a child. If it is a female, all the neighbors come to condole with the father in his misfortune. Often the female child is destroyed, soon after birth, by being smothered, or by filling its mouth with rice. If spared, it is called a hated thing, and is treated with great neglect. When the child is a month old, the friends meet to give presents to its parents; and when it is a year old, the custom is repeated. They have a curious custom at this period, that while the child is yet an infant, they place before him all sorts of utensils used by men, and whatever the child takes hold of, or appears to be pleased with, is to be his implement for life. If he takes hold of a book or pen, he is to be a scholar; if a saw, a carpenter; if he chances to be pleased with a razor, he is to be a barber; if he grasp a hoe, he is to be a farmer; and at this time, and in this manner, his occupation for life is unchangeably fixed.

If the child is a female, when it is four years old, the binding of the foot takes place. The toes are firmly pressed into the sole of the foot, and bound there, and the binding continues from four to six years. The foot thus compressed, will not, even when its possessor becomes a full-grown woman, exceed two or three inches in length, and these females are thus forever incapacitated from walking a natural gait. They ever after hobble along as if walking on stilts. Chinese parents say that the child must have these small feet, or she can never be married, which is true.

At seven or eight years of age, girls are taught to sew. They are hardly ever taught to read. The Doctor said that a little girl was once brought to the dispensary for medical treatment, and he asked her if she could read. The people present said, "She is a girl." Not appearing to notice this reply, he repeated this question to her, when all the bystanders burst into a loud laugh, and said, "Why, she is a girl;" as though every one ought to know that a girl would not be expected to know how to read. Of course, so far as females in China are concerned, it is of no use to distribute tracts. The few females who can read, spend their time in reading novels (for they too have novels) which are if possible more silly than ours. They usually spend two or three hours each day at their toilet, and much of their time is spent in smoking.

The male child is sent to school at seven or eight years of age, and is taught to worship Confucius and the schoolmaster. For about three years he is only taught the sounds of the characters in the books; afterwards he is taught the meaning, so that many boys can read whole books, without knowing the meaning of a single sentence. At ten years of age, it is thought to be time that children should be betrothed. This is done by means of go-betweens, which are usually females. These go-betweens select a girl of about the same rank as the boy, and form the contract, which is ratified by the parents of both exchanging papers containing simply the name and the age of the children thus betrothed. These contracts are binding in law, which allows of no falling back from engagements thus formed. Presents are now given, especially the betel nut, which is so much used in smoking. The boy continues to go to school, the girl to practice her toilet, embroidery and smoking.

At the age of eighteen, it is thought to be time for the young man to marry. The groom sends a present of betel nut to the bride; if it is accepted, it is understood that the marriage may take place in three months; if the bride or her parents, are unwilling, the present is returned. If the marriage is to take place, word is sent to that effect to the other world, as they say, to the young man's ancestors, that a new member is to be added to their family. This is done by writing down the message on a piece of paper, and burning it; for they suppose that spirits, in another world, can read from the ashes, as we read from the paper itself. The girls now assemble to wail over the bride, because she is to cease to be one of their number. The groom sends a number of men, in dirty red coats, with drums and gongs, to the house of the bride, and he sends two geese, the emblem of matrimony, one of which is eaten by the bride and her friends, the other is returned to the donor, to be eaten by him and his friends.

He is now called a man,—previously he was only a boy,—and the wife is now called a woman. She is seated in a curious chair, and is carried in procession to her husband's house, and all her furniture and baggage. When she reaches the house, the bride and bridegroom see each other for the first time. She now worships the idol of that house, and in the same way all the friends of her husband, the homage being the same to the human being as to the idol. The next morning she brings a bowl of water and a towel to wash her husband's parents, in token of servitude. For the first month she and her husband do not once eat together. The reason given for this custom is, that she is supposed to be too modest to do so. Nor does she afterwards eat with him, if visitors are present, nor must she even be seen. She must not eat with her husband, if one of his parents is present, but eat at a side table, or after they have done. This is the custom in taking the first wife, for a Chinaman may take several wives, but the others are inferior, have large feet, and are little else than servants. It is very disreputable for a widow to marry again, and if she does so, she sinks to the level of a slave.

There is no such thing as domestic happiness among them. The women all feel as slaves. Many of them say they do not know whether they have souls or not. Thus they live and die.

When a person dies, whether male or female, the body is splendidly dressed in the warmest winter clothing, to keep it warm, as they say, in another world. Cold they regard as a great evil, and heat as a great blessing. On the third day, the burial takes place. A person goes before the coffin and scatters small bits of paper, to conciliate the idol of that street. They carry a great number of offerings, of various kinds of food, and when they reach the grave the offerings are laid on the coffin, and they all bow to it three times three. Then they take the offerings, and all return and have a grand dinner. If the deceased was a father, the children write his name on the empty chair, or table, and this they worship fourteen days. One of the sons is selected to mourn, which he is to do by hanging down his head, not saying a word. The females also mourn, but they must make exclamations; for even mourning must be done by rule. At the end of twenty-one days they have a grand feast, and at the end of forty-nine days they lay aside the white cloth, the badge of mourning. The chair is now deposited among the family deities.

They also worship the tombs. They take some pork, fish, tea, and sugar cane, and place them on the tomb; they then eat what they wish, and remove the remainder. This they do as an act of worship to their deceased friends, and this is the last idolatrous practice that a Chinese will give up. Even those who give evidence of being converts to Christianity, are sometimes found engaged in this practice, and if we get evidence that they have left off this entirely, we have the strongest confidence that their conversion is real, and that they have entirely abandoned idolatry. They have been taught from infancy that worship is what makes them happy in another world, and it is very hard to divest them of this notion.

Money is the Chinaman's God. For this they will do and suffer any thing, but they live and die without a thought of eternity. The missionaries have often been urged by foreign residents to teach the Chinese the sciences, but they have no confidence in any thing but the doctrine of a crucified Saviour.

Their ideas on spiritual subjects are crude enough. Some believe that they have souls, which are situated in their livers; others doubt whether they have any, and others think they have several. At death they are sent to purgatory, where they must appear before ten judges in succession, and pass through as many purgatories. The last is furnished with a great wheel, into which their souls are put, and as it whirls with great rapidity, they are thrown off in all directions, and one comes out a pig, another an ox, another a bug, and they must then pass through life in the shape of one of these animals or insects. But the majority think little or nothing about the subject. The priests and the most religious talk about these things, but money is the god which they all unite to worship.

ENERGY OF CHARACTER.

A bold vigorous man, what a tone he gives to the company he may be in, to the society in which he lives, to the nation wherein he was born! Men seem inebriated with the atmosphere around him, so completely are they overcome by his presence. He is never weary, never languid, there is nothing enervating falls from him in action or speech! He strengthens and arouses; he sets men of no confidence on their feet, not purposely, but by his own example. They see him one of themselves, the boy that they went to school with, played with, expanded into a man, and drawing all after him into the vortex in which he moves. He is a perpetual reproach to the sluggard, a joy to the timid, those who want confidence, and who fancy they are by temperament or situation precluded from possessing or manifesting that daring, animating power. Energy of character is continually renovating society; elevating men to a level whence they see how easy it is, or seems, to become as great and joyful, as strong and vigorous, as he who, by act or thought, lifted them up. It is animating to see men press on in the emulation inspired by some noble fellow who figures in the past, or is present among them. The enthusiasm one man may create by bold and earnest action is astonishing. One jovial, free-hearted, generous stranger, coming by accident or otherwise among us, will often upset and reinvigorate a clique of friends inured, completely trained in, to dullness and customary quiet. The enthusiasm of the moment overbears all our preconceived notions of order, and our silent respectful decorum, our fear of giving offence, pitiful but common vice which makes us careful, even to folly, in what we say, is by the current of this man's spirit, rolling through us and forcing up ours, swept away; and the night, the day, the time, whenever it is, from thenceforth a bright spot in our history. It is from this, public meetings derive their intense interest, and public opinion its force. We are sure of meeting some earnest man who will cheer us, give us keener, fuller sensations; thus one or two beings, connected with the millions of mystic charms of sympathy, communicate the fire of their own minds to every man, until its powerful energy awakens the dormant intellects of all.

LAST INTERVIEW OF EMMET AND HIS BETROTHED.

Emmet was unfortunately betrayed by his enemies, in an attempt to emancipate his countrymen from tyranny and oppression. He was therefore convicted of treason, and sentenced to be executed.

The evening before his death, while the workmen were busy with the scaffold, a young lady was ushered into the dungeon. It was the girl he had so fondly loved; and who had come to bid him an eternal farewell. He was leaning in a melancholy mood against the window-frame of his prison, and the heavy clanking of his chains smote dismally on her heart. The interview was bitterly affecting, and melted even the callous heart of the jailer. As for Emmet, he wept, and spoke little. But as he pressed his beloved in silence to his bosom, his countenance betrayed his emotions. In a low voice, half choked by anguish, he besought her not to forget him; he reminded her of their former happiness, of the long past days of their childhood, and concluded by requesting her sometimes to visit the scenes where their infancy was spent; and though the world might repeat his name with scorn, to cling to his name with affection. At this very instant the evening bell pealed from the neighboring church; Emmet started at the sound; and as he felt that this would be the last time that he should ever hear its dismal echoes, he folded his beloved still closer to his heart, and bent over her sinking form with eyes streaming with tears of affection. The turnkey entered at this moment, and, as though ashamed of a temporary betrayal of sympathy, dashed the rising tear from his eye, and a frown again lowered upon his countenance. The man meanwhile approached to tear the lady from his embraces. Overpowered by his feelings, he could make no resistance, but as he gloomily released her from his hold, gave her a miniature of himself, and with this parting token of attachment, imprinted the last kisses of a dying man upon her lips. On gaining the door, she turned as if to gaze on the object of her widowed love. He caught her eye as she retired; it was for a moment; the dungeon door swung back upon its hinges, and as it closed after her, informed him too surely that they had met for the last time on earth.

CHOICE PASSAGES FROM RICHTER.

Look upon every day as the whole of life, not merely as a section; and enjoy the present without wishing to spring on to another section that lies before thee.

Do not wait for extraordinary opportunities for good actions, but make use of common situations. A long continued walk is better than a short flight.

Do not expect more esteem from others because you deserve more, but reflect that they will expect still more merit in yourself.

Do not seek to justify all thy actions. Value nothing merely because it is thy own, and look not always upon thyself.

If thou wouldst be free, joyful, and calm, take the only means that can not be affected by accident—virtue.

No one would praise you in a beggar's frock; be not proud of the esteem that is given to your coat.

An evil vanishes, if I do not ask after it. Think of a worse situation than that in which thou art.

Vanity, insensibility, and custom, make one steadfast. Wherefore not virtue still more?

Never say, if you had not these sorrows, that you would bear others better.

* * *

CHANNING ON BOOKS.—In the best books great men talk to us, with us, and give us their most precious thoughts. Books are the voices of the distant and the dead. Books are the true levelers. They give to all who will faithfully use them, the society and the presence of the best and greatest of our race. No matter how poor I am; no matter though the prosperous of my own time will not enter my obscure dwelling. If learned men and poets will enter and take their abode under my roof; if Milton will cross my threshold to sing to me of Paradise; and Shakespeare open to me the worlds of imagination, and the workings of the human heart; and Franklin enrich me with his practical wisdom—I shall not pine for want of intellectual companionship, and I may become a cultivated man, though excluded from what is called the best society in the place where I live.

* * *

WISHING TO BE A CHRISTIAN.—There is no virtue in this. Many rest contented with merely saying, "I wish I was a Christian." That may be true, and yet you are not a Christian. Ten thousand things which we wish to do, we yet, on the whole, choose not to do. God's requirement is—"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." You want to be a Christian, perhaps, but do you choose to be a Christian? Do you want to be a Christian in such a sense that you set aside every other "want" which interposes to prevent?

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 18, 1847.

THE CATHOLICS—THE SABBATH.

The rapid increase of the numbers and influence of the Catholics in this country, is regarded by many good Protestants as giving just occasion for alarm. If we mistake not, the editors of the orthodox newspapers, as a class, are particularly susceptible to fright upon this subject. Hence they gather up and publish, with appropriate comments, every item of intelligence relating to the Catholics, which shows a disregard of popular notions, and is likely, when presented in its worst light, to create prejudice against them. If a Catholic priest finds a barefooted child in the street, and gives him a pair of new shoes, these argus-eyed guardians of the public weal think they see in the circumstance an incipient step towards the conversion of the child to Romanism. And if the same child, or any other, is offered the advantages of a Catholic school free of expense, the evidence is regarded as conclusive that a systematic attempt to proselyte has commenced. Now we do not doubt the zeal of the Romanists to make converts, nor the honesty of those who profess to see so much danger in their efforts. But we must confess that we question whether Catholics are so greatly distinguished from Protestants by their zeal as to lay them open to any very serious charges on that score; and hence we seriously doubt the policy, not to say the Christianity, of finding so much fault with them. It seems to us that a more excellent way would be to imitate them, or go before them, in acts of charity and efforts to educate the ignorant. The mass of men will be much more likely to acknowledge the superiority of Protestantism over Catholicism when they see it illustrated in actions than when they see it asserted on paper.

But there is one point where a great deal of fault is found with the Catholics, concerning which we have a word to say. It is in respect to their regard for the first day of the week, sometimes called the Sabbath. In various ways, they are charged with inconsistency and wickedness because they use this day for purposes which in New England are regarded as improper. There lies before us now a newspaper giving some account of the opening of a Catholic College in one of the Western States on Sunday. The ceremonies, it is said, were accompanied by the firing of cannon, and all the parade and noise of a military muster. The account closes by saying, "And this on the Sabbath!" We are not disposed to justify such a use of a day which is regarded as the Sabbath. But we venture to say, that the Catholic view of the first day is quite as near the truth as the view entertained by their condemners. The Scriptures do not command us to keep that day holy, nor do they give us any definite information as to the manner in which it was observed in the days of the apostles. If we look into church history for information upon the point, we shall find that it was regarded as a very different day from the Sabbath. It was a festival day, only a few hours of which were required for worship, while the remainder might be spent in labor or amusement, according to each man's inclination. In this light was it generally regarded through the first six centuries of the church. From that time until the Reformation, the day was if possible regarded as stlil less sacred. Some of the leading Reformers, among whom were Luther in Germany and Tyndale in England, denied that the first day had been substituted for the seventh as the Sabbath, and maintained that if any day should be kept with sabbatic strictness, it must be the seventh day of the week, or Saturday. Indeed, the notion of the first day's being the Sabbath, and observable with the strictness required in the fourth commandment, seems to have originated with the Puritans, some two hundred and fifty years ago, and is now received only by that portion of the world over which their influence has been extensively felt. Intelligent Catholics are well acquainted with these facts. They know that the only day to which the fourth commandment can apply is the seventh day of the week; and that the first day, according to the universal voice of the early church, was only a festival day. Under such circumstances, with what contempt, not to say suspicion of dishonesty, must they look upon the charges of inconsistency and wickedness which are so often preferred against them by their Protestant neighbors for observing the Sunday as a holiday. They know very well that to carry out their principles consistently, Protestants must either abandon the idea of a Sabbath, or return to the observance of the seventh day. They boldly assert it, and farther declare, that "the Sunday is no more the Lord's by the law of the fourth commandment, than the Friday, for the Lord's day of the fourth commandment is the Saturday."

◆

The Jews in Salonica.—The New England Puritan publishes a letter from Rev. Mr. Schauffler, dated at Constantinople, August 10, 1847, urging the establishment of a mission in Salonica with special reference to the Jews. From Mr. Blunt, the British Consul, who has resided for 12 years at Salonica, he had derived much valuable information. In enumerating the circumstances favorable to a mission there, Mr. Schauffler says, that through the dissemination of the Old Testament among them, they have become more friendly. They perceive that we love and understand the law and the prophets. They feel kindly in view of the important service we have rendered them by giving them the Holy Scriptures in a language which they can read and understand; and they confess that the translation is without guile, honest, and true. It must be remembered, he says, that the center of rabbinical learning is not Constantinople, but Salonica, and the assent of the Salonica Rabbis to the correctness of our version, is a concession which could hardly have been expected, and which cannot fail to make a favorable impression among the Jews generally.

◆

EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES.

"In the evening after the Sabbath, Sept. 18, a special meeting was called at the house of Eld. James Bailey, DeRuyter, N. Y., for the purpose of considering what occasions of complaint against the Board there may be in relation to money collected by Eld. Azor Estee in 1844, the contributors of which designed it to be for the support of Eld. James L Scott as a missionary of the Board in the West. There were present brethren T. B. Brown, David Dunn, A. D. Titsworth, W. B. Gillett, Azor Estee, N. V. Hull, James H. Cochran, Maxson Green, John A. Langworthy, S. Davison, and Geo. B. Utter. After full deliberation, it was Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary be directed to prepare, and publish in the Sabbath Recorder, an article on the subject, stating the amount of money collected in the field where dissatisfaction is said to exist; the cause of misapprehension, on the part of the Board, relative to the object for which the money was subscribed; the regret of the Board on that account; and their readiness to refund the money to those who, having paid, wish it returned, on application to N. V. Hull or Maxson Green, of Alfred, N. Y. It is farther understood, that the money to meet these calls, should any be made, shall not be taken from the treasury of the Association, but shall be raised by a private subscription for that express object."

In compliance with the foregoing instructions, the Corresponding Secretary hereby gives notice, that a list of the subscriptions raised by Eld. Estee for the support of Eld. Scott, has been placed in the hands of Maxson Green and N. V. Hull, which is believed to include all that was subscribed by persons residing in Allegany Co., N. Y., and other places where the dissatisfaction is said to exist. Each subscriber, on application to Bro. Hull or Bro. Green, can have his donation refunded to him. The sum total raised by the above subscription, is fifty-seven dollars and twenty-three cents.

That all who are interested may have the fullest understanding of the case, the Corresponding Secretary judges it advisable simply to state the facts, as exhibited in the following extract from the Minutes:—

"Plainfield, N. J., March 22, 1844.

"The Executive Board met at the house of Randolph Dunham. David Dunn was appointed Chairman.

"Eld. Azor Estee made a request, through [on behalf of?] the Shiloh Church, for an appointment to travel as missionary and agent for the Association for one year; proposing to do so for the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, to cover which he presented a subscription from the brethren at Shiloh, pledging themselves for that amount; the incidental expenses of his agency to be borne by the Association.

"Resolved, That Eld. Estee have an appointment for one year, according to the above terms."

Bro. Estee appears to have commenced his agency in the churches of West New Jersey, where he raised about thirty dollars towards sustaining Bro. Scott in the western field, in whose behalf much sympathy had been enlisted. The following extract will show how these $30 were disposed, as well as the action of the Board in reference to Bro. Scott's mission:—

"June 4, 1844.

"At a special meeting of the Executive Board, at Plainfield, N. J., called at the suggestion of Eld. Estee, he presented sundry letters from individuals in Illinois and Iowa, requesting missionary labor; and he, having learned that Eld. James L Scott had located himself in that country, had obtained about $30 on subscription, to assist him in laboring in that section of country, on condition that his so laboring should be approved by the Executive Board.

"Therefore, Resolved, That Eld. James L. Scott have an appointment to travel under the patronage of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, from this time until the meeting of the Association in September next; and that the Secretary be directed to forward to him his instructions agreeably to the rules already adopted.

"He is appointed with this understanding, that the subscription already raised for that purpose shall be his remuneration, with what he may obtain on the field of labor, without drawing any funds from the Association."

In the farther prosecution of his agency, Bro. Estee drew up a subscription paper in the following form:—

"We, the undersigned, desirous that the Missionary Association may meet its present engagements, and also be enabled to sustain Eld. James L. Scott as a missionary in the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa Territory, do agree to pay for this object, on or before the first day of September next, to some person authorized to receive it, the sums annexed to our respective names, on condition that Eld. James L. Scott is appointed a missionary, furnished with publications for distribution, and instructed to labor in the above-named region of country."

This subscription paper was circulated in Allegany Co., N. Y., and other places. Those who affixed their names to it supposed, that all the money raised would be appropriated to the support of Bro. Scott, and no other purpose. On the other hand, Bro. Estee thought—no doubt honestly—that the money, if not applied to the support of Bro. Scott, might be fairly and honestly applied to the general purposes of the Association. Under this impression, he prosecuted his agency, and made his returns to the Board. No member of the Board remembers to have seen the subscription paper until the late meeting at DeRuyter. It is not the custom of the Board to prescribe the phraseology of the subscription papers circulated by their agents, nor to examine them particularly afterwards. A letter of instructions is always given, to which the Board takes for granted that the agent has strictly adhered, unless facts to the contrary are brought to light. All that is required, is that he make a faithful return of money received; and, if any portion of it has been contributed for a specific object, apart from the general purposes of the Association, the Board takes for granted that the agent will report accordingly. Bro. Estee made report of his agency, as far as it had been prosecuted, at a meeting of the Board held in connection with the Association's Anniversary at Verona, N. Y., in Sept. 1844. At that time Bro. Scott's appointment had expired, as will be seen by reference to the foregoing extracts from the Minutes. Bro. E., supposing that the money he had collected might be fairly appropriated to the general purposes of the Association, and the Board not having it distinctly before their minds that the money was subscribed for a specific object, to the entire exclusion of all others, and as their agreement with Bro. Scott had been literally and honestly fulfilled—(the reader is requested to peruse again the extract from the minutes of the meeting that appointed him)—did, in good faith, suppose that the funds collected by their agent might be applied to other objects. It was far from the intention of the Board to dispose of the money contrary to the wishes of the donors, and it is a matter of profound regret that any trouble has arisen on this account.

In this connection it may be stated, that Bro. Estee, while in the prosecution of his agency, learning that Bro. Scott was in needy circumstances, did, upon his own responsibility, forward to him a part of the funds he had collected; an act, which was afterwards sanctioned by the Board, in view of all the circumstances laid before them. Bro. Scott, therefore, instead of receiving only $30, according to the original appointment, actually received nearly three times that amount for three months' services, more or less, besides what he realized upon the field of labor.

Such is a simple statement of the facts; and it is hoped that nothing more is necessary to justify the Board from any imputation of dishonesty. Should any thing farther be required, other facts and documents are in their possession, the publication of which will fully exonerate them.

It is due to the occasion to add, that the Board, although aware that some dissatisfaction existed on the part of certain brethren residing in Allegany Co., were never, until the late meeting at DeRuyter, in possession of any thing tangible to enable them to take action in the case. Effort was made, and correspondence was sought, with a brother who felt himself particularly aggrieved, to obtain from him a distinct specification of charges against the Board. Our effort was a failure, no attention being paid to the request; and it was only by taking advantage of an occasion which called together several brethren from Allegany County, who had perfect knowledge of the facts, that the Board have been enabled to do what perhaps some may think ought to have been done long ago.

Abstaining from all comments, and willing that the cause should be tried altogether by the facts, the foregoing is respectfully submitted to all whom it may concern.

On behalf of the Board.
T. B. BROWN, Cor. Sec.

◆

ANOTHER CIRCULAR.

To the Life Members of the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society:—

The Circular to the Life Members of the above-named Society, published Oct. 21st, had scarcely appeared to the readers of the Recorder, when I learned by information from different sources, that the life members greatly exceeded our estimate, and, as a natural consequence, our published apportionment greatly exceeded the amount due to each individual. For this reason, and also that I have not heard from several Societies in which I presume that there may be life members, I have felt compelled, (though much against my inclinations,) to stop payment on those shares for the present, and until a complete list of names can be made out. Doubtless our brethren who have made application for their share, or given orders for its disposal, will see the propriety of this step, as there is no other way that justice can be done to those remaining now unpaid.

I already have a list of names amounting to one hundred and thirty-one, who, there is presumptive evidence to suppose, have paid their fee of two dollars—(and the proof is on hand that the greater part of them have paid, which is forty more than the number on which our estimate was made)—who had a claim on the standing fund previous to any being paid at DeRuyter in September last.

I will now propose, that those members who have a claim on the standing fund forward their names with their proof immediately after the publication of this notice, or at farthest by the fifteenth of December next, with their orders how to dispose of their money, and by that time a new estimate can be made and payments made accordingly.

I will take occasion here to say, that those who have written me since the publication of the circular referred to, have presented satisfactory proof of their claims.

It may appear strange, that such a wide mistake could be made in the amount of the standing fund as to get it $400 below what it really was, and still to presume that it is more than that. Strange as it may appear, it is nevertheless true. And it may be proper to state, that all the guide to direct me in ascertaining the amount, was by the amount of loans and deposits of this money in different parts of the country, and the accounts were so vague and contradictory, (there being no regular entry of them on the records of the treasury,) that it would be less strange that I should get the amount wide of the mark, than it would be if I should get it perfectly correct.

In 1842 I made, as I thought, as thorough an examination of this matter as my means would allow, and made out, as will be seen in the treasurer's annual report of that year, that there had been an aggregate of $1,130 paid into the treasury and to the agents. I have not since been able to find accounts of loans or deposits that would make it exceed that sum, and the excess of life subscription payments, above the amount of moneys funded, is a matter I cannot yet explain. H. C. Hubbard, Treas.

P. S. Life Members in Hopkinton, Westerly, and vicinity, will please communicate with Eld. Griswold. H. C. H.

Scott, Nov. 11th, 1847.

◆

Increase of Missionaries.—Never, says the Journal of Commerce, if we may judge from the general character of the press, was there, at any period of the world, so extensive an interest taken in the subject of efforts for the diffusion of knowledge and Christianity throughout the world. The "American Board," it is stated, have now in the foreign field 226 laborers; the "Baptist Union" upwards of 250; and both these societies contemplate sending out, the ensuing month, large reinforcements of these devoted men; in addition to the several companies that have sailed within a few weeks past.

At the same time, the Episcopal and Methodist, as well as the Presbyterian churches of this country and Great Britain, are making increased efforts for multiplying the number of their foreign missionaries.

At the annual meeting of the committee of Wesleyan missions, says a London paper, it was resolved to increase the number of stations; and to add thirty additional laborers to those already in the field. The new stations are chiefly in India, Africa, and Australia. Openings are presented to the Society for a farther increase of their missionary force, and were men and means forthcoming, fifty more could at once be employed. The "Watchman" says truly:—

"Never were the heathen, throughout the world, so willing to receive missionaries, and to listen to their teaching. Witness the country of Ashanti, Yariba, Dallomi, and other parts of Western Africa, and the interior nations of the Southern portion of that vast continent; not to insist on India, open from North to South, and from East to West, to the labors of the Christian teacher; or on the openings of Australia and Feejee, and last, though not least, in the empire of China. Never were there such facilities as at the present time for conveying missionaries throughout the world, and of maintaining a communication with them for their support and comfort."

◆

The Baptist Interest in Vermont.—A correspondent of the Christian Reflector says that the capital of Vermont is without a Baptist church; Vergennes, the only city in the State, is without a Baptist church; eight out of fourteen county seats have no Baptist churches; two of the remaining six have little or no preaching. Not one quarter of the towns on the Connecticut river, from Canada to Massachusetts, have Baptist preaching. The Central Railroad passes through the entire State, and through many beautiful villages, not one half of which have Baptist preaching. The Champlain and Connecticut River Railroad passes through about twenty villages, only six of which have Baptist preaching. The Passumsic Railroad, in its whole distance, passes only two villages where there is Baptist preaching. Not over twenty-five churches in the State give their pastors a competent support.

◆

Madison University.—This is the name of the Baptist literary and theological institution at Hamilton, Madison Co., N. Y. A proposition is now under consideration for its removal to some more central and accessible location, where an endowment of $150,000 for it can be obtained. Rochester has been proposed, and the churches in Western New York give encouragement of raising $75,000 on condition of its being located there. Utica and Syracuse have also been named. We believe, however, that no definite propositions have yet been made from any place. The subject will be likely to awaken considerable interest.

◆

A Dying Man's View of the War.—We see it stated in one of our exchanges, that Dr. Kendrick, of Hamilton, who has been sick for a long time, sent a request to the New York Baptist State Convention, at its recent meeting, that it would give an expression against the Mexican war. We believe that the Doctor was never accused of rashness or ultraism; and when such men, lying at the point of death, feel so deeply upon the subject of the war, there is reason to pause and consider.

◆

Foreign News.—Soon after our last paper went to press, the steamship Washington arrived at this port, bringing foreign news several days later. It was unimportant. There had been a few more failures, but the state of things was regarded as no worse than when the previous steamer left.

The French steamship New York arrived at this port on Sunday last, with continental dates two days later, but no intelligence of importance.

◆

The Annual Report of the Missionary Association, presented at the recent meeting in DeRuyter, has been printed, and is ready for distribution. As the postage on such pamphlets is very high under the new law, it will be advisable for the churches to send for them by some one visiting New York, if possible. They can be had at 9 Spruce-st.

◆

The money expended by Great Britain in seven wars, would have constructed fifteen railroads round the globe, allowing the cost to have been $25,000 per mile.

A CONSERVATIVE NEWSPAPER.

A good deal has been said by the Presbyterian and Congregational newspapers, within a few months past, about a tract on "Christian Nurture," by Dr. Horace Bushnell, which was published by the New England Sunday School Society, and afterwards suppressed on account of its supposed heterodoxy. The Doctor himself has written more or less upon the subject, particularly in reference to the influences which contributed to the suppression of his tract. He speaks in one paragraph of the New-England Puritan, the organ of the orthodox party in the following language, which shows how little good, (or how much evil,) a conservative newspaper may do:—

"I should not discharge my whole duty, in this connection, if I did not say that these demonstrations, which I so earnestly deplore, are probably traceable, in a very considerable degree, to a single cause, and the sooner you awake to the mischiefs you suffer from this quarter, the better. If one sinner destroyeth much good, far more true is it, that one bad newspaper destroyeth much good. You have a Religious Newspaper, that has long been exerting a most baneful effect upon your churches, restraining the breadth of Christian character and opinions, undignifying the feelings, and perverting the Christian manners of your people! To say that this paper is behind the age, is nothing, it is behind all ages. It is as ignorant of the past, as it is opposite to the future! It exhibits that uncomfortable spirit which properly belongs to a brute conservatism held by the will, separated from all intelligent views of the past, and even further still, from the dignified and courtly sentiments that are commonly connected with a veneration of ancient names, and opinions. The one virtue for which it is sometimes praised, viz: its consistency, is but another name for the fact that its opinions, and manners, and spirit are equally bad, that it holds to them all with equal tenacity. This paper aggravates every mischief you suffer; indeed, I sometimes think it is the author of whatever is undesirable in your present state."

◆

A Short Creed.—Rev. W. H. Knapp, pastor of the Unitarian Society, in Nantucket, Mass., lately preached a sermon wherein he avowed himself hostile to the church formulas and creeds of his own denomination as well as others, and proposed the following profession of faith as a substitute:—

"Regarding Jesus of Nazareth as our spiritual Teacher and Guide, we desire more faithfully to follow him, to be governed by his spirit, to be true to our age and mission as he was to his, to coöperate with him in his work, in building up his kingdom on earth, and introducing the reign of righteousness, truth, and love among men, and to this end we associate together as the 2d Congregational Church in Nantucket."

◆

Virginia Destined to be Free.—The Norfolk Herald, alluding to a statement in the Parkersburgh (West Va.) Gazette, that large numbers of citizens of the Old Dominion are leaving their territory for the Far West, says:

Now in this there is nothing that should cause regret in Virginia. Let those who are lured by the prospect of gain, or who really believe that they can better their condition by emigrating to the new States, follow their bent—and take their slaves along with them! The vacuum may cause a momentary weakness, but it will only be to recruit with two-fold vigor. The place of every slave will in time be filled by a hardy, industrious, tax-paying, musket-bearing freeman, of the right stuff to people a free State, which Virginia is destined to be one of these days, and the sooner (consistently with reason) the better for her own good.

◆

National Morality.—Neil S. Brown, the new Governor of Tennessee, was inaugurated at Nashville, a few days ago. The following paragraph, touching on National Morality, is as beautiful as it is true:—

"Claiming as full an exemption from superstition as most men, I firmly believe, and take pleasure in announcing it, that no State can prosper in a long career of true glory, in the disregard of the claims of justice, and the injunctions of the Christian religion. A flood-tide of apparent prosperity may come, filling for the time the avenues of trade, and satiating the cravings of taste and curiosity, yet sooner or later it has its ebb, and either cloys with its abundance or leaves the void greater than before. History is a silent but eloquent witness of its truth, and from her undying lamp sheds a stream of unceasing light along our pathway. The fabrics of ancient greatness, built by injustice and consecrated to ambition, are now flitting shadows before us, startling up from behind the broken pillars and falling columns that were reared to perpetuate the genius by which they were wrought."

◆

Dwellers on the Ocean.—The Sailor's Magazine estimates the number of men whose home is on the deep, at between two and three millions; and that of this number, but about ten thousand are the disciples of Jesus Christ. Included in this number, it is thought, there are about eight hundred pious captains. In the vessels of the United States, there are supposed to be about two hundred and seventy-five thousand sailors. In consequence of the peculiar exposure to which this class of men are subjected, it is found that the length of a generation is but about fifteen years, and that some six thousand, on the average, every year perish by shipwreck.

In view of this large number of seamen, their perils, and the shortness of their lives, the same paper urges the duty of greater efforts for their religious instruction, and for elevating them, as a class, morally and intellectually.

◆

"Common Law" out West.—The Rochester American says that "it is a part and parcel of the 'common law' of Illinois and Wisconsin, that farmers should pay for their papers out of the first load of wheat they bring to market after harvest." A fine thing it would be for publishers if such a law could become universal.

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

Intelligence somewhat later has been received from the seat of war. The city of Mexico was in a state of comparative quiet, and there were rumors of peace. The American forces have taken possession of the city of Atlixco, and Orizaba. There have been two more battles; one at Puebla, which was formed in a state of insurrection, and had to the quieted; the other at Huanautla, which is thus described:

"Gen. Lane having arrived at Perote, was there joined by Capt. Walker and his command, both advanced together on the Puebla road till they reached the town of Vreyes, at which place Capt. Walker, by order of the commanding general, took up his line of march to Huanautla, by way of the towns of San Francisco and Guapastla. On his arrival at Huanautla, a sanguinary engagement took place in the streets, between the force of Capt. Walker, consisting of 250 men, and that of the Mexicans numbering 1,600.

"The result of this contest was the total expulsion of the enemy from the town, and its occupation by our valiant little army, which lost in the battle only six men; but the gallant Walker, after performing prodigies of valor and feats of the most daring character, fell in single combat, pierced by the spear of an enraged father who was goaded to actual frenzy by the death of his son, whose fall beneath the arm of Capt Walker he had just witnessed. The father rushed forward, heedless of all danger, to revenge his child's death, and attacking the Captain with almost irresistible violence, plunged his spear into his body and slew him almoss instantly. In this engagement the Mexicans lost 200 men and three pieces of artillery."

◆

Sailed for India.—The new ship Valparaiso got under way for Canton. This is the first vessel that has sailed out of this port direct for the East Indies, for a number of years, and the occasion of her departure, with a number of missionaries on board, excited considerable interest, and as she moved down the river in tow of the steamer Washington, cannons were fired. Some twelve or fifteen years ago there was a considerable East India trade belonging to this port, and it was no unusual thing for Indiamen to sail here almost every month; but that trade has since been entirely lost to us. It is to be hoped, however, that with our commerce increasing in almost every other quarter, this state of things will not long continue.

[Philadelphia News.

The North American adds that Messrs. Cox & Boughton shipped, on board the Valparaiso, an invoice of their superior stoves, destined for Shanghai, China. This is a new channel for Philadelphia enterprise, and the Celestials, at a distance of 18,000 miles, can cook their rice and roast their rats and puppies on stoves made of the Keystone iron.

◆

Potato Rot.—Mr. J. Pinneo, of Hanover, N. H., writes to the editor of the Boston Cultivator, that it had been remarked in that vicinity that the potato rot did not affect the hills which were planted in the immediate neighborhood of shade trees, though all other parts of the same field were seriously affected with the rot. The inquiry is how this can be explained. The editor of the Cultivator seems to think that there is no doubt but that shade trees protect potatoes from the rot. He says: "They save the potatoes from the extreme heat of the sun, and they prevent dews from falling on them, thus avoiding the two extremes of heat and cold, which are doubtless a principal cause of this malady, especially when the changes are sudden, and the plants are very tender from a luxuriant growth."

◆

International Post Office Arrangements.—The Postmaster General has given notice, that in consequence of the English Government having charged full postage on all letters taken out by the steamer Washington, it has become necessary, as a measure of self-protection, that this Government should take the steps authorized for terminating the subsisting arrangement between the two countries, in relation as well to British mails in transit through this country for their colonial possessions on this continent, as the ordinary mail intercourse between those possessions and the United States. He therefore states, that on and after the 16th inst. no mail matter destined for any of the possessions on this continent, will be permitted to leave the United States, unless the United States postage thereon is previously fully paid.

◆

Tale of Suffering and Death.—On Saturday, Oct. 30, the Lord Ashburton, a vessel from Liverpool, freighted with a general cargo, and passengers, arrived at Grosse Isle, in a most wretched state. When sailing her passengers numbered 475 steerage and two cabin. Before her arrival at quarantine station, she had lost upward of one hundred and seven, of dysentery and fever, and about sixty of the remaining passengers were then ill of the same complaints. So deplorable was the condition of those on board, that five of the passengers had to remain to work the ship up from Grosse Isle. A steamer, the Alliance, was sent down for them, and on board her all were embarked, without respect to circumstances—the sickly, the healthy, the tottering, and the dying! On her way up from Grosse Isle to Quebec five deaths occurred; how many will have taken place before she reaches Montreal?

◆

Progress of Freedom.—The Southern Observer says—Quite a spirited discussion is going on in the Charleston papers about the propriety of having separate houses of worship for the slaves, and of giving them religious instruction. A writer in the Evening News, after commenting upon the article of his opponent, remarks in closing, that the time is near at hand when no institution can long endure in the civilized world, which is inconsistent with the spread of knowledge and religion. The true policy, the best security of the South, is to maintain that slavery is consistent with everything that is good, and that we are not afraid to give the slave the word of God. He says, the moment the South admits that we dare not, our doom is sealed.

SUMMARY.

An accident by which several lives were nearly lost, occurred near Mannington Hill, Salem County, N. J., on Monday It appears that several small lads, who attend school at the above place, were at noon playing in and about an excavation, when a large portion of the overhanging earth fell upon and buried two of David Petit's and one of Samuel Hall's sons. Mr. Petit's oldest boy was entirely buried to the depth of several feet, and when taken out was supposed to be dead. The other two were much bruised, but not dangerously injured. The boys who escaped the accident set to work with commendable promptness, and succeeded in relieving the sufferers, otherwise it is believed that all three must have perished.

The ship Sir Edmond Parry sailed from Plymouth, England, on the 8th ult., with upward of 100 children, whose parents had some years before emigrated to New South Wales, but who left some of their offspring behind from their inability to pay the sums demanded, which varied from one to five pounds. Dr. Sullivan, an experienced surgeon in the emigration service, had been appointed by Her Majesty's Emmigration Commissioners for the medical superintendence of this interesting shipment of juveniles; a matron and schoolmaster accompanied the children, and the arrangements made for them have been such as to reflect the highest credit on the vigilant care of Her Majesty's commissioners.

The Judiciary Committee of the Vermont Senate have reported a bill, in accordance with the Governor's recommendation, providing that at any time before marriage the betrothed parties may enter into a contract declaring their consent, that after marriage the wife shall continue to hold the whole or part of any interest in real or personal estate, or right of action which she may be possessed of at marriage, free from the control of her husband; and enabling the wife to hold devises, conveyances or bequests, without the intervention of trustees.

The Scientific American says that Mr. N. B. Lucas, of Jefferson county, Illinois, has invented a new Threshing and Winnowing machine, which can thresh and clean with ease 600 bushels of oats in a day, and about 500 of wheat. It threshes damp grain well, separating the damp grain from the straw easily. The inventor says that there is no machinery that winds with damp straw; no elevators to choke; no hand required to pitch straw from the machine, as the machinery throws it in a pile, to be taken with a horse-rake, and thereby saves the labor of a man.

On searching the house of an old woman in Boston, who pretended to be very poor and took in washing, there was found some thirty packages of gold pieces, and in some of these packages were found very small wads of paper. As these appeared to be done up very compactly and in the smallest possible compass, curiosity induced the officer to carefully unroll one of them, and to his surprise he found it to contain a $5 bill. The whole amount of money found in the chest was over $600.

A black man, who lived at Hempstead Plains, Long Island, says the Farmer's Cabinet, invented the horse-rake. He died in 1821. It was first introduced into Pennsylvania in 1824. The first one was destroyed by a malicious person, who feared its innovating effects on the price of labor. It is now becoming universal, and many a patent instrument is to be found while the inventor is forgotten. It saves at least one half of the expense of gathering hay.

The London Standard of the 7th of October gives an account of an attempt by a noble Duke to smuggle brandy, cordials, and wines into Southampton. The articles were seized, part of them in the Duke's yacht, and the remainder in a chest in his palace. Another smuggler has been detected in the person of a lady of one of the colonial bishops who attempted to smuggle in a lot of foreign silks. She was detected, and the property seized; but her ladyship was suffered to run.

On Friday night, a fire of charcoal was made in the interior of the barque Lewis, lying at the foot of Market slip, and Henry Arleain, aged 17 years, a native of Guadaloupe, and a colored man named Wm. Thomas, who slept on board, were both suffocated, by inhaling the carbonic acid gas emitted from the charcoal, and were found dead en Saturday morning. What is remarkable about this matter is, that these suffocated persons were in a house on deck, where they supposed there could be no danger.

The soldiers of the War of 1812, who served under the late President Harrison, together with the friends of the lamented Soldier and Statesman, have been invited by a preliminary meeting, held a few days since, to convene in the city of Cincinnati, on the 6th of November, to consult upon the most suitable measures for the erection of a monument at North Bend, designed to be a memorial of the national gratitude to that illustrious patriot.

Johnson D. May was sentenced to five years confinement in the penitentiary, on the 19th ult., in the St. Charles (Mo.) Circuit Court, for attempting to burn the steamboat St. Croix, in 1845. It will be recollected that he shipped a quantity of stone on board said boat, neatly boxed up as specie, had it insured as such, and for the purpose of converting it into veritable specie, attempted to burn the boat as the most practicable means of effecting the transformation.

A duel was fought on the 9th ult., near St. Joseph, Tensas Parish, La., between a man named Shellings, and one named Bowman. They fought with bowie knives—Shellings was killed, and Bowman was badly wounded. The parties were from Mississippi.

A writer in the New York Mirror vouches for the fact, that there lives in the 1st Ward of that city, a miser, who picks up rags in the street, reputed to be worth $20,000.

It seems there are but two papers published in Mexico, in Spanish and English. The post is to be re-established. Gen. Scott has imposed a contribution on the corporation of $150,000, payable in three weeks, in instalments of $50,000.

The Niagara suspension bridge was put under contract Tuesday, Nov. 9th, at $180,000. Mr. Ellet, of Philadelphia, is the contractor.

The two greatest farms of New England are in Vermont. Consul Jarvis, upon the Connecticut at Wethersfield, has a giant farm with his twenty barns, contained in a single tract of splendid interval and upland. Gov. Meech, upon Lake Champlain, has a still larger farm, and more numerous cattle, sheep, and horses, in a single body at Shelburne. It is conjectured that Nathan Smilie has more and better farming cultivated lands in Cambridge, Vt., than either.

The Lehigh Reporter says that large pieces of crystalized copperas, apparently as pure as that sold in stores, is found in large quantities on the land of Peter Breinig, in upper Macungy township, Lehigh Co., Pa. Copperas ore was mined for a number of years on this tract by Mr. Whitely, but never before was the pure article taken out, and that in lumps varying from ten to fifty pounds.

The London Mining Journal for August 14, contains a project for laying down a telegraphic line of communication between the west of Ireland and Nova Scotia, to be composed of stout copper wires twisted, enclosed in an India-rubber pipe. Suppose that it did not break in the middle, would not anchors, wrecks, &c., near the shore, interfere with its permanence?

The Chronotype says that a couple of rogues have been playing a new game in the western part of Ohio. One passed through the country, confining his visits to the small villages, distributing Bank Note Lists, in which the Tenth Ward Bank, of N. York, a broken establishment, was quoted at par. The other soon followed with the bills of the said Bank, and succeeded in doing the honest people to the amount of some hundreds.

The Emperor of Russia has issued a decree ordering all the Jews in the empire either to become members of one of the guilds of commerce, or burgesses of towns, or to become cultivators of the soil. Those who refuse to comply with these orders are to be subjected to all the measures of repression which the government may think proper to adopt.

The Scientific American says that from a table in the Boston Shipping List, that for the month ending Oct. 31, 3206 tons of ice have been exported from that port, of which 1,363 tons went to Calcutta, and the remainder to the south and to the West Indies. The total exports of ice for five months, are 18,919 tons against 18,054 tons last year.

We learn from the Bath Times, that on Saturday morning, 6th inst., the dwelling-house of Widow Groves, situated near Wiscasset village, Me., was totally destroyed by fire, and melancholy to relate, the lady owner and her brother, Mr. Reuben Young, were both consumed in the flames. They were aged people—upward of 75 years old—the only persons in the house at the time of the fire, and as the fire was not discovered till the house was completely enveloped in the flames, no clue is afforded to the cause of the accident.

The Utica Herald, of Thursday, says, that some mischievous person attempted to blow up a freight train on the Utica and Schenectady railroad, on Tuesday night, near St. Johnsville. Several parcels of gunpowder, put up in paper, were placed on the track, with some percussion caps, which, exploding as the wheels passed over them, fired off the powder. The wooden casing of the boiler was set on fire and consumed before the flames could be subdued.

The N. Y. Tribune mentions the case of a man found one night on the top of a liberty pole 125 feet high. When discovered he was turning the vane. On descending he was caught and taken to the station-house, when he seemed rational, but had no recollection of what had happened. He got out of the dormer-window of his house, it is supposed, as he retired very early, and when found all the doors were locked.

The original Declaration of Independence, in the hand-writing of Thos. Jefferson, with numerous interlinear and marginal corrections, is now in the possession of the American Philosophical Society in this city. It is preserved with great care. The Society will not allow any copy to be made of the instrument.

On the 17th ult., as Mr. Sawyer, a young gentleman, was riding at a very fast rate to see a female acquaintance in Dearborn county, Indiana, he came up against the telegraphic wires, which cut his throat, producing almost instant death. The wires had been lowered for the purpose of making certain repairs on the line.

At the late sitting of the Court of General Sessions for Darlington District, South Carolina, Hon. Judge Wardlow presiding, James Carlisle was brought to the bar, charged with selling a negro slave, the property of Mr. P. W. Pledger, of Marlboro District, to which charge he plead-ed guilty, and was sentenced to be hung on Friday, the 25th of February next.

A clock worth $700 has been placed in the business room of the Custom House at Boston. It consists of an ionic iron column placed upon a stone pedestal. The column passes through the floor into the second story for about twelve feet, where are four faces looking to each side of the room.

Frederick Douglass has decided to establish himself at Rochester, and to issue his paper from that place instead of Cleveland, as at first arranged. He requests that all letters and papers for him may be sent to Rochester, N. Y.

In the Sardinian States, there are 408 convents, which are said to have received from the Government, during the last 15 years, grants, amounting to 100,000,000 francs (£4,000,000.)

A splendid block of granite has been erected on the spot where Benjamin Franklin was born, in Milk street, Boston. On it in enduring letters is the following inscription: "The birth-place of Franklin."

A church at Walsall, England, was recently blown up by an explosion of gas which had escaped from the pipes. The whole interior was torn and defaced, and the beadle was killed.

The operatives of Manayunk, Pa., have determined in public meetings, to memorialize the Legislature of that State for the ten hour system.

Hiram Stacy, Esq., of Sangerville, Me., raised on his farm this season, pumpkins of an enormous size—one of which weighed 157 pounds.

One of the drop curtains of the Broadway Theatre cost $1600. It is of silk damask.

Five large brick buildings in Tivoli Hollow, Columbia County, owned by Stephen Van Rensselaer, Esq., were destroyed by fire on Friday last. They were occupied by Fingley & Co., as a bedstead factory, and by others as machine shops. The loss is estimated at $20,000.

Mr. Crawford Livingston, of the firm of Livingston, Wells & Co., long and favorably known as the senior of the "Express Line," died at 4 o'clock at the residence of his father, Livingston Manor, Columbia Co.

We understand that a daughter of Wm. Chatfield, of Derby, Ct., while laboring under an attack of delirium tremens on Sunday, attacked her father with a fire shovel and fractured his scull, by which his life is endangered.

We learn from the mail agents, says the Rochester Democrat, that hereafter there will be no way mail on any of the railroads of the State on Sunday. The through mails, however, between the principal places will be carried as heretofore.

There is a memorial in the National (Patent Office) Gallery, asking Congress to purchase this estate, and make it free at all times for visits from the public. A large number of signatures have already been appended by citizens and strangers.

The election in New Jersey to determine, by townships, whether they will have any tavern licenses, for the sale of intoxicating liquors, granted for their respective townships or not, will take place on the first Tuesday (the 7th) of December.

The expenditure at the Springfield U. S. Armory for the manufacture of arms and machinery for the year ending June 30th, 1847, was $172,537 65, including 14,300 muskets at $10 86 each, and 204 musketoons at $11 00 each.

Gov. Bissel, of Connecticut, has appointed Ex. Gov. Roger S. Baldwin United States Senator in place of Hon. Jabez W. Huntington, deceased. This appointment will hold until the meeting of a new Legislature of Connecticut in May next.

The passengers who left New York Saturday evening in the steamer C. Vanderbilt, (Stonington route,) arrived in Boston at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes, making the passage in 11 hours and 20 minutes. This we believe is the quickest passage on record.

The amount of coal forwarded to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, the present season, will not vary much from the enormous quantity of four hundred and seventy thousand tons.

The great 'Galloway Estate' in Bucks Co., Pa., which was advertised for sale a short time ago, has been sold by auction, for the aggregate sum of $118,415 75.

◆

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, NOV. 15.

ASHES—Pots $6 75; Pearls 8 87.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 18 a 6 25; Michigan and Oswego 6 12. Western and State Meal 3 25; Jersey 3 50. Rye Flour 5 00. Buckwheat 2 00 in bags, and 4 25 in barrels.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 40; Ohio 1 35; Southern 1 20. Corn 70 a 73c. Rye 9[illegible]. Barley 80c. Oats 49 a 50c. White Beans 1 37.

PROVISIONS—No change in the price of meats. Lard 9 a 10c. Butter 13 a 18c. for State; 10 a 13c. for Ohio. Cheese, Ohio and good State, 6½ a 7½.

MARRIED,

In Westerly, R. I., Oct. 9th, by Eld. Isaac Moore, Horace V. Lanphear, of Stonington, Ct., to Sybel G. Sharp, of Westerly. In Stonington, Ct., Nov. 3d, by the same, George W. Taylor, of Hopkinton, R. I., to Elizabeth Stillman, of Stonington. At the same time and place, by the same, Jonathan Larkin, of Westerly, R. I., to Mary M. Stillman.

In Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 10th, by Eld. L. Crandall, Mr. Joel Tappan, of that place, to Miss Caroline Saunders, formerly of Newport, R. I.

In Verona, Oneida Co., N. Y., Oct. 14th, by Rev. Josiah Arnold, Mr. Morris Langworthy, of Brookfield, Madison Co., to Miss Margarett Green, of Verona.

DIED,

At Westerly, R. I., Oct. 29th, 1847, of consumption, Mr. Enoch W. Vose, aged 36 years. Mr. Vose, for nearly five years before his death, was a professed disciple of Christ. About ten months since, he found himself attacked by the dreaded disease which had removed his brothers and other near friends. He was confined to his room about three weeks. His sufferings were severe. His faith was strongly tested in giving up his affectionate wife and his fond children. He possessed in abundance what might make life desirable. But as the current of mortal life ebbed towards the gateway of the grave, his immortal life rose through abounding grace and flowed with strong emotions towards the Paradise of God. To his wife and children and friends, who stood weeping around his dying bed, he spoke in words of calm and holy resignation. Being asked if he was afraid to die, the instant and emphatic reply was, "No—my trust is in God; glory to God." While prayer was being offered, and a hymn sung, descriptive of the heavenly world and state of the righteous, he fervently exclaimed, "Glory to God." At the close of the hymn he repeated this same triumphant rejoicing exclamation, and in an instant, without a struggle, was quietly asleep in the arms of the Saviour. Thus to die is gain.

In Charleston, R. I., on the 8th inst., Mr. Ethan Crandall, aged 90 years. He has long professed the Christian religion, and was a member of the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. He died in hope of eternal life. Sermon on the occasion by Eld. J. Greene, from 2d Corinthians 5th chapter and 6th verse.

Erratum.—In an obituary notice of Miss Langworthy, published in the Recorder, vol. 4, No. 2, instead of Susanna the name should have been Lusana, daughter of the late Dea. Saunders Langworthy.

LETTERS.

Lucius Crandall, James H. Cochran, Maxson Green, S. P. Stillman, I. Moore, Wm. P. Langworthy, A. B. Crandall, J. Arnold, L. Leonard, J. Avery, L. D. Ayers, Charles Potter, Samuel Davison (sent on 2d day.)

RECEIPTS.

Henry Sheldon, Alfred,	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Alfred Lewis, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
D. M. Burdick, "	2 00	"	4	" 31
S. C. Maxson, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Nathan Lanphear, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Thos. Hull, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
Wm. Maxson, Andover,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Joshua Green, Rushville,	2 00	"	5	" 20
Joshua Babcock, Mina,	2 00	"	5	" 21
Ezekiel Crandall, L. Genesee,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Z. R. Maxson, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
L. J. Coon, "	1 00	"	3	" 26
A. B. Crandall, Portville,	50	"	4	" 52
J. J. Brown, "	2 00	"	3	" 52
E. P. Crandall, W. Genesee,	2 00	"	4	" 52
J. P. Dye, DeRuyter,	1 50	"	4	" 20
S. L. Babcock, Adams,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Jos. J. Green, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
M. Langworthy, Unadilla Forks,	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Utter, "	2 00	"	4	" 26
Bassett & Crandall, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Benj. West, Leonardsville,	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Whitford, Berlin,	2 00	"	4	" 52
David Whitford, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
R. E. Lanphear, "	2 00	"	4	" 42
Desire Maxson, Troy,	2 00	"	5	" 18
M. B. Danielson, New York,	2 00	"	4	" 52

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

THE NATIONAL ERA:

Washington City, District of Columbia.

G. BAILEY, Editor; JOHN G. WHITTIER, Cor. Editor.

L. P. NOBLE, Publisher.

The leading purpose of this journal is, the discussion of the question of Slavery, and the advocacy of the main principles of the Liberty Party. Due attention is given to Social and Political Questions of general importance; nor are the interests of a Pure Literature overlooked.

It aims to preserve a faithful record of important events: of inventions or discoveries affecting the progress of Society, of public documents of permanent value; and, during the sessions of Congress, to present such reports of its proceedings, as will convey a correct idea not only of its action, but of its spirit and policy. The debates on the exciting subjects of Slavery and the Mexican War, expected to arise in the next Congress, will occupy a large share of its columns.

Arrangements have been made for extending and enriching its already valuable Department of Home and Foreign Correspondence.

It is printed on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in the best style, at $2 a year, payable in advance.

The generous spirit in which the Era has been welcomed by the Public Press, and the very liberal patronage it has received during this, the first year of its existence, encourages us to hope for large accessions to our subscription list.

It is desirable that subscriptions be forwarded without delay, so that they may be entered before the approaching Congress.

All communications addressed to L. P. NOBLE,
Publisher of the National Era, Washington, D. C.

FIRESIDE READING

For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.

"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.

"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author.

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847-8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday, Aug. 25, and ending Dec. 1
Second " " Dec. 15, " March 22
Third " " April 5, " July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to $5 00
Extras—for Drawing 1 00
" Painting 2 00
" Piano Music 8 00
" Use of Instrument 2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture, 1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, or Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Miscellaneous.

From the Birkshire Courier.

THAT LITTLE STRAW HAT.

'T is a dear little hat, and it hangs there still—
And its voice of the past bids our heart-strings thrill,
For it seems like a shadow of days passed o'er,
Of the bright one gone who that hat once wore.

'T is a dear little hat, for each simple braid
Tells that oft o'er its platting those fingers played,
And many a wreath for its crown has been twined,
To the graceful taste of his youthful mind.

Yes, there silent it hangs, with its curling front,
Still as playfully rolled as has been its wont;
But the golden ringlets which waved below,
Have curled their last cluster long ago.

Aye; the hat is the same, but it shades no more
Those light blue eyes as in days of yore;
And the sun-lit smile that danced o'er that brow,
Can but light up our heart's sad memories now.

Sad memories they are, o'er their quivering strings
Each breath of the by-gone a tremor flings,
And joys that we fain would waken again,
In memory are wreathed with a thrill of pain.

Then recall not the past—though the dimpled hand
May never again clasp the braided strand,
Though the breeze no longer may bear the tone
Of the ringing laughter of childhood's own.

Ah! think of him now with a glittering crown
O'er his heavenly forehead resting down,
While his fingers stray over the golden wire,
That blends with his voice mid the cherub choir.

Aye; I see him now with the holy light
Pouring broad on his brow with radiance bright,
And I hear the tones which in heaven have birth—
Oh! call him not back to this saddened earth.

THE RIGHTS OF WOMAN.

BY MRS. E. LITTLE.

"The rights of woman," what are they?
The right to labor and to pray,
The right to watch while others sleep,
The right o'er others' woes to weep:
The right to succor in distress,
The right while others curse to bless;
The right to love whom others scorn,
The right to comfort all that mourn;
The right to shed new joy on earth,
The right to feel the soul's high worth,
The right to lead the soul to God
Along the path her Saviour trod—
The path of meekness and of love,
The path of faith that leads above;
The path of patience under wrong,
The path in which the weak grow strong;
Such woman's rights, and God will bless
And crown their champions with success.

EXPLANATION OF THE DAGUERREOTYPE PROCESS.

This important discovery is one of the most remarkable of modern times, and in its progress will doubtless be productive of many highly interesting and beneficial effects which few are prepared to anticipate, and as a brief description of it cannot fail to be acceptable to our readers, we have condensed from a popular writer a few general hints respecting it.

The Camera Obscura, it is generally known, is a contrivance for delineating on a white ground a living picture of whatever object may be presented to it. The Daguerreotype fixes this picture indellibly upon the surface of a plate previously prepared for the purpose. The plate consists of a thin leaf of copper, plated with silver, both metals together not being thicker than a card. The object of the copper is simply to support the silver, which must be the purest that can be procured.

Before the plate is placed in the camera there are certain operations to be performed.

1. The surface of the plate should be made perfectly smooth or highly polished. For this purpose it must be laid flat, with the silver side upward, upon several folds of paper for a bedding; and having been well polished in the usual way, the surface must be powdered equally and carefully with fine pumice. Then a little cotton wool dipped in olive oil, must be rubbed over the plate. A small portion of cotton must now be moistened with diluted nitric acid, and applied equally to the whole surface. The next thing to be done is to make the plate equally and thoroughly hot, when a white coating will be observed on the silver, which indicates that that part of the operation is finished. An even cold surface is next wanted, such as a metalic plate cooled almost to the freezing point by muriate of soda, and to this the heated plate must be suddenly transferred.

2. The next operation is to give the plate a coating of iodine. This is accomplished by suspending it over a dish with iodine divided into small pieces. This process should be conducted in a darkened apartment. The requisite time for the condensation of the iodine varies from five minutes to half an hour. When this process is satisfactorily accomplished, the plate should be immediately fixed in a frame with catches and bands, and placed in the camera; and the transference from one receptacle to another should be made as quickly as possible, and with only as much light as will enable the operator to see what he is doing.

3. The next operation is to obtain the drawing. Having placed the camera in front of the object to be represented, and the lens being adjusted to the proper focus, the ground glass of the camera is withdrawn, and the whole is left till the natural images are drawn by the natural light from the object. The time necessary to leave the plate for a complete delineation of the object, depends upon the intensity of the light.

4. Immediately after removing the plate from the camera, it is next held over the vapor of mercury, which is placed in a cup at the bottom of [illegible] box, and a spirit lamp applied below till the temperature rises to 140 degrees of Fahrenheit. This process is intended to bring out the image, which is not visible when withdrawn from the camera.

5. The next operation is to fix the impression. In order to do this the coating on which the design was impressed must be removed, to preserve it from being decomposed by the rays of light. For this purpose the plate is placed in a trough containing common water, plunging and withdrawing it immediately, and then plunging it into a solution of salt and water, till the yellow coating has disappeared.

This new science or art has been distinguished by different names. It was first called Photography, from two Greek words signifying writing by light. It was afterwards called the art of Photogenic drawing, or drawing produced by light. M. Daguerre, the discoverer, gave it the name of Heliography, or writing by the sun; all of which appellatives are derived from the Greek, and are expressive in some degree of the process. [Scientific American.

A THRILLING INCIDENT.

The New York Express narrates the following interesting incident in connection with the conflagration of Mr. Kirkman's establishment in Catharine street.

'So sudden and quick was the spread of the flames, that Mr. K. and his family came very near being destroyed by them. One of his daughters, Miss Margaret Kirkland, a young lady of about nineteen years of age, only escaped after being severely burnt, by jumping from the fourth story front window of the room in which she slept. It was for some moments a scene of the most thrilling and agonizing interest to those who had assembled in front of the burning building. The fourth story, though even with the rest of the edifice, has very small attic windows. At one of those Miss K. appeared, shrieking in alarm, the fire evidently behind her, and the smoke pouring out over her head—no ladder had yet arrived, and her destruction seemed inevitable—she tried at first to escape the flames, by which she had been already severely burnt, got out on the sill of the window, but it was evident she must soon perish there, and the cry was raised for her to jump; other voices, among which, by this time, was that of her father, said 'not yet, wait a moment till we get ready for you.' A feather bed was instantly procured, held about three feet from the ground by six gallant hearts, who were in great jeopardy that she might fall upon and injure one or more of them, but they heeded not and carred not for that. By this time, Miss Kirkham, to escape from the smoke and flames, was compelled to let herself down, and was seen hanging by her extended arms from the window. 'Jump now,' was the cry. Vast numbers of persons had now assembled, and were lookers on the agonizing scene. The young lady soon let go her hold from that dizzy height of upward of fifty feet, and in an instant was whirled to the sidewalk. The heart of every person in that vast multitude started in thrilling emotion and suspense, doubtful as to her fate. In a few moments the cry was raised, 'she is safe,' and three hearty cheers went up, which made the very welkin ring.'

THE BOY AND THE MAN.

BY REV. JOHN S. C. ABBOTT.

A few years ago, there was, in the city of Boston, a portrait painter, whose name was Mr. Copley. He did not succeed well in his business, and concluded to go to England, to try his fortune there. He had a little son, whom he took with him, whose name was John Singleton Copley.

John was a very studious boy, and made such rapid progress in his studies that his father sent him to College. There he applied himself so closely to his books, and became so distinguished a scholar, that his instructors predicted that he would make a very eminent man.

After he had graduated, he studied law. And when he entered upon the practice of his profession his mind was so richly disciplined by his previous diligence, that he almost immediately gained celebrity. One or two cases of great importance being entrusted to him, he managed them with so much wisdom and skill as to attract the admiration of the whole British nation.

The King and his cabinet, seeing what a learned man he was, and how much influence he had acquired, felt it to be important to secure his services for the government. They, therefore, raised him from one post of honor to another, till he was created Lord High Chancellor of England, the very highest post of honor to which any subject can attain; so that John Singleton Copley is now Lord Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of England. About sixty years ago, he was a little boy in Boston. His father was a poor portrait painter, hardly able to get his daily bread. Now, John is at the head of the nobility of England; one of the most distinguished men in talent and power, in the House of Lords, with reverence and respect by the whole civilized world. This is the reward of industry. The studious boy becomes the useful and respected man.

Had John S. Copley spent his school-boy days in idleness, he probably would have passed his manhood in poverty and shame. But he studied in school, when other young men were wasting their time; he adopted for his motto, 'Ultra pregere,' (Press onward,)—and how rich has been his reward.

You, my young friends, are now laying the foundation for your future life. You are every day at school, deciding the question, whether you will be useful and respected in life, or whether your manhood shall be passed in mourning over the follies of misspent boyhood.

AN ALPHABET OF SHORT RULES,

WELL WORTH REMEMBERING.

Attend well to your business.
Be punctual in your payments.
Consider well before you promise.
Dare to do right.
Envy no man.
Faithfully perform your duty.
Go not in the path of vice.
Have respect for your character.
Infringe on no one's right.
Jest not at another's misfortune.
Know thyself.
Lie not, for any consideration.
Make few acquaintances.
Never profess what you do not practice.
Occupy your time in usefulness.
Postpone nothing that you can do now.
Quarrel not with your neighbor.
Recompense every man for his labor.
Save something against a day of trouble.
Treat every body with kindness.
Use yourself to moderation.
Vilify no person's reputation.
Watchfully guard against idleness.
Xamine your conduct daily.
Yield to superior judgment.
Zealously pursue the right path.

A Disagreeable Pillow Companion.—While our people were loading the beasts the following morning, I had lain down on cushions, upon a carpet, under the shade of an old tree, till my dromedary should be brought. When I rose I heard a hissing noise behind me, and, turning round, perceived a large serpent, black as jet, still half concealed in the hollow trunk of the tree, with its head and the fore part of its body coiled up, resting on my pillow, close to the place where my head had left an impression. There is no doubt that the serpent, attracted by the warmth and softness of my cushion, must have remained a considerable time in this attitude quite near me, and that my sudden rising disturbed it, and caused its angry hissing. It was about two or three inches thick, and, as the natives affirmed, of the most venemous species. Thus, we often escape dangers without having the slightest knowledge of their existence. [Puckler Muskau's Egypt.

A Good One.—A laughable incident occurred in Nantucket a few evenings since, which is too good to be lost. A couple of young ladies, whose high spirits are equaled only by their beauty, and who love an innocent prank with intimate friends, have really seen "the elephant," the modus operandi of which will not soon be forgotten by them. Just at twilight they called at the Ocean House, to see a gentleman and his wife, and, as usual, proceeded to their private parlor. Upon entering, they saw a gentleman with his back to the door, and presuming it was their friend, they silently approached him, and one clapped her hand over his eyes, the other seizing his hands. The gentleman struggled manfully, but, taken by surprise, for some time his efforts to free himself were fruitless. At length, after a severe tussle, his tormenters laughing right merrily the while, he shook his captors off, and confronted them. The laughter instantly ceased, and gave place to solemn looks and deep blushes. The "fixed fact" stared them in the face, that instead of their friend, they had been playing their pranks upon a total stranger, none other than a judicial dignitary, his Honor Judge Ward. It is unnecessary to say that, with a hurried apology, they beat a sudden and speedy retreat, resolved thenceforth to be sure they are "right" before they "go ahead."

Smithson.—At the late meeting of the Association of American Geologists, Professor Henry gave a brief account of the founder of the Smithsonian Institute. He was a natural son of the Duke of Northumberland, of an amiable disposition and much devoted to science. He was a great chemist, and on one occasion he observed a tear trickling down the cheek of a lady, which he caught on a piece of glass, lost one half and analyzed the other, and discovered a microscopic salt. He was the author of more than twenty original memoirs on various subjects, and felt proud of his scientific attainments. He had a soul far more noble than his father the Duke, and felt his own worth, as every talented man does, and on one occasion wrote thus: "The best blood of England flows in my veins—on my father's side I am a Northumberland—on my mother's I am related to kings. But this is of no consequence. My name shall live in the memory of mankind, when the titles of the Northumberlands and Percys are forgotten." And truly shall his prophecy be fulfilled. Professor Henry said he could find no evidence that he had written this in view of the establishment of an Institution.

How to make happy Marriages.—The Rev. Philip Henry used to give two pieces of advice to his children and others in reference to marriage. One was, 'Keep within the bound of profession.' The other was, 'Look at suitableness in age, quality, education, temper,' &c. He used to observe from Gen. 2: 18, 'I will make him an help-meet for him:' that where there is not meetness, there will not be much help. He commonly said to his children, with reference to their choice in marriage, 'Please God and please yourselves, and you shall never displease me:' and greatly blamed those parents who conclude matches for their children without their consent. He sometimes mentioned the saying of a pious gentlewoman who had many daughters: 'The care of most people is how to get good husbands for their daughters; but my care is to fit my daughters to be good wives, and then let God provide for them.'

Salutary Thought.—When I was a young man there lived in our neighborhood a Presbyterian, who was universally reported to be a very liberal man and uncommonly upright in his dealings. When he had any of the produce of his farm to dispose of, he made it an invariable rule to give good measure—over good, rather more than could be required of him. One of his friends observing his frequently doing so, questioned him why he did it, told him he gave too much, and said it would not be to his advantage. Now, my friends, mark the answer of the Presbyterian:—"God Almighty has permitted me but one journey through the world, and when gone I cannot return to rectify mistakes." Think of this, friends, but one journey through the world. [Simpson.

Distribution of Wealth.—The total value of the property in Great Britain is estimated at $25,000,000,000, and the annual value of the product at $2,500,000,000.

The total value of the property in the United States of America does not exceed $6,000,000,000, and the total annual value of our products is estimated at about $1,200,000,000.

If the property of Great Britain was equally divided amongst the population, it would give near $5,000 to every family of five persons; and if the annual income were thus divided, each family would have $500.

The same division in the United States would give each family $1,500 of property, and for an annual share of the products $300.

Extraordinary Coincidence in the Lives of a Married Pair.—A Scotch newspaper of the year 1777, gives the following as the extract of a letter from Lanark:—'Old William Douglass and his wife are dead; you know that he and his wife were born on the same day, within the same hour, by the same midwife; that they were constant companions, till nature inspired them with love and friendship; and at the age of nineteen were married, with the consent of their parents, in the church where they were christened. These are not the whole of the circumstances attending this extraordinary pair. They never knew a day's sickness until the day before their deaths; and the day on which they died they were exactly one hundred years old. They died in one bed, and were buried in one grave, close to the fount from which they were christened.'

VARIETY.

A French paper, La Semaines, announces the invention of a steam plow, or rather a mode of digging by means of steam, from which great results are anticipated. The inventor is a young medical man, named Baraff. The paper states that one of two-horse power was in operation at the residence of the maker, who was constructing another of double that power. The machine proceeds along the field, and digs the ground with the greatest precision. Two beams, furnished with five mattocks each, act successively upon the soil, loosening it to the depth of 12 or 15 inches, and pounding it as small as compost. By using only one of the beams, a tillage of the usual depth can be effected.

In the mountainous district of Spain, near Cologne, the body of a handsome man was discovered, who had been killed with many stabs of a poignard. On his breast, thighs, hips and arms, were tattooed the names of the ladies who had been his victims, each one ornamented with a female head and bust. One alone was not fully written out, the name of Isabella being on his left arm with illegible hieroglyphics. In the arms of one of the half figures was an infant. The Judge of Azzua published the names found on his body, in hope of its leading to a discovery of the murderer. It was supposed to be a case of jealous revenge.

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette says that last Saturday a trial came off between two persons for debt. The person who brought the suit kept no books of account, but was in the habit of marking his accounts upon the cellar door. He appeared before a squire in Morrisville, and the defendant demanded the evidence of the debt. The justice told him he must bring his book into court and prove it. He immediately procured a horse and wagon and set out for the cellar door, and actually brought it into court, established his claim, and got judgment. The lawyers were wonderfully puzzled in the cross-examination; the witness hinged altogether upon stubborn facts!

The maxims in a popular work called "Lacon; or, Many Things in Few Words," were written by the Rev. Charles Caleb Colton, an eccentric and dissolute clergyman of the Established Church of England—a man whose life exhibited none of the "sound wisdom and discretion" which characterize this production of his mind and pen. After having, by a long course of gambling and dissipation, made an utter wreck of fortune, health, and reputation, he put an end to his life by blowing out his brains with a pistol. He died in the city of Paris, on the 28th of April, 1832.

A Chinese Under-Shirt is sometimes composed of numerous thin pieces of bamboo, about an inch in length, and strung together, so as to form a kind of net, with large interstices or meshes. This singular shirt is worn next the skin for the double purpose of coolness, and also to keep the other garments from coming in contact with the perspiration of the body. It has sleeves of the same manufacture, and is, indeed, a complete shirt, except the omission of the collar and buttons.

The Chicopee Telegraph states that the gigantic plan of the new Company at Hadley Falls, West Springfield, as far as developed, provides water power sufficient for fifty-six large cotton mills, 68 by 260 feet, six stories high, carrying from 10,000 to 27,000 spindles each, according to the fineness in fabric, with a power for machine shops and other purposes. The present company has a capital of two and a half millions, all of which is subscribed, and the stock is at a premium. No name has been fixed upon for the city. Hampden and Holyoke have been suggested.

The Chronotype gives the following sly exposition of wine-making in the goodly city of Boston: "At one of the Boston Vintages, where wine is made all the year round, as we passed yesterday, they were throwing grapes out of the strainer, after having pressed them. If we had not known that they must be grapes, we should have thought they were logwood chips. However, if they were, it makes no difference, for wine is well known to be a die stuff."

Capt. Stevens, of the Bay State Corporation, estimates that he has six acres of floor to lay the present autumn. This is understood to include only the top or hard pine flooring. Beneath this is a four-inch plank flooring, doweled together, and secured to the beams by large spikes. Then, probably, the sheathing in the mills is equal to the top flooring. Taken altogether—plank and top flooring and sheathing—the Bay State Mills will cover the present year a surface of about 18 acres.

A man was killed recently, in Liverpool, England, by a cart wheel passing over his head. The verdict of the coroner's jury was manslaughter against the cart wheel! and by no arguments could they be persuaded to alter their luminous verdict.

To make good blacking, put one gallon of vinegar into a stone jug; add one pound of ivory black, well pulverized; half a pound of loaf sugar; half an ounce of oil of vitriol, and one ounce of sweet oil; incorporate the whole by stirring. This is a blacking of very great repute.

A loquacious blockhead, after babbling some time to Aristotle, observed, 'that he was fearful that he was intruding on his ear.' No, no, replied Aristotle, I have not been listening.

Pope's oath was, 'God mend me.' A little boy, to whom he had refused a penny, looking at his diminutive stature, cried out, 'God mend you, indeed! it would be less trouble to make a new one.'

When a Dutch maid-servant wishes to go to a dance, and has no swain of her own, she hires a cavalier for the occasion. A beau with an umbrella receives double pay.

Most mountains present their precipitous faces to the sea and their slopes to the land.

Horse radish may be kept during winter by grating it while green and corking it up tight in bottles filled with vinegar.

The grandson of Charles Wesley has been appointed one of the chaplains in ordinary to Queen Victoria.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. It speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON,
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK.

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 23. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1847. WHOLE NO. 179.

The Sabbath Recorder.

From the Christian Reflector.

HYMNOLOGY.

A very interesting volume might be written on hymns and hymn-books. Is it not remarkable, that in this book-making age no one has been found to take up the subject? Possibly, that for the greater portion of our writers, who love to produce their works at railroad speed, the task would involve too much labor, research, and time. We should like to see a well-prepared history of the successive books which have been used by the churches of Christ, especially in our own denomination, for the last two centuries, in the United States; with the influence they exerted on the theology and the prosperity of the churches, together with the reasons for so frequent a change of books, and what have been the evils or the benefits arising from psalmody as practiced among us.

Nor would it be less interesting to read a sketch of the principal contributors to our songs of praise. Who will produce the 'memoirs of the most distinguished hymn-writers of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries?' We have sometimes witnessed the interest produced in the conference room at a prayer-meeting, when we have preceded the reading of a hymn with a few sentences relating to its writer. Our friends have listened with delight, and have held closer fellowship in spirit with Watts and Newton, with Beddome and Pearce, when a few words have tended to bring those excellent men into their midst, and have shown how their sorrows and their joys blended with our own. Let the work be done, and done soon, for the materials with which it should be constructed are rapidly melting away under the hand of time.

We protest against the supposition that any such task is before us, or that we wish to be called on to perform it. We will whisper the fact, gentle reader, into thine ear, that the suggestion is easier than the execution of the work; and that we are, most disinterestedly, proposing that to be done by others which we most certainly know that we have neither time, talents, nor materials to do ourselves. Nevertheless, there is one view of the subject which may tend to show the interest which would accompany any successful attempt to work out our idea. We mean that the history of separate hymns, so far as it could be ascertained, would add value and interest to each as it passed under the eye of the reader. Would that we had the time, the place, and the other circumstances connected with the composition of every favorite hymn.

For example, Watts wrote his hymns in early life, in the beautiful town of Southampton, a spot in view of the enchanting Isle of Wight. Tradition points out the place where, just across the channel, that sweet island presents itself to the enraptured sight, and we are told that here he wrote his hymn, 'There is a land of pure delight.' The whole hymn derives a fine illustration from the scenery, especially such lines as

> There everlasting spring abides,
>   And never-withering flowers:
> Death, like a narrow sea, divides
>   This heavenly land from ours.
>
> Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood,
>   Stand dressed in living green:
>
> * * * * *
>
> But timerous mortals start and shrink
>   To cross this narrow sea.

Equally has tradition added to the interest of the exquisitely beautiful hymn, 'How vain are all things here below;' a hymn interesting, under any circumstances, for its truthfulness elegantly expressed. But when it is known that the little, nervous, and unprepossessing person, Watts, offered his hand and his heart to the elegant and accomplished Miss Singer, afterward Mrs. Rowe, and being told by that lady that though she loved the jewel, she could not admire the casket which held it, he turned away grieved and disappointed, and going to his study, called his piety and genius into exercise to write that hymn, we admire that genius, and especially that piety, more than we ever did before. In more than one instance have we related this fact to persons similar to the worthy Doctor, and have called forth their best feelings into exercise.

The circumstances under which the amiable Cowper wrote the exquisite hymn, 'God moves in a mysterious way,' are probably known to almost every reader of this paper. He labored under freqnent fits of mental derangement, and most unhappily but firmly believed that it was the Divine will that he should drown himself in a particular part of the river Ouse. Calling one evening for a post-chaise, he ordered the driver to take him to that spot, which he readily undertook to do, as he well knew it. On this occasion, however, several hours were consumed in seeking it, and utterly in vain. The man was forced to admit that he had entirely lost his road. The snare was thus broken, Cowper escaped the temptation, returned to his home, and instantly sat down and wrote a hymn which has ministered comfort to thousands, and will probably do so for generations yet to come.

Most of our modern hymn-books contain an exceedingly beautiful composition from the pen of the highly-talented but eccentric Robert Robinson, beginning,

> Mighty God, while angels bless thee,
>   May an infant lisp thy name?

Modern editors have altered the second line, and made it read, 'May a mortal lisp thy name,' which to me takes away a part of its beauty. It was written by its author for the use of a little boy, who sat during the period of its composition on his knee, and whose mind was deeply impressed, young as he was, when Robinson first read it to him, and then placed it in his hand. That child lived to a great age. We remember the deep feeling with which he told us the fact at his own fireside. He was a man of great piety and moral worth, and of considerable influence and usefulness, extensively known as the senior deacon of the First Baptist Church, formerly in Hosier Lane, latterly in King street, Reading, England. I need not, after this, say that he highly valued the hymn. Perhaps some of the readers may wish to know his name—Benjamin Williams, Esq.

There is another hymn from the same pen, connected with which there is told a very affecting and instructive anecdote. The hymn is the one well known as beginning, 'Come thou Fount of every blessing;' and few compositions indicate more of the experience of the true Christian. It is known that in the latter part of the life of Robinson, he became doubtful as to his religious character; and, to say the least, was distinguished for levity. A lady one day was traveling in a stage-coach with a gentleman who soon gave evidence of being well acquainted with religion. She had been just befor reading the hymn of which we have been writing, and asked his opinion of it; he waived the subject, and turned her attention to some other topic; but after a short period, she contrived to return to it, and described the benefits she had often derived from the hymn, and her strong admiration of its sentiments. She observed the strange agitation of her companion, but, as he was arrayed in colored clothes, never suspected the cause. At length, entirely overcome, the gentleman burst into tears, and said, 'Madam, I am the individual who composed that hymn years ago; and I would give a thousand worlds, if I had them, to enjoy the feelings I then had.'

There is a hymn, also contained in several of our books, beginning, 'O thou, my soul, forget no more,' which, from any pen, and written under any circumstances, would be interesting; but it becomes doubly so when we read it as the production of Krishnu Pal, the first modern converted Hindoo, and the first fruits of the English Baptist mission to India. For seven long years did they labor without a single enduring convert; at length, this man 'counted it all joy' to follow Christ in his ordinances, and devoted himself to his service. For forty years, or more, was he a zealous, eloquent, and useful preacher to his countrymen, and then died in full exercise of the holy, ardent love so delightfully expressed in his hymn.

One short anecdote more, and this prosy paper about poetry shall end. Rippon's Selection contains a long hymn, beginning, 'When Abraham's servant,' &c., which is usually now commenced at the sixth verse, 'In all my Lord's appointed ways.' This hymn originated in the fact that while its author, Dr. Ryland, was settled at Northampton, England, he met with an aged minister traveling through the town, and almost compelled him to stay and preach to his people that evening. The old gentleman staid with reluctance, and this fact probably suggested his text, 'Hinder me not.' Gen. 24: 56. The good Doctor sat under the pulpit, converting the sermon, as the preacher proceeded, into a hymn, and at the end of the preacher's labors, he rose and read it, the people singing a part of it. We have heard some of the old people at Northampton tell the story with much interest.

LAST HOURS OF CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH.

The memoir of this lady contains the following account of her death-bed scene:—

She arrived at Ramsgate at half past six, and went to a hotel, as the apartments she was to occupy on the West cliff were not yet ready. She was fatigued and exhausted, and immediately retired to rest; and her delight was great at finding that, as she lay on her pillow, she had a full view of the sea and entrance to the harbor. On the following morning a slight bleeding commenced, which soon became alarming, and a surgeon was immediately called in. He succeeded in staunching the hemorrhage, but not before much blood had been lost, as it was one of the larger blood-vessels that had now been invaded by the cancer. Mr. Ayers, the surgeon, made some remarks on her tranquility and resignation, to which she replied, 'It is the love of Jesus that sustains me.' She now grew very faint, and Mr. Ayres' attention was unremitting. She then said, 'My flesh and my heart fail me, but Jesus does not fail me.' A little weak wine and water somewhat revived her, and she said to Mr. A., as he left the room, with some energy, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus?' and showed pleasure when he gave a sign of assent. She then bade those around her kneel and pray; pardon and acceptance; nothing more.

Her kind Jewish friends, Mr. and Mrs. Mayers, had heard of her arrival, and immediately came to see her. She was too feeble to speak much, but was just able to tell them that Jesus upheld her, that he was her only hope and refuge.

Toward the evening she rallied, and during the whole night was calm and cheerful, even to playfulness; but hardly an hour passed without the words, 'How very good He is to me!' When the midnight train had arrived from London, she was a little disappointed at finding that Mr. Herin, her medical attendant—to whom a special messenger had been sent on the occurrence of the bleeding—could not arrive till the next day, and remarked that she did not think she should live to see him.

Early on the morning of the 12th a marked change was apparent in her countenance—her breathing became somewhat oppressed, and at eleven o'clock she suddenly exclaimed, 'It is death.' Mr. Ayers was instantly sent for, and confirmed the sad truth. She seemed to suffer no pain—no sigh or groan escaped her; her countenance was calm and happy, and she kept her eyes steadily fixed upon her husband, following his every motion, and showing uneasiness if for a moment he left her side. Life seemed slowly ebbing away. Once again her eyes brightened, her husband was leaning over her, and throwing her arms round his neck, and pressing his lips to hers, she exclaimed with intense emphasis, 'I love you!'

All thought that these were her last words; but it soon became evident that she was gathering her remaining strength for a mighty effort; and then, with death in every look and tone—gasping between her words, but with a loud, clear, and distinct voice, she uttered these words:—'Tell them,' naming some dear Jewish friends, 'tell——that Jesus—is the Messiah—and tell'—

Her hand had forgot its cunning; her tongue was cleaving to the roof of her mouth—but Charlotte Elizabeth had not forgotten Jerusalem.

The breathings grew fainter and fainter—her brow was slightly convulsed—and at twenty minutes past two she fell asleep in Jesus.

She had charged her husband, two months before her death, never to lay her in a vault, but in a simple earth-dug grave, and in a perishable coffin, disliking all attempts to avert the almighty decree, 'Dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt return.' On visiting the lake Mullinger, in 1837, where her beloved brother had been drowned, she brought from its banks a simple plant, which she preserved in her various gardens, and latterly in a flower pot. This she charged him to plant on her grave, over which no stone was to be laid, but the spot to be marked by a plain head-stone, dictating the epitaph, which, with the addition of the date, has been thus inscribed:—

HERE
LIE THE MORTAL REMAINS
OF CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH,
THE BELOVED WIFE
OF
LEWIS HYPOLYTUS JOSEPH TONNA, WHO DIED ON THE 12TH OF JULY, MDCCCXLVI.,
'Looking unto Jesus.'

THE WAR.

> Boys and girls,
> And women, that would groan to see a child
> Pull off an insect's leg, all read of war,
> The best amusement for a morning meal!
> The poor wretch who has learnt his only prayers
> From curses, who knows scarcely words enough
> To ask a blessing from his Heavenly Father,
> Becomes a fluent phraseman, absolute
> And technical in victories and defeats,
> And all our dainty terms for fratricide;
> Terms which we trundle smoothly o'er our tongues,
> Like mere abstractions, empty sounds to which
> We join no feeling and attach no form!
> As if the soldier died without a wound;
> As if the fibres of their god-like frames
> Were gored without a pang; as if the wretch,
> Who fell in battle, doing bloody deeds,
> Passed off to Heaven, translated, and not killed—
> As though he had no wife to pine for him,
> No God to judge him! [Coleridge.

"SHE WAS GONE!"

Of all the many millions who have suddenly passed from time to eternity, are there any who have died at the time or in the manner they expected to? And of all the millions who are yet to receive the summons of death, who thinks that that summons may come to him soon or suddenly? Is it not the secret, though perhaps never-expressed thought of each, that he shall enjoy many long and happy years, and at last die peacefully and calmly?

So probably thought that young lady, who, some time since, with a party of friends, was visiting the Falls of Niagara. Full of life, and health, and spirits, she was enjoying the pleasures of the scene, and anticipating many more pleasures in the future, and death possibly was the farthest thing from her thoughts. Standing on the Table Rock, she turned suddenly from her companions to seize a flower growing on the brink of the precipice—they heard a scream, and she was gone! and her eternal destiny unalterably fixed! Brightly as the flower she bloomed, and as suddenly as its stem was snapped, she was hurried from time to eternity. "As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more."

Neither was a sudden death expected by that poor boy, who, a few weeks since, set out in his boat to cross the Niagara river, above the falls; but not going quite high enough up the river, his little boat was drawn into the foaming rapids. Then misgivings seemed to come into his mind that he might be in danger, and he attempted to turn his boat up the stream, but it was too late! O, with what intense and painful interest was he watched from the shore by those who saw his struggles for life, but could render him no assistance. For a while, by his vigorous exertions, he succeeded in keeping his boat from going down with the foaming waters; but at length his arm grew tired, and as soon as he lost one stroke of the oar, his boat began to drift with fearful rapidity towards the cataract. Then, being an expert swimmer, he cast off his clothes and sprang into the water, hoping that he might still be able to reach the shore; but his strength was nearly gone; he was near the mighty waterfall, and down he must go! Still he struggled for life till he reached the brink, and made the fearful plunge; "there was the cry of a strong swimmer in his agony," and he disappeared from human sight forever. "For when they say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them."

Nor was death probably expected so soon, by that great and good man in Scotland, who, a few weeks since, lay down at night prepared to rise and continue his labors on earth, and woke to meet his gracious reward in heaven. Calmly and sweetly he slept, it would seem, till in amazement he found himself among the ransomed host, and the harmony of celestial music burst upon his ear. Oh, wherever and whenever I die, or under whatever circumstances, "let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Of one thing you are entirely certain, and that is, that you must die: "for what man is he that liveth, and shall not see death?" but of the time, and the circumstances attending your death, you are totally ignorant. These are all foreseen and arranged by Omnipotence, and he will bring it to pass in his own time. Should not the very fact of this uncertainty lead you to examine carefully on what foundation your hopes for eternity are resting? Should it not cause you to come to the determination that you will without delay "make your calling and election sure?" Oh, flee now to the ever-open arms of the Saviour; make him your friend for time and for eternity, and then, "when thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid; yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet." Then thou shalt not "be afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked when it cometh. For the Lord shall be thy confidence." "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord."

[American Messenger.

INFANTICIDE—TRIAL BY ORDEAL.

In Madagascar, every child born on an unlucky day or hour (and the number of these is quite at the will of the astrologer) is destroyed on the spot; while the same fate awaits others who may be ordered to be sacrificed, merely in consequence of a single malignant symptom frowning on their birth-day. The passion for infanticide, so strangely overcoming the parental instinct in heathen nations, is very remarkable. At Ilen, a settlement within the delta of the Tiger, human beings are occasionally offered up in sacrifice; whilst twins are, in all cases, put to death, and the children who cut their upper-jaw teeth first are instantly destroyed.

The contrivances resorted to for the destruc- of infants in Madagascar are not the least atrocious features in the history of this people. A common method for attaining this end, is that of exposing the unconscious babe in a narrow passage, through which a herd of cattle is furiously driven, and by the feet of which it is scarcely possible to escape being tortured and mangled by a gradual death. At other times it is suspended by the heels while its face is held in a pan of water till suffocation ensues; or, still more horrible to relate, it is sometimes buried alive with its head downwards in a pit. And this atrocious murder is in regular order, commanded under the Queen's authority, to be perpetrated by the father, or nearest relative, of the infant!

One of the king Radama's sisters being ill, her four female attendants were subjected to trial by ordeal, for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent the poor helpless wretches had been accessory to her sickness. They were adjudged to instant death. The supposed criminals were taken to a rock on the south side of the capitol, and having their fingers, toes, arms, legs, noses, and ears cut off, were precipitated from the rock, the children from the surrounding crowd amusing themselves for nearly an hour by throwing stones upon their mangled bodies! Not one anxious or sympathizing countenance was seen among the spectators, many of whom were females!

[Missionary Magazine.

"THE DOOR WAS SHUT."

I had frequently read the beautiful and impressive parable from which the above words are taken, but had never felt their real force until a few months ago, when the following incident gave them a practical application, which I shall not soon forget. My residence is a few miles from London, and upon the occasion to which I allude, I had omitted sending two letters of importance to the post-office; but having an engagement in town, I thought I should be in time to post them there for the evening mail. I alighted, therefore, from the omnibus at the first general post-office, and, presenting my letters, was informed that I was too late there, but by hastening to Lombard street, should be in time for that office. I immediately hurried forward, but not knowing exactly where to find the office, mistook the way and found myself in an adjoining street. After making inquiry, I quickly retraced my steps, and coming within sight of the office, took my letters from my pocket, and reached out my hand to deliver them, when suddenly the clock struck, and in an instant "the door was shut." I was too late! Several others, like myself, were eagerly pressing forward, but they were too late also; and we all turned away with looks and feelings of disappointment, amidst the loud laughter of a number of bystanders.

The words, "the door was shut," came instantly and powerfully to my mind; and, as I retired, I thought of the important lesson to be derived from the circumstance itself. In a temporal point of view, what numberless difficulties and disappointments we occasion ourselves by negligence and forgetfulness, and how earnestly we should study to do every thing at its proper time! What inconvenience and loss we sustain ourselves, and cause others, in this day of steam and railroads, by being a minute too late; and how earnestly, therefore, we should cultivate habits of punctuality! But particularly, I thought of the words in connection with the parable in which they are found.

In what imminent peril are our souls' immortal interests, if we neglect the great salvation until it is too late, and the door is forever closed. "Those that were ready went with him to the marriage, and the door was shut;" and in what an awful situation will such be placed when to their knock for admission the answer shall be given, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not!" O with what disappointment and anguish will they turn away, amid the rejoicing and derision of Satan and lost spirits, to that place "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched!"

[London Christian Penny Magazine.

SECRET PRAYER.

It would be well if we could impress upon the attention of our readers the importance, and the great advantage of having a fixed time and place appointed for secret prayer. In all matters even of a worldly kind that are of any serious moment, habits of regularity and punctuality are indispensable; and much more must this be the case in matters of such infinite consequence as the interest of the soul. Not only are such habits indispensably valuable as furnishing in one sense a security that the duties of the closet shall not be absolutely neglected,—a circumstance of which, otherwise, there will often be the greatest danger,—but they will be found of the greatest utility in counteracting the natural reluctance of the heart to all devotional exercise, a reluctance which is sometimes felt, even in the best. Moreover, the hurry and bustle of this world's affairs will encroach upon the seasons which ought to be reserved for the devotions of the family, and much more upon those which belong to secret devotion, unless such seasons be guarded by care and forethought; and this care and forethought must be habitual. It is the part of every one to consider carefully his own convenience, in making arrangements as to this matter, but if a hint on such a topic might be offered, we suggest that the most suitable time for secret prayer is the earliest hour in the morning, but perhaps not the latest in the evening. By making it the first employment of the day and allowing nothing else in ordinary circumstances to take precedence of it, we may expect the mind to be in some degree calm, collected, and free from those disturbing influences which previous attention to worldly business could not fail to have exerted. But in the evening, let not the hour or half hour that is given to this duty, be deferred till the body and mind are overcome by drowsiness. Let the exercise be quite secret. Prayer, even personal prayer, in the presence of another, is not secret prayer. The person should feel himself quite alone; he should feel that it is only with God that he is transacting.

[Rev. J. M'Gill.

THE CHILD MUST NOT FEAR ITS MOTHER.

The most essential thing for a timid infant is to have an absolutely unfailing refuge in its mother. It may seem unnecessary to say this. It may appear impossible that a mother's tenderness should ever fail towards a helpless little creature who has nothing but that tenderness to look to; but alas! it is not so. I know a lady who is considered very sweet-tempered, and who usually is so—kind and hospitable, and fond of her children. Her infant under six months old was lying on her arm one day when the desert was on the table; and the child was eager after the bright glasses and spoons, and more restless than convenient. After several attempts to make it lie quiet, the mother slapped it—slapped it hard. This was from an emotion of disappointed vanity, from vexation that the child was not "good" before visitors. If such a thing could happen, may we not fear that other mothers may fail in tenderness—in the middle of the night, for instance, after a toilsome day, when kept awake by the child's restlessness, or amidst the hurry of the day, when business presses, and the little creature will not take its sleep? Little do such mothers know the fatal mischief they do by impairing their child's security with them. If they did, they would undergo anything before they would let a harsh word or a sharp tone escape them, or indulge in a severe look or a hasty movement. A child's heart responds to the tones of its mother's voice like a harp to the wind; and its only hope for peace and courage is in hearing nothing but gentleness from her, and experiencing nothing but unremitting love, whatever may be its troubles elsewhere.

[Miss Martineau.

THE HOUSE OF PRAYER.

Wouldst thou have the temper of thy soul raised above the temptations and cares of life to that region where God and virtue and endless peace and happiness dwell—go not, my brother, into the wilderness; climb not the steep rock; seek not the gloom of the forest, or the resounding shores of the ocean—but enter, with the train of devout worshipers, the house of prayer; there with thy children, thy household, thy kindred, friends and neighbors, bow down before the High God. If the general countenance of this place do not tend to calm the passions of the soul, to allay its feverish anxieties, and infuse into it sensations of peace and piety, of duty and benevolence, how strangely must we all have forgotten every thing which it most behooves us to regard and to remember! This is the climate of devotion. It is the atmosphere of praise and thanksgiving that we breathe here; and we are not purely intellectual, but sentient, impressible beings.

WESLEY ON STUDY.—Wesley knew the importance of studious habits on the part of his preachers. To an indolent one he gives the following admonition, not inappropriate to some now-a-days: "Your talent in preaching does not increase, it is about the same as it was seven years ago; it is lively but not deep; there is little variety; there is no compass of thought. Reading only can supply this, with daily meditation and daily prayer. You wrong yourself greatly by omiting this; you can never be a deep preacher without it, any more than a thorough Christian. O, begin. Fix some part of every day for private exercises. You may acquire the taste which you have not; what is tedious at first, will afterwards be pleasant. Whether you like it or not, read and pray daily. It is for your life; there is no other way; else you will be a trifler all your days, and a petty, superficial preacher. Do justice to your own soul; give it time and means to grow; do not starve yourself any longer."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 25, 1847.

PROCLAMATION,

BY JOHN YOUNG, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

A day of Public Thanksgiving is due to Almighty God, for blessings bestowed upon the people of this State during the past year.

While a sanguinary war has been ragingupon our national frontier—while the principal city of a sister State has been scourged with a pestilence that walketh at noonday, and while gaunt famine and disease afflict the fairest portion of the mother country, the State of New York presents a gladsome picture of universal happiness and prosperity. Seed time and harvest have been continued to the husbandman—the laborer and the artisan have not sought in vain for employment—the ships of the merchant have traded in peace with the nations of the earth, and plenty has crowned the efforts of all classes of society.

The blessings of free Government—the means of universal education—the security of person and property, and the supremacy of law and order, have been vouchsafed to us in an eminent degree.

For all these, and for other good gifts, we are indebted to that Providence whose bounty and protection are conferred upon all, without regard to country or condition.

I, therefore, respectfully recommend to the people of this State, to observe the 25th day of November next, as a day of Public Thanksgiving; to abstain on that day from their usual avocations, and mingle, with their thanksgivings, prayers to Heaven for the continuance of its smiles, and for its protection against famine, disease and crime.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the Privy Seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at [L. S.] the City of Albany, this eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-seven. JOHN YOUNG.

By the Governor,
HENRY V. COLT, Private Secretary.

THANKSGIVING.

Our paper is dated, although not printed, on the day set apart by the Governor of this State for general thanksgiving. It is pleasant to remember, that not only the inhabitants of the State of New York, but those of a majority of our sister States, are engaged upon the same day in offering thanks to God for his mercies bestowed upon them. Surely a review of the past season will furnish abundant incentives to gratitude. Not only have seed-time and harvest succeeded each other in their proper time, but the harvest has been an unusually abundant one, filling our storehouses, and providing largely for all our wants. Nor has the divine goodness been confined to a supply of our lower wants. He has in the course of the past year given to the church many clear manifestations of his saving mercy. When these are considered, who can refuse to enter His courts with thanksgiving and wait before him with songs of praise?

Such are the feelings awakened by turning our thoughts to God. How different when they are turned upon the condition and actions of men! It is impossible to think of our own country, without feeling deeply and painfully in relation to the existing war with Mexico. During the past year human blood has flowed to an alarming extent in that war, to say nothing of the numberless evils and miseries which have attended upon the invasion of the enemy's country, and the sacking of its cities. Slavery, too, has continued to work its blighting effects upon all our national interests. The cry of the bondsman, under a system of slavery which exceeds in enormity any other upon which the sun ever looked, has entered into the ear of the God of the oppressed. In view of such a state of things, our expressions of gratitude to God ought to mingle with confessions of sin, and prayer that the divine vengeance, which we have so richly deserve,d may still be averted.

BATTLES ON THE SABBATH.

Many times, within the last few years, have we noticed in leading religious journals, attempts to prove the regard of God for the Sabbath, from the fact that victory in battle has often been given to armies which have refused to commence fighting on that day. The folly of such reasoning is evident to any one who considers, that it is impossible, in such instances, to decide with any certainty how much more regard one army has for the Sabbath than the other. It is well understood, by those acquainted with the matter, that nothing deserving the name of a Sabbath is known in armies engaged in actual service. Even if the troops themselves are not particularly engaged, a vast number of attendants always are. The heavy trains of the commissary move on, and the arsenals are generally as busy as ever. Indeed, it is said that in most armies extra duties are assigned to the day generally kept in times of peace as a Sabbath, so that instead of its being a day of rest, it is a day of unusual activity. Under such circumstances, all attempts to analyze the piety of armies so as to argue the approbation or disapprobation of God from their comparative success, are vain and foolish.

But farther, the reasoning to which we have alluded is opposed to the facts in the case. Our own Christian nation has had an army in active service for some two years past. With all our professions of Christianity, we believe it is not pretended that the Sabbath so-called has been very strictly observed in that army. On the contrary, our whole course has shown a wanton and reckless disregard for that day. The first session of the Cabinet at Washington in relation to the Mexican war was held on a Sunday, and several of our most important battles have been fought on that day. Now how has the divine displeasure towards this course been shown, according to the reasoning under consideration? Let facts answer. The battle of Del Norte, in New Mexico, was fought on a Sunday. The battles of Buena Vista, Sacramento, and Cerro Gordo, were all fought on Sundays, and all terminated favorably to the invading army. Vera Cruz was surrendered on a Sunday, and some of the most sanguinary fighting in the vicinity of the city of Mexico was done on the same day of the week. Would it be possible, from these facts, to argue any special favor for the Sunday? The advocates of that day may think so, but we must be permitted to differ from them. By doing so we do not question that God rules in the affairs of men, but only that man's reasoning from his providences is more than liable to be incorrect, and can not, therefore, be a substantial foundation on which to rest duty.

REV. JOHN BRITTAIN SHENSTON.

The following brief biographical notice of the recently-deceased Pastor of one of the Sabbath-keeping churches in London, is taken from the (English) Baptist Manual for 1845. It was written for that work, from authentic documents, by Rev. Wm. Henry Black, Pastor of the Sabbath-keeping Church in Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields:—

The Rev. JOHN BRITTAIN SHENSTON, the third son of William Shenston, of Shoreditch, was born the 29th of January, 1776, and was named after his great uncle John Brittain, who was, from 1756 to his death in 1794, elder of the General Baptist church now meeting in Commercial Road East, London, but then in Church Lane, Whitechapel. His father was an ordained deacon of that church, and many years treasurer of the General Baptist Fund; and his eldest brother, William Shenston, was pastor of the Particular Baptist church in Alie street, Goodman's Fields, and died in 1833. Mr. Shenston was baptized the 22d of April, 1792, and joined his uncle's church when little more than sixteen years of age; there he was called to the ministry on the 14th of August, 1787. On the 23d of April, 1799, he was ordained elder of the General Baptist church at the Park meeting, Duke street, Southwark, (now in the Borough Road,) by his uncle's successor, Dan Taylor; but, at the end of ten years of successful ministry, he resigned his charge by reason of a change of sentiments. He then joined the church in Devonshire Square under the late Timothy Thomas, which he served as a deacon, continuing nevertheless to preach occasionally among the Particular Baptists, until, having formed a church at Crouch End, near Hornsey, Middlesex, he was dismissed thither in September, 1822, and set apart as its pastor on the 3d of October. About the same time, being convinced of the perpetual obligation of the seventh-day Sabbath, he began to attend public worship on that day, as conducted by Robert Burnside, at Devonshire Square; and on his death, in 1826, was unanimously requested to succeed as pastor of the old Seventh-day Baptist church, formed in 1675, by Francis Bampfield, the martyr. This invitation he accepted in the month of June that year, and soon after published a tribute to Mr. Burnside's memory, and a plea for the seventh-day Sabbath. He preached on the first day at Crouch End, gratuitously, until the 19th of February, 1832, when he retired from the ministry there; but he continued to preach on the seventh day at Eldon street, (whither his church removed soon after he became pastor,) until the winter before his death, which happened at Fulham, the 12th of May, 1844, in his sixty-ninth year. He was the oldest member of the Board of Baptist Ministers in London, and had formerly been for some years their Secretary. The greater part of his books are bequeathed to the Baptist Library.

THE REPUBLIC OF LIBERIA.—Intelligence has been lately received, that the colonists of Liberia have declared their independence, and now take their place among the independent nations of the earth. This step was taken at the suggestion and by the advice of the American Colonization Society, and it is believed will promote the general prosperity of the people. The Constitution, says the Atlas, has been received at Washington, as adopted by its Convention, and fills over seven columns of a printed sheet. It opens with a rapid historical sketch of the establishment and the prosperity of the colony, which concludes with the following appeal:—

"Therefore, in the name of humanity, and virtue and religion—in the name of the great God, our common Creator, and our common Judge, we appeal to the nations of Christendom, and earnestly and respectfully ask of them that they will regard us with the sympathy and friendly consideration to which the peculiarities of our condition entitle us, and to extend to us that comity which marks the friendly intercourse of civilized and independent communities."

Next follows the declaration of rights—many of them being copied from the State Constitutions of the United States. The legislative and executive branches of the Government are made conformable to our own; except that the President and Vice President are to be elected every two years. The Constitution concludes thus:—

"Done in convention at Monrovia, in the county of Montserrado, by the unanimous consent of the people of the Commonwealth of Liberia, this 26th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1847, and of the republic the first. In witness whereof we have hereto set our name."

NEWS FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.—Just as our paper was ready for press, we received letters from our missionaries, dated August 10, 1847. They were then all comfortably settled at Shanghai, and more than satisfied with the location, deeming it one of the best fields for missionary labor in China. We shall give extracts next week.

☞ The Editor has been absent from the city for nearly a week, and only returned in time to send this paper to press, which will account for non-attendance to various letters received at the office within a few days.

CHRISTIAN DILIGENCE.

When we take into account the multitude of claims that rest on the Christian, and the vast importance attached to his work, the diversity of duties, the uncertainty of life, his fearful responsibility, the hastening judgment, the minute account that is then and there to be made, as well as the multitude of difficulties that gather about him in this world of cares, perplexities, and disappointments, we see the propriety and importance of the frequent admonitions and exhortations, that every where abound in the Scriptures of eternal truth, to "diligence in business." When all these mighty considerations are taken into account, we have no time to waste, no opportunities to loose, no talents to squander away in idleness. Every moment of time is to be assiduously devoted to the great work of the gospel of God's appointed way. The Christian's work commences with himself; if self is overlooked every department of his work must suffer. Said one who is accounted to be wise in gospel matters, when giving counsel to a fellow laborer in the gospel, "Take heed to thyself." There are many things that are calculated to turn the Christian's thoughts away from God and the great work of self-preparation. The Bible contains the only safe instruction; this only will guide his feet aright and afford him a refuge in the great day of "lo! here, and lo! there." The Scriptures must form an essential part of his study. Like our blessed Lord, we should be prepared to answer the tempter in Scripture language, and say, "It is written." No vain ambition, no love of self, no impure motive, is ever to reign in his breast. Love to God and love to his fellow men is to be the main-spring to all his actions. O how careful we ought to be! The adversary succeeds in no place so easy as where self is concerned. With the love of the Saviour we are to reclaim the wandering brother, "considering ourselves lest we be also tempted." With that wisdom that comes from above, we are "to rightly divide the word, and give to each one a portion of meat in due season;" in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. In a word, our lives are to be "epistles known and read of all men." The nature of our work will warrant no idleness on the part of the laborers in God's vineyard; it is no less than saving the souls of men. Our Saviour said, he would make his apostles "fishers of men." Said Paul, "I have begotten you through the gospel." Jude says, "Others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garments spotted by the flesh." Yes, dear brethren, "he that reclaims a sinner from the error of his ways will save a soul from death, and will hide a multitude of sins." When we reflect on this matter, and have a just sense of our work, we will exclaim in the language of God's word, Who is sufficient for these things?

The great amount of labor that is to be performed, is another reason why the child of God should be diligent. The world is the field. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The heathen are to be given to Christ for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. Yes, brethren, the apostate world is to be brought back to God, or lost forever. O that word, how it sounds, LOST; yes, forever LOST. The thought of that cry from the sinner, "The summer is passed, and the harvest is ended, and my soul is not gathered in." So the deadness of the church, the multitude of backsliders, the teeming world, call for the most diligent efforts on the part of God's children. They should "be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The necessity of our diligence is increased from the painful consideration that there are but few that "come up to the help of the Lord;" although "many are called, but few are chosen." "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few." The work to be performed might occupy the attention of the angelic host; but this treasure is in earthen vessels, that the excellency may be of God, and not of us. When looking at our great work, had we none to rely upon but the arm of man, then might we despair. But again, there is one more consideration that should bestir us in our work of love. The shortness of time is another incentive to diligence. Said the Apostle, "And that knowing the time, that now it is high time that we awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer them when we believed." We are on the rapid wings of time, and with great velocity are approaching the awful scenes of the judgment day. What we do must be done soon. What our hands find to do should be done with our might. Said the blessed Jesus, with his mind directed to this matter, "WORK while the day lasts, for the night cometh, wherein no man can work." Sinners are fast dropping into the eternal world unprepared to meet their God. They are passing our reach, and what we do for them we must do soon, or they will be gone. Those that remain are becoming harder and harder; their hearts are less and less susceptible of divine impressions; they are daily making themselves fitter candidates for ruin.

My brethren, we have soon got to meet our fellow travelers at the bar of God, there to give an account of all our misspent time here in this world; we then shall meet the sinner, and God will judge us according to our works. O, dear brethren, what our hands find to do let us do it with our might. V. H.

SCOTT, Oct. 1st, 1847.

DR. BAIRD.—This gentleman is now lecturing with great acceptance to the citizens of Albany. His lectures must present new views of the state of society in Europe, to all who hear them, however much they may have read. The condition of the people of the continent in regard both to civilization and literature, is far more elevated than has been generally imagined. From the Doctor's account, we have obtained our information too much from the British press, which is not to be depended on; every thing beside England being put in the shade. The Doctor's opportunities for comparing other countries with his own, have been superior to those of almost any other individual, having been quite familiar in his intercourse with all the principal sovereigns in Europe, having traveled extensively through their kingdoms, visited their first institutions, and resided in Paris and other places; and the result of his observations must challenge serious regard. He gives to the United States the decided preëminence. Not to be sure in the magnificence of architecture and splendor of royalty, but in moral and political elevation, and in humane and benevolent institutions.

NEW YORK FEMALE EDUCATION SOCIETY.—The New York Recorder says: This Society, long known as a useful auxiliary of the Baptist State Education Society, celebrated its anniversary on Thursday evening, the 11th, at Rev. Dr. Cone's church. Rev. D. Dunbar prayed; Dr. Cone read the Treasurer's Report; the Report of the Board was read for the Secretary by Dr. Devan, who moved its acceptance, which was seconded by Rev. J. W. Sarles, of Brooklyn. Mr. Sarles went into an elaborate exposition of the theological training given at Hamilton, proving its eminent soundness, and its importance to the denomination considered as a bulwark against the novelties and errors of our times. His remarks were listened to with the highest satisfaction. Dr. Dowling addressed the meeting in his usually attractive manner, in behalf of the important objects of the Society.

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—Five missionaries of the American Board, Rev. Messrs. Baldwin and Cummings and wives, with Rev. Mr. Richards, and Dr. J. Sexton James and wife, under the Southern Baptist Convention, sailed from Philadelphia for China, on the 11th inst. The Christian Chronicle says a large concourse of the friends of the missionaries assembled, and the usual religious services were held. After the singing of a hymn, Rev. J. Chambers addressed the Throne of Grace, after which Rev. J. H. Kennard, Dr. James' pastor, pronounced the benediction. While the assembly was dispersing, the missionary hymn, "From Greenland's icy mountains," was sung with great spirit and feeling.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—According to the official minutes of this church for 1847, as published by Lane & Tappitt, of New York, there are twenty-four conferences in union with the church, of which the Baltimore Conference has the largest membership, viz: 52,448 white and 16,387 colored. Ohio stands next, numerically, having a white membership of 61,684, and colored 514. Philadelphia, New York, and Pittsburg are next. The Vermont Conference has the smallest. The total membership in the twenty-four conferences is: white, 600,941; colored, 29,901; Indians, 716—total 631,538. There are 3,296 traveling preachers; 346 superannuated; 4,913 local—total 8,555. These statistics do not include the Southern branch of the Methodist Church.

A JEW IN FRANCE.—During the stay which Sir Moses Montefiore recently made in Paris, says the Archives Israelites for September, he had the honor to be presented to the King of the French. Sir Moses was accompanied by Dr. Loewe. The King expressed to the worthy English Israelite the hope of seeing the Jews every where emancipated, and in the enjoyment of the same privileges which they possess in France. The King was also pleased to take into consideration the complaints of Sir Moses against the French Consul in Damascus, and announced his intention of recalling that high functionary.

LATE FROM MR. ONCKEN.—In a letter dated Hamburg, Aug. 17, (says the Macedonian for November,) Mr. Oncken thus speaks of the mercies which the church there is enjoying at the hand of God:—

"Our prosperity has been unprecedented, if the conversion of sinners and internal peace and harmony stand among the highest blessings in the kingdom of Christ. Not less than forty-five believers have been baptized and added to the church here, since January, and others will be added soon. A spirit of love and concord has bound the hearts of the disciples closer together than ever. Our assemblies continue to be numerously visited, and we have enjoyed seasons when God displayed his grace with such irresistible power, that the effects in the conviction and conversion of sinners were truly astonishing. Our external peace has been as great as our internal happiness; and, to crown the whole, the Lord has at last given us the desire of our hearts, in reference to a place of worship, of which I have already apprized you, and which, on some occasions since it was opened, has been nearly filled. Up to the present moment, the authorities have taken no notice of this, though the law and special enactments of the Senate are against us. I trust we appreciate these gifts of our heavenly Father in some measure, and our hearts are filled with bright hopes for the future."

THE JEWS IN PRUSSIA.

The Orient publishes the following extract from a decree of the King, upon the address of the Chambers. It will be seen that the Jews are still very far from enjoying a perfect equality:—

"There shall be granted to our Jewish subjects, so far as this law does not otherwise determine, in the whole extent of our kingdom, with (the obligation of) equal duties, also equal civil rights with our Christian subjects. A Jew shall only, then, be admissible to any mediate or immediate state or communal-office, when there is not connected with the same the exercise of any judicial, police, or executive power. Besides this, the Jews shall remain altogether excluded from the government or superintendence of matters pertaining to Christian worship and education. In Universities the Jews may be appointed, so far as the statutes are not opposed thereto, as private teachers, extraordinary and ordinary professors of the chairs belonging to the medical, mathematical, natural, scientific, geographical, and linguistical departments. They remain excluded from all other branches of tuition, likewise from the academical senate, and the offices of Dean, Prorector, and Rector. In schools of art, industry, commerce, and navigation, Jews may be admitted as teachers. Otherwise, the appointment of Jews as teachers remains confined to Jewish educational establishments. Jews cannot be elected as representatives; and should such a right belong to a property acquired by a Jew, it remains dormant while in his possession. The same is the case with the right of giving benefices, and superintendence of church property. Jews cannot exercise, in person, any judicial or police power; they may, however, elect the judge and administrator of police. The Jewish possessor is, nevertheless, bound to bear all the duties which are connected with the above-mentioned rights. If the patronage belongs to a community, the Jewish members cannot take any part in the exercise of the same; but they must bear the charges resulting from their possessing this species of property. Resident Jewish members of a city or village community remain, moreover, compelled to pay the contribution for the support of the church, in proportion to their real estate; also, all Jewish proprietors are held bound to the payment of all church rates to which their property is liable."

A MISSIONARY'S FEELINGS.—Our readers are aware that Mr. Abbott, the Baptist missionary, left this country for Burmah in August last. He went by the way of England, for the purpose of hastening his arrival at his field of labor. His two children he left with friends in the United States. Alluding to his feelings at leaving them, and while on the water, he says:

"I looked from the ship on the face of dear friends, as they stood on the wharf in Boston—and for a moment I was sad. I shall see them no more! Well, the tie is sundered. So be it. It is not a new thing to me. Soon the city—the spires—the islands—my native land—faded from my view, and forever. And is it so, that I shall see my babes no more? Shall I never see that dear little creature, his elbows resting on my knees, his chin on his hands, looking into my face, and with tearful eyes and quivering lip, saying, 'Papa, please not go!' Ah! that sound and that countenance! I would give worlds to hear and see them again. And still, how the recollection makes my heart ache! The elder boy, too, with his mild eye and expressive countenance. Dear creatures! May He who hears the raven's cry, shelter them in his bosom!

"But onward, and onward still, we 'plough' the raging deep, in spite of adverse winds and rolling seas. And I am positively on my way to the Karen jungle. And with the usual allotments of Divine Providence, I shall see those dear native preachers and those pastors once more! I pace the deck, and begin to sing—

'Bear me on, thou restless ocean!'"

MORAL DARKNESS IN VIRGINIA.—Bishop Johns of Baltimore, at a recent meeting of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York, made the following statement in regard to Virginia, as reported in the New York Express:—"At a recent meeting of the Bible Society for Virginia, it was reported that there are sixteen thousand families without the word of God. He knew of more than one county where there was no edifice for the worship of God, and no minister of any denomination whatever. The depth of their ignorance was amazing. A minister was summoned to attend the couch of a dying man, and on examining him as to his religious faith, found that he had never even heard the name of Jesus Christ but as an oath. Nor was this a solitary case. Two females were called to testify in court to an important business; on questioning them, previous to swearing them, it was ascertained, to the astonishment of both judge and jury, that they had never heard of either the Bible or of God!

PAUPERISM IN BOSTON.—During the year ending Nov. 1, 1847, the House of Industry, or Alms House, has had 2,434 inmates—661 for an average number. 70 city poor and 102 State pauper, remained the whole year. 340 died in the House during the year. Of this number, 804 were born in this country; 314 of them, however, of foreign parents; the rest were all foreigners. The expense of supporting this establishment for the year, has been about $32,000. In the same period of time, the overseers of the poor have expended in out door relief to the poor about $18,500, aiding 2,456 persons; of these, 1,140 were Americans. The Deer Island Hospital, for sick emigrants, was opened about the first of June, and up to Nov. 1, received 1,765 patients; of whom 248 had died, and 350 remained. During the past year the Boston Lunatic Hospital has had 204 patients, of whom 157 were State within, a year. The aggregate number is 6,859, of whom 2,421 came into the State within a year.

It is estimated that an aggregate of 10,000 persons attend the public places of amusement in this city nightly, bringing into the pockets of the managers, $5,000 equal to $30,000 per week, or one million and a half of dollars per annum.

General Intelligence.

FROM MEXICO.

The intelligence from Mexico is indefinite. The New Orleans papers of the 11th inst., furnish additional items of news from Vera Cruz. The Puebla Flag of Freedom publishes a long account of the battle of Huanautla, stating the number of men under Capt. Walker to have been not more than 195. The Matamoros Flag of the 3d inst., has a rumor that the train with which Gen. Taylor was coming down to Matamoros had been attacked by Mexicans. Anarchy seems to reign at Queretaro. A sufficient number to form a quorum, of the members of Congress can not be assembled. An attempt has been made, started, by the military, to keep Peña y Peña from the Presidential chair, the malcontents even going so far as to contend, in the very teeth of the constitution, that he is not entitled to it; but disorganized as the country now is, they probably will not succeed. Mr. Kendall, in a letter to the N. O. Picayune, dated City of Mexico, Oct. 14, says, "It is now exactly a month since the American flag was hoisted on the National Palace of Mexico, and during that time the occurrences of one day tell the story of all. The men have been paid off, and with the money in their pockets many of them have visited the innumerable dram-shops. Drunkenness would follow, and in many instances while in this state they have been assassinated. Gen. Quitman, the Governor, has taken every means granted him to ferret out the murderers, but in too many cases without success."

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Acadia arrived at Boston on Saturday afternoon, after a boisterous passage of sixteen days from Liverpool. She brings dates eleven days later, from which we extract the following:—

The monetary panic continues, and many heavy failures are reported since the last advices.

The state of the market has been dull, though the prospects were somewhat brighter a day or two before the sailing of the Acadia.

The British Parliament had been summoned to assemble on the 18th inst., for the dispatch of public business.

There are nearly 12,000 factory hands in Manchester without the means of employment. In Ashton-under-Lyne, 8,377 hands have struck work; while the unemployed in that town and Lancaster, Preston and Bolton, amount to 4,679. Beside the above, in nine towns in the district, there are no fewer than 14,500 hands unemployed.

The Catholic Bishops of Ireland had addressed the Lord Lieutenant on the certain recurrence of the famine with the approaching winter. He promised that government would interfere for the preservation of human life.

The affairs of Switzerland are fast approaching a crisis. The belligerent forces are in view of each other, and hostilities appear to be inevitable.

A reconciliation has taken place between the Queen of Spain and her husband. The late Minister of Finance, Señor Salamanaca, is charged with a fraudulent issue of bonds, to the extent of 160,000,000 reals.

The affairs of Italy are not yet satisfactorily adjusted. The Emperor of Austria continues obstinate, but does not seem disposed to take any aggressive steps.

◆

CHOLERA.—We get accounts of the progress of the cholera, which seems to be steadily advancing upon its old track. Mr. William Herapath, a well-known chemist, has published a letter, saying that the result of a long series of experiments during the former visit of the pestilence has been to establish in his mind the conviction that chlorine gas is a perfectly efficient preventive, and, indeed, that it is the only one known. He says that the chloride of zinc and the nitrate of lead, the two most popular disinfectants of the day, are of no avail in cholera, although they will remove ordinary putrid effluvia. "The only chemical preventive I depended on," he continues, "in my numerous exposures to the virus, was chlorine gas, and this I believe to be a perfect one if the fumigation is complete. I placed large quantities of the substance necessary for the evolution of the gas in the hands of a Bristol druggist, who was kind enough to distribute it gratuitously to applicants during three days, with instructions for use; and I am happy to say, that during that time the deaths fell from ten to one per day." [N. Y. Com.

◆

THE CUNARD DOCKS.—We learn from the Newark Advertiser, that the Cunard docks at Jersey City, commenced on the 1st of March last, will probably be completed about the middle of December. There are two piers, both 300 feet long, 40 feet wide, and 61 feet 6 inches in height, being 21 feet at dead low water. On one pier there is a storehouse complete, 46 feet long and 40 wide. There are two other storehouses, the largest being 150 by 110 feet square. Already there have been deposited about the docks 75,000 tons of stone, making in all 780 cargoes. The very best of white pine plank has been used in their construction, brought from the Susquehanna expressly for the work. Upwards of 57,000 cubic yards of mud have been excavated and filled in back of the bulkhead. Henry Southmayd, Esq., is the superintendent. It is estimated that the docks, when finished, will cost upwards of eighty thousand dollars.

◆

TO BE HUNG FOR STEALING A SLAVE.—At the late sitting of the Court of General Sessions for Darlington District, South Carolina, the Hon. Judge Wardlow presiding, James Carlisle was brought to the bar charged with selling a negro slave, the property of Mr. W. Fledger, of Malboro Disirict, to which charge he pleaded guilty; and was sentenced to be hung on Friday, the 25th day of February next.

DREADFUL SUFFERING AT SEA.—The Philadelphia News of Thursday morning, says that the schooner Splendid, Capt. Baker, at that port from Auguilla, reports that on the 8th inst., she fell in with the schooner Caroline, of Saco, Me., Capt. Smith, from Savannah for Bath, with a cargo of lumber, dismasted, &c., having experienced a violent gale on the 25th ult., in lat. 42° 43′, long. 72′. Samuel Lockwood, seaman, confined to the forecastle by sickness, was drowned in the gale, and Henry Hughes, seaman, a native of Wales, was washed overboard during the prevalence of a heavy sea, on the 29th ult. During the gale their provisions were all washed overboard, consequently when fallen in with by the Splendid, the survivors, three in number, were in the most destitute condition; in fact, so desperate had become their situation, that they were obliged to adopt the fearful alternative of sacrificing one of their number for subsistence to the rest, and accordingly lots were cast, and the awful decision fell upon one of the seamen named Charles Brown, who was killed, and upon whose flesh the poor wretches lived until picked up.

◆

MORMON LOCATION.—The St. Louis Republican of October 27, says: We yesterday saw a person direct from Council Bluffs, who states that on the day he left, a runner came in, who was sent on in advance by the Mormon 'Twelve,' who were on their route back from the Salt Lake. Our informant states that the Mormons have located their grand gathering place about half way between the Utah and Salt Lake in California, on a stream which connects the two waters. The distance between the two lakes is about sixty miles—a fertile valley extending the whole distance, of several miles in breadth. There they have laid out a city, and commenced making improvements. They are in the midst of the Blackfeet, Utah, and Crow tribe of Indians, who are said to be peaceable, and favor this settlement. The main body of emigrating Mormons, which started from the Bluffs in June last, had advanced about two hundred miles between the South Pass by the latter end of July, and were passed at Green river at that time. They had got on without difficulty to that point, and were pushing on to their new location.

SUMMARY.

A Turk with three wives, brought with him from Turkey, and three several classes of children, died lately in New York, without a will. Each of the three wives have applied to the Surrogate for letters of administration. This case is a puzzler to the Judge of Probate. He thinks he cannot grant letters to all the wives, and that the one first married has the preference. By the law of Turkey, where the marriages were celebrated, all the wives a man may have, no matter how many, are held equal, having the same rights of property. The fear is, and so the counsel for the ladies represent the law, that the granting of letters to either wife and the exclusion of the others, would in effect declare the excluded ones concubines, and make their children illegitimate. The Surrogate has taken the case under advisement.

A man in the employ of William Garbutt, of Wheatland, named John Halligan, an Irishman, aged 35 years, was killed on Friday night under the following circumstances: He went into Mr. Garbutt's barn about six o'clock in the evening, for the purpose of procuring some chickens. The fowls were at roost in the upper part of the barn, and it being somewhat dark, he slipped and fell a distance of about 16 feet, to the floor below, which was paved with stone. He survived about six hours after the accident.

A writer in the Washington Union says, a railroad 608 miles long, from Presidio de Rio Grande to Guayames in the Gulf of California, would secure a continuous steam communication from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He thinks it much preferable to the route by the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, or that of Darien. The expense would be slight, compared with Mr. Whitney's project of a railroad across the continent.

It is stated in the Williamsport times, that the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal will be in good navigable order by the latter part of this week, and that, by that time, a large an active transportation of flour and other products will be commenced. We learn from undoubted sources that the arrangements recently made for providing funds to complete the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, have all been completed—the money actually paid and the work commenced.

The Louisville Journal says, that last week there came to Troy, a little town in Indiana, a German family composed of a man, his wife, and thirty-two children. The children are all girls, and were produced at sixteen births. A gentleman of that city, who has some land in that vicinity, has promised to give them one hundred acres of land, provided their daughters will promise, as they severally come to maturity, to intermarry with the inhabitants of Indiana.

A large importation of West India yams into England has lately taken place, in consequence of the anticipated scarcity of potatoes, which has given a stimulous to the cultivation of this tropical substitute for that root. Some tons have been sold for the purpose of cattle feeding, and a quantity has also been sent gratuitously to Ireland, to test their applicability to the feeding of pigs.

A large fire took place in West Boylston, in Worcester county, Mass., on Friday night. A factory owned by Childs & Dinsmore, a grist-mill owned by Mr. Wilder, a barn filled with lumber, a blacksmith shop, and sundry outbuildings were burned. The fire was caused by dropping a lamp in some cotton. Loss from $12,000 to $15,000—partly insured.

A royal decree has been promulgated, proclaiming the abolition of slavery in the Danish colonies. All slaves under sixteen years of age are by this decree declared absolutely free from the 18th of September, and those above that age to be held in the condition of apprentices for four years from that date.

The Unitarian meeting-house in Stow, Mass., was destroyed by fire on Tuesday last, between 9 and 11 o'clock, A. M. The fire caught from a furnace that had been placed in the building only a week before. The desk, clock, communion service, books, &c., were saved.

On Tuesday, the 16th, the dead body of a female, between 25 and 30 years of age, was taken from the Delaware Division of the Canal at Port Pleasant. On examination, various marks of violence were found upon her person. Her name was not ascertained. An impression prevails that the murder was committed either above or below on the Canal, that the body was borne along as far as Port Pleasant in a canal-boat, and was then thrown overboard.

The packet ship New World, from New-York for Liverpool, takes out about $100,000 in sovereigns; the Yorktown, for London, has $5,000, and the French packet will take out 150,000 dollars. The Tribune says that this movement of gold is against the current of trade, and not for lack of good bills.

We learn, says the Port Tobacco Times, that in consequence of the short crop of American tobacco this year, prices of the raw material have experienced a rise of nearly thirty per cent. since Spring. The usual crop is something over 90,000 hogsheads, and this year it is hardly 50,000.

The New catalogue of Yale College shows that there are now in the institute:—Theological students 44; law students 41; medical students 45; scholars of the house 2; students in philosophy and the arts 11; seniors 89; juniors 103; sophomores 92; freshmen 95; undergraduates 379. Total 522.

Fifty thousand persons assembled on the 20th of October, in St. Mark's Square, Venice, and next morning on many of the houses, in charcoal characters, were to be seen the significant phrases, "Viva Pio IX, Viva Italia." Venice is in possession of Austria, a part of her avaricious bargain with Napoleon.

Douglass Jerrold says, that "if the Emperor of the Russias chose to sell out the stock he holds in the British funds, he would drain the Bank of England of all its gold." England which boasts of a civilization of a thousand years, is absolutely at the mercy of the sovereign of a people scarcely yet emerged from barbarism!

The vote in favor of a Convention to modify the Constitution of Kentucky against slavery, was decisive. The Examiner says: "The counties having few slaves," also "those along the border, liable to emancipation influences," gave large majorities, whether whig or democrat.

The Oswego Times says, that on the 16th, there was ground, bolted, packed and shipped, at the flouring mills of H. Fitzhugh & Co., in that village, 814 bbls. of superfine flour, with six run of stone.

The steamer Hendrik Hudson, on her way up the North River, a week ago last Friday night, ran into and sunk the schooner J. B. Root, of Jamaica, laden with ashes. All the hands on board the schooner escaped without serious injury, with one exception, the captain, who was killed.

The Governor-General of Canada, says the Toronto Patriot, has been pleased to commute the sentence of death passed on Timothy and Mary Burke, at the recent Assizes, Kingston, (for the murder of their children,) to imprisonment for life in the Penitentiary.

The church at the village of Piscataway, N. J., says the New Brunswick Union, was consumed by fire on Saturday evening last. The Presbyterian church at Columbia, Tenn., was burnt on Sunday, the 31st of October. The church caught fire from an ajoining building which had been set on fire.

The Mayor of Washington, in conformity to a resolution of the Common Council of that city, has appointed Thursday, the 25th of November, to be observed as a day of praise and thanksgiving in the District of Columbia.

At Dodgeville, Wisconsin, a short time since, an affray occurred between a white man named John Cork, and four negroes, at a gambling board, during which Cork, shot and killed one of the negroes and wounded another dangerously.

Dr. John Hubble, of Van Buren county, Missouri, was murdered in the early part of last month. He was engaged in the duty of family worship, when he was shot by some person through the window, and instantly expired.

A destructive fire occurred at Algiers, opposite New Orleans on the night of the 6th, which destroyed lumber to the amount of $8,000 or $10,000.

A new branch railroad, called the Oldham Extension Railway, has just been opened in England, which although only a little more than a mile in length, cost nearly 600,000 dollars. It comprises two tunnels, each 440 yards in length.

The Secretary of the Tresury has instructed the Collector of New York, the New York Sun says, to reduce the Custom House expenses at least ten per cent. This will effect an important saving for the Government—about $100,000 per annum.

A public meeting is contemplated in the city of New York for the purpose of giving American citizens an opportunity to express "sympathy with the efforts of Pope Pius IX. in behalf of constitutional liberty."

M. Peyron, lately a pupil of the Polytechnic School, the young brother-in-law of M. Alfred de Montesquieu, who lately stabbed himself, became a few months ago a noviciate in a convent of Jesuits, and has given up to the order the whole of his fortune, amounting to about 5,000,000 francs.

An order has been issued by the chancellor of New Jersey, directing the receivers of the Plainfield Bank to reöpen their books, that the balance of the bill holders may come in for their shares of the assets.

The cost of Government, to each individual, in the United States, amounts to $2 39 per annum; in France, to $7 50, and in Great Britain, $12 23.

The Whale Ship Atlantic, Kenny, of Mystic, is reported to have been lost in Fayal Bay, Sept. 23. She was bound on a cruise to the Indian Ocean and North West Coast—had probably no oil.

The Chinese Junk is now at anchor in Boston harbor, and will probably be in readiness for inspection in the course of a few days.

The Albany Evening Journal says that our State Canals are far exceeding the hopes of their most sanguine friends. They this year pay gloriously. The tolls already received exceed the amount paid last year, to the same period, $888,454 06. The excess over the entire receipts of last year, is 757,821 39. The whole amount received up to this time, is over $3,500,000! The tolls for the fiscal year of 1847, show an excess over 1846, of $673,591 16.

A young Irishman named Peter Dougherty, who had hitherto conducted himself with extreme propriety, and abstained altogether from alcohol, spent Monday night, the 15th, with some friends, who induced him to drink, and on his way home he became disorderly, and was locked up in the 14th ward station-house, and hanged himself in his cell during the night, where he was found dead the next morning.

A colored woman was lately killed in the upper part of Darlington District, Ga., by lightning, while in the act of drawing water from a well with a sweep. The fluid struck the pole to which the bucket was attached, upon which it descended to the bottom of the well, throwing up a considerable quantity of sand and water above the top of the curb.

A beautiful tea service of silver is to be presented to Bishop Burgess, by the ladies of Christ Church, in Hartford. The set consists of five pieces: a coffee pot, tea and water pots, sugar bowl, and cream pitcher—the value of which is about four hundred dollars.

A man named Bryan Foley, drowned himself in the canal at Lowell, on the 11th inst. He left his house saying that he did not know but he should drown himself; he was followed, and his pursuers had nearly come up with him, when he was seen to jump into the canal. No cause is assigned for the act.

The Norwalk Gazette says that a bed of coal has been discovered in the town of Ridgefield, Conn., and that measures are progressing for working it. A gentleman of experience has contracted with the proprietor of the land for the privilege, and is now in pursuit of the proper hands and means for commencing operations.

In Stark county, Ohio, G. W. Sickafore recently obtained a verdict of $500 for libel, against David Han, a clerk in his store, for writing anonymous letters to eastern merchants, representing the plaintiff as insolvent.

The Vancluse mine, Orange county, Virginia, is the most extensive gold mine now in operation in the United States, the capital of which is to be raised $500,000 divided into $10,000 shares of $50 each. Large subscriptions have been made in Washington, and among them extensive ones for English houses.

The Green Bay Advocate says, that a mail will leave that place for Copper Harbor, on Lake Superior, on the 1st of November, and the first of every subsequent month until the 1st of May next. It returns from Copper Harbor on the 15th of each month.

The city of Pesth, in Hungary, has just contracted a loan with the house of Messrs. Rothschild, of Vienna, to the amount of 2,000,000 florins, (£208,000,) which sum is to be exclusively expended in the creation of schools and other establishments of public instruction

A fatal disease of small pox in sheep, is cutting off a great number of those animals in Great Britain.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., on the 20th inst., by Eld. D. Coon, Mr. LUKE B. MAXSON of Hopkinton, to Miss ANN E. BABCOCK, formerly of Allegany Co., N. Y., but now residing in Hopkinton.

In Westerly, R. I., on the 21st inst., by Eld. I. Moore, JOSEPH C. BURDICK, of Charlestown, R. I., to SUSAN M. CLARKE, of Westbrook, Ct.

DIED,

In North Brookfild, N. Y., Nov. 9, of pulmonary consumption, WILLARD W. TANNER, in the 26th year of his age. Brother Tanner embraced the cause of Christ in early life, and united with the second Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I. His life and death were characterized with the brightest evidences of a saint of the Most High. He was ever esteemed a meek and lowly follower of the Lamb of God during his Christian profession. By the advise of his physician, he left Rhode Island, hoping that a change of climate would operate favorable to his health; but the fondest hopes are often blighted, for on the tenth day after his arrival at the residence of his wife's sister, he gently fell asleep in the arms of Him who died that he might live. He has left a wife and a large circle of friends to mourn his departure. The funeral was attended at Leonardsville. Discourse preached by Rev. Wm. B. Maxson, from Matt. 24: 44—"Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

"Brother, thou art gone to rest;
We will not weep for thee;
For thou art now where oft on earth
Thy spirit longed to be.

Brother, thou art gone to rest;
Thine is an early tomb;
But Jesus summoned thee away;
Thy Saviour called thee home.

Brother, thou art gone to rest;
Thy toils and cares are o'er;
And sorrow, pain, and suffering, now
Shall ne'er distress thee more.

Brother, thou art gone to rest;
Thy sins are all forgiven;
And saints in light have welcomed thee
To share the joys of heaven.

Brother, thou art gone to rest;
And this shall be our prayer—
That, when we reach our journey's end,
Thy glory we may share."

At the residence of Dea. Josiah W. Langworthy, in Hopkinton, R. I, on the 18th of Oct., 1847, Miss LOIS WITTER, 79 years of age. She experienced religion in early life, and became a member of the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, where she remained an ornament to the Christian name, until she was called to join the church triumphant. Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

D. C.

In Westerly, R. I., on the 13th of November, of lung fever, Mr. PHILIP SAUNDERS, aged 76 years.

LETTERS.

W. B. Gillett, H. H. Baker, Anson. Burdick, Jno. Duer, H. W. Stillman, W. B. Sayles, I. D. Titsworth, Albert Utter, N. V. Hull, V. Hull, J. A. Begg (will write.)

RECEIPTS.

H. B. & C. Davis, Shiloh		$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
C. F. Randolph	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
John S. Bacon	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Chas. Dickason	"	2 00	"	3	" 52
Eliza Dunham, New Market		2 00	"	4	" 52
Jer. Dunn	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Wm. Buffington, Westerly, R.I.		4 00	"	4	" 52
M. S. Kenyon, Hopkinton, R. I.		2 00	"	4	" 52
John Webster	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Sophia Wells	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
C. W. Crary, Milltown, Ct.		1 00	"	4	" 26
A. M. Covey, Brookfield,		2 00	"	4	" 52

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thonsand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

THE NATIONAL ERA:

Washington City, District of Columbia.

G. BAILEY, Editor; JOHN G. WHITTIER, Cor. Editor.

L. P. NOBLE, Publisher.

The leading purpose of this journal is, the discussion of the question of Slavery, and the advocacy of the main principles of the Liberty Party. Due attention is given to Social and Political Questions of general importance; nor are the interests of a Pure Literature overlooked.

It aims to preserve a faithful record of important events: of inventions or discoveries affecting the progress of Society, of public documents of permanent value; and, during the sessions of Congress, to present such reports of its proceedings, as will convey a correct idea not only of its action, but of its spirit and policy. The debates on the exciting subjects of Slavery and the Mexican War, expected to arise in the next Congress, will occupy a large share of its columns.

Arrangements have been made for extending and enriching its already valuable Department of Home and Foreign Correspondence.

It is printed on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in the best style, at $2 a year, payable in advance.

The generous spirit in which the Era has been welcomed by the Public Press, and the very liberal patronage it has received during this, the first year of its existence, encourages us to hope for large accessions to our subscription list.

It is desirable that subscriptions be forwarded without delay, so that they may be entered before the approaching Congress.

All communications addressed to L. P. NOBLE,
Publisher of the National Era, Washington, D. C.

FIRESIDE READING

For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.

"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.

"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author.

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing	Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	"	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	"	April 5,	"	July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Teachers' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall and middle of the winter terms, to continue seven weeks, in which special attention will be given to those intending to teach common schools, with a view to fit them for their responsible duties.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter, Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

Miscellaneous.

From the Ploughman.

THE OLD FARM RAKE.

I love it; I love it; and who 'll undertake
To chide me for loving my Old Farm Rake?
I have treasured it long, as an heir loom to me,
And e'er kept it safe, lest it injured might be.
I prize it above every thing of its kind,
So precious the implement is to my mind.
Do you ask why it is? This answer I make,
'T was my grandfather's own; yes, this Old Farm Rake!

How often I 've seen him rolling the hay,
With his wrinkled brow, and his locks all gray!
And I almost worship'd him when he smiled,
And, patting my cheek, bless'd his little grandchild.
But years rolled on and his fire went out,
His energies fail'd, and he scarce went about.
Yet, oft from his reveries would he awake,
And tell of his prowess with the Old Farm Rake!

Choice, favorite tool, thou hast seen much repair,
As others are wont, for their wear and their tear.
Full many a head, aye, stale and bow,
Thou hast had, all new, as the truth would show.
But then, what of that? there, sure, cannot be,
A possible doubt of thy identity.
Thou art still the same, my horse I 'll stake,
My good, good grandfather's Old Farm Rake!

'T is past! 't is past! and his days are done;
We all have seen his setting sun!
How often down in yonder field,
This implement I have seen him wield!
Ah! call me a dunce, or what you will,
Yet I'm 'of the same opinion still,'
And love it still for grandfather's sake;
I venerate ever the Old Farm Rake.

INTERVIEW BETWEEN CHARLES II. AND WILLIAM PENN, IN 1681

When William Penn was about to sail from England to Pennsylvania, he went to take leave of the King, and the following conversation occurred:—'Well, friend William, said Charles, 'I have sold you a noble province in North America, but still I suppose you have no thoughts of going thither yourself. 'Yes I have,' replied William, 'and am just come to bid thee farewell.' 'What, venture yourself among the savages of North America! Why, man, what security have you, that you will not be in their war-kettle in two hours after setting foot on their shores?' 'The best security in the world,' replied Penn. 'I doubt that, friend William; I have no idea of any security against those cannibals, but in a regiment of good soldiers, with their muskets and bayonets. And mind, I tell you beforehand, that with all my good will for you and your family, to whom I am under great obligation, I will not send a single soldier with you.' 'I want none of thy soldiers answered William,' 'I depend on something better than thy soldiers.' The King wished to know what that was. 'Why I depend on themselves—on their moral sense—and on that grace of God which bringeth salvation, and which hath appeared unto all men.' 'I fear, friend William, that grace has never appeared to the Indians of North America.' 'Why not to them as well as to all others?' 'If it had appeared to them,' said the King, 'they would hardly have treated my subjects so barbarously as they have done.' 'That is no proof to the contrary, friend Charles. Thy subjects were the aggressors. When thy subjects first went to North America, they found these poor people the fondest and kindest creatures in the world. Every day they would watch for them to come ashore, and hasten to meet them, and feast them on their best fish, and venison, and corn, which was all that they had. In return for this hospitality of the savages, as we call them, thy subjects, termed Christians, seized their country and rich hunting grounds, for farms for themselves! Now is it to be wondered at that these much injured people should have been driven to desperation by such injustice, and that burning with revenge, they should have committed some excesses.' 'Well, then, friend William, I hope you will not complain when they come to treat you in the same manner.' 'I am not afraid of it,' said Penn. 'Aye, how will you avoid it. You mean to get their hunting grounds, too, I suppose?' 'Yes, but not by driving these poor creatures away from them.' 'No, indeed, how then will you get their lands?' 'I mean to buy their lands of them!' 'Buy their lands of them! why man you have already bought them of me.' 'Yes! and at a dear rate too, but I did it only to get thy good-will, not that I thought thou hast any right to their lands!' 'Zounds, man! —no right to their lands!' 'No; friend Charles, no right at all. What right hast thou to their lands?' 'Why, the right of discovery; the right which the Pope and all Christian kings have agreed to give one another.' 'The right of discovery! a strange kind of right indeed. Now, suppose friend Charles, some canoe loads of these Indians, crossing the sea, and discovering thy island of Great Britain, were to claim it as their own, and set it up for sale over thy head, what wouldst thou think of it?' 'Why—why—why—why,' replied Charles, 'I must confess, I should think it a piece of great impudence in them.' 'Well, then, how canst thou, a CHRISTIAN and a CHRISTIAN PRINCE too, do that which thou so utterly condemnest in these people whom thou callest savages? 'Yes, friend Charles; and suppose again that these Indians, on thy refusal to give up thy island of Great Britain, were to make war on thee, and having weapons more destructive than thine, were to destroy many of thy subjects, and to drive the rest away, wouldst thou not think it horribly cruel?' The King assenting to this with strong marks of conviction, William proceeded—'well, then friend Charles, how can I, who call myself a Christian, do what I should abhor even in heathens? No, I will not do it. But I will buy the right of the proper owners, even of the Indians themselves. By so doing I shall imitate God himself in his justice and mercy, and thereby insure his blessing on my colony, if I should ever live to plant one in North America.' [Life of Wm. Penn.

AGE OF POULTRY.

Farmers usually sell poultry alive, excepting in some parts of the country, such as the Borders, where geese are killed and plucked for the sake of their feathers before being sent to market. Poulterers in towns, on the other hand, kill and pluck every sort of fowl for sale, so that the purchaser has it in his power to judge of the carcass; and if he buys an inferior article at a high price, it must be his own fault. It is easy to judge of a plucked fowl, whether old or young, by the state of the legs. If a hen's spur is hard, and the scales on the legs rough, she is old, whether you see her head or no; but the head will corroborate your observation, if the under bill is so stiff that you cannot bend it down, and the comb thick and rough. A young hen has only the rudiments of spurs, the scales on the legs smooth, glossy and fresh colored, whatever the color may be, the claws tender and short, the under bill soft, and the comb thin and smooth. An old hen-turkey has rough scales on the legs, callosities on the soles of the feet, and long, strong claws; a young one the reverse of all these marks. When the feathers are on, an old turkey-cock has a long beard, a young one but a sprouting one; and when they are off, the smooth scales on the legs decide the point, besides difference of size in the wattles of the neck, and in the elastic shot upon the nose. An old goose, when alive, is known by the roughness of the legs, the strength of the wings, particularly at the pinions, the thickness and strength of the bill, and the firmness and thickness of the feathers; and when plucked, by the legs, pinions and bill, and the coarseness of the skin. Ducks are distinguished by the same means, but there is this difference, that a duckling's bill is much longer in proportion to the breadth of its head than that of an old duck. A young pigeon is discovered by its pale colored, smooth scaled, tender, collapsed feet, and the yellow long down interspersed among the feathers. A pigeon that can fly has always red colored legs and no down, and is then too old for use. [Book of the Farm.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

The following beautiful illustration of the power of love over the hardest hearts will be acceptable, and we trust profitable, to our readers.

The Colony of Petitbourg is an establishment for the reformation of juvenile offenders —for instruction of abandoned children (boys) who are found without any parental care, wandering about the streets of Paris. It is supported by voluntary contributions. The boys are taught all sorts of outdoor and indoor work, and have regular seasons of recreation. When any one commits a fault requiring grave punishment, the whole of the boys are assembled as a sort of council, to deliberate and decide on the sort of punishment to be inflicted, which consists usually of imprisonment in a dungeon for a number of days, and of course no participation in the recreations of the community.

There are at present about 130 boys in the institution. Now here is the peculiarity of the discipline. After sentence is passed by the boys, under the approval of the director, the question is then put; 'Will any of you consent to become the patron of this poor offender, that is, to take his place now and suffer in his room and stead, while he goes free?' And it rarely happens but that some one is found to step forward and consent to ransom the offender by undergoing his punishment—the offender being in that case merely obliged to act as porter in carrying to his substitute in the dungeon his allowance of bread and water during all the time of his captivity. The effect has been the breaking of the most obdurate hearts of the boys by seeing another actually enduring willingly what they have deserved to suffer

A remarkable case occurred lately. A boy whose violent tember and and bad conduct had procured his expulsion from several schools in Paris, and who was in the fair way of becoming an outlaw and a terror to all good people, was received into the institution. For a while, the novelty of the scene, the society, the occupations &c., seemed to have subdued his temper; but at length his evil disposition showed itself, through his drawing a knife on a boy with whom he had quarreled, and stabbing him in the breast. The wound was severe but not mortal; and while the bleeding boy was carried to the hospital of the colony, the rest of the inmates were summoned to decide on the fate of the criminal. They agreed at once in a sentence of instant expulsion, without hope of re-admission The director opposed this and showed them that such a course would lead this poor desperate boy to the scaffold or the galleys. He bade them think of another punishment. They fixed upon imprisonment for an unlimited period. The usual question was put, but no patron offered himself, and the culprit was marched off to prison.

After some days the director reminded the boys of the case; and on the repetition of the call, 'Will no one become the patron of this unhappy youth?' a voice was heard, 'I will!' The astonished boys looked around and saw coming forward the very youth that had been wounded, and who had just been discharged from the sick ward. He went to the dungeon and took the place of his would-be murderer (for had the boy's physical strength been equal to his passion, the blow must have been fatal, both boys being only about nine or ten years old;) and it was only after the latter had for some time carried the pittance of food to his generous patron, and seen him still pale and feeble from the effects of his wound, suffering for him privations of light, and liberty, and joy, that his stout heart gave way, and he cast himself at the feet of the director, confessing and bewailing with bitter tears the wickedness of his heart, and expressing the resolution to lead a different life for the time to come. Such a fact needs no comment.

SINGULAR FEROCITY OF WAR ELEPHANTS

The number of elephants employed in the armies of the Mogul sovereigns appear almost incredible, when we recollect the quantity of food necessary for the support of each individual. The grand Kublai is said to have possessed five thousand, and Capt. Jenkins, who was at Agra in 1607, and delivered a letter from King James to the Emperor Jehangir, relates that the Emperor had "twelve thousand elephants, about 600 with teeth, the rest were females and young ones." The Emperor Akbar, the predecessor of Jehangir, allotted 200 elephants to every toman, or 10,000 of his cavalry.

These huge and powerful animals were trained to the dreadful business of war, and seemed to acquire a pleasure in aiding the wishes of their masters. They were covered with armor formed with plates of steel joined together by chains, so as especially to defend the trunk, head and interior parts of the body. On the backs of these animals wooden towers filled with archers were secured, who poured down the missiles upon the infantry, being almost out of danger themselves, as the elephants were protected by their dense skins and superadded armor, and by their formidable trunks, weilded with death-dealing force against the assailants. Can anything be conceived more dreadful than a field of battle covered by several hundred thousand combatants armed solely with swords, axes, and missile weapons, whilst a host of elephants are rushing upon their ranks! At their irresistible onset thousands are dashed to the earth, and trampled under foot—a blow with the trunk sends the horseman to the earth—a thrust with the tusks hurls the terrified steed among his comrades, while the huge beast, urging forward his enormous weight, strews the ground with horrible carnage. Still he is under the government of the rider who sits upon his neck, and his work of destruction is systematically pursued. But his trunk is thrown aloft, his ears erected, his mouth expanded, and a protracted, shrill and pierceing scream uttered; the spear of a horseman has entered his neck—frantic with pain, he seizes his conductor with his trunk and flings him into the air; he breaks from the ranks and plunges onward, regardless whether friend or foes are destroyed; in agony he sinks at last among the slaughtered, destroying in his fall those who have been safely conveyed through the previous horrors in the tower on his back.

To render the elephants more efficient in fight, large sabres, daggers, and other offensive weapons were fastened to their tusks, and every care was taken to inspire them with fury against their oppressors. [True Sun.

DULL BOYS.

We are not to conclude that those who are at first exceedingly dull, will never make great proficiency. The examples are numerous, of persons who were unpromising in childhood, but who were distinguished in manhood for their great acquirements.

Adam Clarke, D. D., was taught the alphabet with great difficulty. He was very often chastised for his dullness, and it was seriously feared that he would never learn. He was eight years old before he could spell words of three letters, and was distinguished for nothing but rolling large stones. At the age of eight he was placed under a new teacher, who, by the kindness of his manner and by suitable encouragement, aroused the slumbering energies of his mind and elicited a desire for improvement. It is well known that he became even more distinguished for his extensive and various acquirements than he had ever been for rolling stones.

Isaac Bartow, D. D., for two or three years after he commenced going to school was only noted for quarrelling and rude sports. This seemed to be his ruling passion. His father considered his prospects for respectability so dark, that he often said, if either were to die, he hoped it would be Isaac. But Isaac afterwards became the pride of his father's family, and an honor to his country. He was appointed Master of Trinity College, at which time the king said he had given the office to the best scholar in England.

◆

PACKING APPLES FOR SEA-VOYAGES.—The following method is described by a writer in the Farmer and Mechanic, which he adopted for packing fine and selected apples for exportation to England. When they arrived at Sheffield, every one was sound. The very finest only were selected, and the moisture, if any, carefully wiped off; each apple was then rolled in clean, dry wrapping paper. The barrel was then thinly lined with straw, and the apples placed in as closely as possible without jamming them, and then headed up. An inside lining hoop prevented all danger of the heads being knocked in by accident. Thus put up, they could not be made to rattle by common usage. Directions were sent with them as follows:—"These barrels of apples are not to be rolled or tumbled about; if carted, or sent by land, something is to be put on the floor of the cart or wagon, to keep them from being bruised, rattled, or jolted." This care and labor will appear small when it is recollected that it may insure an additional price of several dollars on each barrel in the English market.

◆

MANURE.—Arthur Young took five equal portions of a field, one portion of which he manured with dry cut straw; a second with straw soaked five hours with fresh urine; a third with straw soaked in like manner fifteen hours; a fourth with straw soaked three days; and to the fifth portion he applied nothing. The whole was tilled alike and sowed with grain. The product in grain of the first was thirty-nine, of the second fifty, of the third sixty-three, of the fourth one hundred and twenty-six, and of the undunged portion nine. In weight of grain and straw, the product of the several portions in the order as above named, were found to be 100, 120, 300, and 48. This experiment affords a pretty conclusive demonstration of the value of vegetable matter as food for plants, and particularly of the fertility imparted by the urine of animals, which latter to us is generally lost to all useful purposes. It indicates the propriety of so constructing our cattle yards and stable floorings as to concentrate this liquid, and where there is no cistern to retain it, of applying straw and other litter to absorb it ere it is wasted. Another fact is worth knowing—the rotting process took place wholly in the soil—the fertility was induced by long manure, and the liquids which it held, and not by muck. [Gen. Rec.

◆

LAW.—A young man, who studied law in Connecticut, became acquainted with the following facts, which are certainly very remarkable, though not very singular:

A farmer cut down a tree which stood so near the boundary line of his farm, that it was doubtful whether it belonged to him or his neighbor. The neighbor; however, claimed the tree, and prosecuted the man who cut it for damages. The case was committed from court to conrt. Time was wasted, temper soured, and temper lost; but the case was finally gained by the prosecutor. The last my friend knew of the transaction was, the man who 'gained the cause' came to the lawyer's office to execute a deed of his whole farm, which he had been compelled to sell, to pay his costs! Then houseless, and homeless, he could thrust his hand into his pocket, and triumphantly exclaim —'I've beat him?'

THE DRESS OF CHILDREN.—It is unfortunately the fashion with many ladies of the present time to let their children be exposed with bare neck, arms, and legs, until the skin becomes mottled by a stagnant venous circulation (blueness of skin). In such circumstances, tubercles (early consumption), the seeds of so much malady, and the source of so many heart-pangs, are, I am persuaded, frequently developed, so that this cold surface is equally the source of present misery to the little child, and of future sorrow to the parent. Of this treatment, scrofula and consumption, in their various forms, are the frequent result. In children, especially, the skin should be excited by rubbing, sponging, &c., and protected by a just and general clothing, light in summer, warm in winter, with flannel next the surface at all times. There may be circumstances of health and atmosphere in which exposure may be right enough; but these rarely coincide in infancy (particularly in our climate), or last the whole day. [Marshall Hall, M. D.

VARIETY.

Before 1350, the knife only was used in cutting up food. The fork was first used in Italy, and its use became general in other parts of Europe. It was at first considered so great a luxury, that many monastic orders forbade their members to use them. To this day the Asiatics and Turks use none, and the Chinese, the original inventors of glass, porcelain, the art of printing, the mariner's compass, etching on metal, gunpowder, and innumerable other useful arts, continue to use instead of a fork, two small sticks, which they hold between different fingers of the same hand. In the progress of useful arts, it often happens that a steam engine is perfected before the simplest improvement is attempted,—as Spain built enormous ships before she knew how to build a kitchen chair!

The evils of poverty are more than half relieved, when you have removed from the poor the craving to be rich, and made them contented with their state of life. Philanthropy never did, and never will, loosen the bonds of the captive. Let philanthropy go, let humanity go; but let the heart be touched by divine charity; let each love God and Him only, live for God, and desire nothing but God in heaven or on earth, and the prison doors will fly open, the fetters drop from the slave's feet, the bowed down will be raised up, the whole race will be free, there hearts will be one heart, beat with one love and one hope, and bound with one joy.

In the United States, 6 feet is a very common height for men, though the average is not above 5 feet 9 inches. In England, the average is one or two inches less. Four and a half feet is the common height of Esquimanx, Laplanders and Siberians. In Patagonia, 7 feet is said to be the common height of men, and 6 feet 2 and 3 inches of women; this, however, has been disputed, though all navigators who have been favored with a sight of them, agree that there are giants among them. In America men appear to be taller, if not more robust, than those of the same latitude on the eastern continent.

At the Museum at Niagara Falls the other day, a boy employed in cleaning the yard, ran a wheelbarrow across the fore paw of a bear. The animal was fastened by a chain, but becoming furious, he broke loose, seized the poor lad, and hugged and bit him with such violence that he died two days afterward. Mr. Barnett ran forward to rescue the lad, but was immediately attacked by the bear, and so severely bitten in different parts of the body that his life was for some time despaired of, but although still confined to his bed, strong hopes are entertained of his recovery. The bear was shot dead without doing any more mischief.

The Mountain Eagle states that great excitement and alarm prevail at present among the inhabitants of Walker and Dade counties, Ga., produced by a burning volcano, which is said to have burst out from the high peaks of the Look-out Mountain, at a place called the "Narrows," on the 19th ult. Some of the inhabitants, it is stated, had removed from the neighborhood.

The Baltimore Sun publishes an advertisement for a firm in Washington, offering one hundred and fifty dollars for the apprehension and safe delivery in jail of Geo. Washington. We have expected all sorts of degradation, but never expected to see Geo. Washington advertised as a runaway slave, from the city bearing his name, and under the Government he has founded.

A number of missionaries—consisting of Rev. Caleb E. Baldwin and wife of Bloomfield, N. J.; Rev. Seneca Cummings and wife, of New-Hampshire, and Rev. William L. Richards of Brooklyn, (son of Mr. Richards of the Sandwich Islands)—are about to embark for China from Philadelphia.

Mr. Houghton or Houton, a volunteer for the war of Mexico, who had disappeared, and was believed to have been run off in the midst of a herd of buffaloes on the plains, has returned safe, but almost starved to death, having been eight days without food.

Application will be made to the next New-Jersey Legislature for an act to incorporate a company with a capital of $300,000, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Mount Holly through or near Mooristown to some point on the Delaware River, in or near the city of Camden.

A new mode of dispersing mobs has been discovered out west, which is said to supercede the necessity of military force. It is, to pass round a contribution box.

Dr. Beecher says:—Never chase a lie. Let it alone, and it will run itself to death. I can work out a good character much faster than any one can lie me out of it.

The number of steamboats, hulls, and barges, that arrived at St. Louis from the 29th of August to the 25th of September, was 252, the tonnage of which amounts to 41,229.

The New-Orleans Delta states that the steamer Great Britain, as soon as she is refitted, is to run regularly between Liverpool and that city.

A "Farmers' College" has been established at Pleasant Hill, 9 miles from Cincinnati, which already numbers 100 students.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

ALFRED, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 24. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 2, 1847. WHOLE NO. 180.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VI.

The proper time of commencing to observe the Sabbath.

The general practice of the church at present in regard to the Sabbath is wrong, not merely in regard to the day of the week which ought to be observed, but also in regard to the period at which the Sabbath commences. Even if Sunday were the Sabbath, an erroneous arrangement of the relation in which the day stands to the night has been introduced, and every where obtains. This error, also, therefore, requires correction.

In all matters of duty, it is our privilege to be permitted and invited, nay, enjoined, to come to the word of God itself for direction, that we may regulate our conduct by the wisdom of divine arrangement. We observe, therefore, that "God said, Let there be lights in the firmamet of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years;" (Gen. 1: 14;) and, in the first intimation of time, the evening precedes the day. In the account of creation, the order observed by the inspired historian is, "And the evening and the morning were the first day"—"And the evening and the morning were the second day"—and so in reference to all the other days of God's creation, the evening precedes the day. Gen. 1: 5, 8, 13, 19, 23, 31. And thus as "the evening and the morning were the sixth day," so of necessity the evening and the morning were the seventh or Sabbath day also, beginning, as it must have done, in the evening, when the sixth day ended. And although there is little of direct authority expressly enjoining upon men the continuance of the same order, this seems chiefly to arise from the uniform observance of it in early times, of which the Scriptures contain abundant evidence. Thus, in the ordinances connected with the great annual feasts, this principle is most distinctly recognized as that of the Lord's computation. The institution of the Passover is, "In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month, at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month, at even." Ex. 12: 18. "Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of thy gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee. But, at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place His name in, there thou shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt." Deut. 16: 5, 6.

So concerning the great day of atonement, "Ye shall do no manner of work; it shall be a statute for ever, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings; it shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls; in the ninth day of the month, at even, from even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath." Lev. 23: 31, 32.

And the many intimations of uncleanness, in particular circumstances, continuing only "until the evening," seem to derive all their force from the fact of the day being then ended on which the individuals were defiled, or the cleansing began. "And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterwards eat of the holy things." Lev. 22: 7. "But it shall be, when evening cometh on, he shall wash himself with water; and when the sun is down, he shall come into the camp again." Deut. 23: 11.

This principle of computation, appointed by divine authority, and exemplified in the various institutions of the law, was universally observed in subsequent ages. And when, after many evils had prevailed in the land of Judea, and Nehemiah was stirred up for reformation, among other profanations which he was called to correct, were those regarding the observance of the Sabbath. "In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine presses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals. There dwelt men of Tyre, also, therein, which brought fish and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah and Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us and upon this city? Yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel, by profaning the Sabbath. And it came to pass that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark, before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath." Neh. 13: 15—19.

He thus recognized not only the duty of sanctifying the Sabbath, but noted its commencement at God's appointed time—"when it began to be dark before the Sabbath," commanding the gates of the city to be shut. It was to be done before the Sabbath hour, which is "when the sun is down." When it became dark, the Sabbath would have commenced, but the gates were previously to be shut, even "when it began to be dark before the Sabbath."

There is connected with this question, a remarkable expression used in the account of one of Daniel's visions. The question is put, "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days, ['unto two thousand and three hundred EVENINGS, MORNINGS,' marg.,] then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8: 14. We speak not of the import of the prediction, but notice that the intimation of time, as corrected in the margin, adopts the creation order, "Evenings, mornings,"—the evening being still before the morning.

As we descend in the Scripture history, we find that the Jews continued to adhere to the same order of time, as they are well known always since to have done. At the commencement of our Lord's ministry, we read that He, with certain of his disciples, "went into Capernaum, and straightway, on the Sabbath day, He entered into the synagogue and taught." In the synagogue, there was a man with an unclean spirit, whom the Lord rebuked and cast out; "and immediately his fame spread abroad, throughout all the region round about Galilee." On leaving, they proceeded directly to the house of Simon Peter and Andrew, where Christ cured Simon's wife's mother of fever. The narrative then proceeds, "And at even, when the snn did set, they brought unto Him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And He healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils." Mark 1: 21—24.

It is not without signification that Matthew, Mark, and Luke, all observe so emphatically the time of day at which this great multitude came with their sick and diseased, to be healed. The first-named Evangelist says, "When the even was come," Matt. 8: 16; "and at even, when the sun did set," says Mark; "now when the sun was setting," is the statement of Luke, "all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto Him." Luke 4: 40. On the performance of the first miracle in the synagogue, "immediately his fame spread abroad;" yet we do not find that any came immediately unto him. They waited till the evening, and yet so intense was the interest excited, that when the sun was setting "all the city was gathered together at the door."

The explanation of this remarkable self-denial, which restrained the friends of the sick till sunset, evidently is the very principle we are now seeking to illustrate. As we have already seen, it was the Sabbath when our Lord entered the synagogue, and performed the cure first mentioned. A consciencious scruple, arising out of their prejudices concerning the nature of Sabbath sanctity, fostered doubtless by the scribes, in accordance with the traditions of the elders, prevented the people from doing what they regarded as Sabbath profanation. However affectionate to their friends, and however sympathizing for the afflicted, they took no steps which by themselves and others would be regarded as the performance of labor on the day of rest. The first miracle was performed wholly independently of them, by the Saviour himself, who more truly knew what the sanctification of the Sabbath really implied. His disciples had witnessed this miracle of mercy, and were thus instructed, by their master's conduct, so that when they came into the house where a loved relative "was taken with a great fever, they besought Him for her." The people generally, however, felt no liberty to do so,—at least they were not induced to bring their sick friends from the various parts of the city to the house where Jesus was. But, so soon as the setting sun announced the Sabbath past, their sympathies for the sufferers prompted to an immediate application to the Great Physician. "And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils."

We have another illustration in the account of the conduct of the Jews at our Lord's crucifixion. To hasten the death of Christ and the malefactors crucified with Him, they, in order "that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, (for that Sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away." John 19: 31. "And now, when THE EVEN was come, because it was the Preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath, Joseph of Arimathea, an honorable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate and craved the body of Jesus." Mark 15: 42, 43. "Now, in the place where he was crucified, there was a garden, and in the garden a new sepulchre wherein was never man yet laid. There laid they Jesus, therefore, because of the Jews' Preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand." John 19: 41, 42. It was at the ninth hour, being about three o'clock in the afternoon, that Jesus gave up the ghost; and although little time was lost in the hasty preparations for interment, the evening, which began the Sabbath, was close at hand before all could be accomplished that was immediately necessary, and the farther preparations for embalming were delayed till the Sabbath should be past. "That day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women, also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices, and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." Luke 23: 54—56.

After our Lord's expiring, some little time must have elapsed while He hung upon the cross; and it was, as we have seen, at the ninth hour that He gave up the ghost; yet, after the interment of the body, it is added, that "the Sabbath drew on." The women who followed after, and who saw how the body was laid, were, therefore, in the garden long after the ninth hour, and still after all this, "they returned and prepared spices and ointments," and still the Sabbath had not commenced, for they "rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." That this was not merely the weekly Sabbath, we shall yet have occasion to show; but the argument is unaffected by that consideration. The whole tenor of these several texts plainly enough proves that the day commenced at sunset, as in all the preceding statements we have seen, it was intended of God that it should do. But it was not merely up to the period of our Lord's death that time was thus computed. The Apostle Paul, speaking of his ministerial fidelity, says unto the elders of the church at Ephesus, "I ceased not to warn every one, night and day, with tears," continuing the creation order of placing the night before the day. Acts 20: 31. So in like manner, in his address before Agrippa, (Acts 26: 7,) he speaks of the twelve tribes of Israel, "instantly serving God, night and day," although our translators, in accommodation to the perverted order which now prevails among the western nations, have here rendered "day and night." And again, to the Corinthian church, recounting what he had endured, he says, "thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day [literally a night-day] I have been in the deep." 2 Cor. 11: 25.

Some difficulty has been felt with regard to an expression used by the Evangelist Matthew, upon which an objection to the view here given has been founded. In our translation we read, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre," Matt. 28: 1. From this it might be inferred that this Sabbath ended only as the day began to dawn. This is, however, so contrary to well-known fact in regard to the age and country to which it related, that much learned ingenuity has been expended upon the elucidation of the text. Of all the amendments offered, no one seems so simple as that contained in the Greek version of Bagster's Polyglott. It is presented on the authority of Griesbach, suggested by "some variety in the punctuation or some various readings which he rejects." He would put a comma after Sabbath, and append the first member of the sentence to the end of the preceding chapter, thus making it to read, "sealing the stone and setting a watch, in the end of the Sabbath." This would make the 28th chapter to begin thus, according to the received version, "As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene,' &c.

This mode of reckoning, "from evening to evening," continued to be observed in the church long after the Sabbath itself had been supplanted, and when the sanctification appointed of God had been transferred to the first day of the week. In a sermon, De Tempore, ascribed to Augustine, it is enjoined, "Let us observe the Lord's day as commanded, 'from even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath.'" Heylin's Hist., p. 138. Rabanus Maurus, at a later date, says, "From the eve of Sabbath until Sunday night, being wholly sequestered from husbandry and all other business, we should devote ourselves to the service of God." Heylin's Hist., part 2, p. 140.* As a part of that "falling away" which we are called to mourn over, we would therefore plead for the divine appointment, and can not but regret that any professing to receive the divine law as the rule of their life, should, even in such a matter, justify departure, on the mere ground of their practice being "according to established customary modes of computation." If custom is to be adopted as the principle of duty in reference to this or to any other matter in which either the law of God or the approved example of his church is at variance with it, we therein give a preference to the authority of the world, to which we, as the church of Christ, are called to be lights. To the honor, therefore, of one who himself recognizes not the seventh day as the Sabbath, we call attention to the fact that Dwight reprobates those who, on the assumed ground that our Lord rose at this time, "begin the Sabbath at midnight, a time of human appointment, merely." †

The divine example in creation, has, in this respect, been observed more extensively than is often supposed. Among the Israelites, as we have seen, and now repeat in the words of Horne in his Introduction to the Study of the Bible, (vol. 3, p. 301,) "the Sabbath commenced at sunset, and closed at the same time on the following day." To other eastern nations also, formerly as well as now, the same observation applies. Dwight and Smith, in their Researches in Armenia, say, "It is well known that for all religious purposes, the Nestorians always consider the day to begin at sunset." Page 368. In India, Dr. Wilson informs us, in the Scottish Missionary Record, (Nov. 2, 1840.) "The Beni Israel reckon their day, from sunset to sunset. The Mohamedan day commencing from sunset, the first time of prayer, is the mugh rib, or sunset, or rather about four minutes later." Lone's Manness and Customs of the Modern Egyptians, vol. 1, p. 103.

Brown, in his Antiquities of the Jews, (vol. 2, p. 43,) says that "this manner of computing time, although it began with the Jews, was not confined to them, for the Phenicians, Athenians, Numidians, Germans, Gauls, Druids, Bohemians, and Poles, did the same." Rankin, in his History of France, vol. 1, p. 180, and the Encyclopædia Brittan. Art. "Night," says the Anglo-Saxons followed the same method, adding that it is observed by the Arabs and people of Iceland at the present day. It is stated that the Lutherans begin the Sunday and end it counting from evening to evening. In the Introduction to Bagster's Comprehensive Bible also, it is remarked that "this mode of reckoning the night before the day has obtained very generally in various nations, vestiges of which still remain in our own modes of reckoning by se'nnights, and fortnights, &c." Bishop Andrews, on the fourth commandment, says, "By the common canon law, all festivals are from evening to evening. Cap. 1 and 2, de Feriis. Navar, cap. 13, n. 5. Covar, in 4. Variar. resol. cap. 19, n. 9." And in an account of the various services in the early church, given in the Tracts for the Times, No. 75, p. 6, it is said, "the ecclesiastical day is considered to begin with the evening or vesper service; according to the Jewish reckoning, as alluded to in the text, 'In the evening, and the morning, and at noon-day, will I pray, and that instantly.' The ancient vespers are regarded by some to be the most solemn hour of the day."

But while, according to ecclesiastical law, festivals of merely human origin are regulated by a right principle of computation in the Episcopal Church, God's own day is not only profaned, but the day substituted for it is reckoned erroneously. The apostacy brought from Rome is retained by the Episcopacy; Presbytery extends the declension; and Dissenters from both, however zealous about many things, join in treating after an apostate fashion, what pertains to the day holy to the Lord, and honorable.

From the Christian Reflector.

HYMNOLOGY—PART II.

In resuming our gossip on the subject of the hymns which we so frequently quote, and still more frequently sing, we have felt considerably pleased with the progress made in feeling and in literature among the followers of Christ during the last century. The hymns which would tend to encourage fanaticism, such as those which seem to intimate that Christ, by whispers, dreams, &c., communicates with his people, so setting aside, or at least depreciating, the character of his word, by which alone he speaks to us, are now happily exploded. We have clearer light as to the value and importance of the Scriptures, and feel that they constitute a perfect guide, 'to which we do well that we take heed.'

Our literary progress is still greater. Good Dr. Watts laid aside many of his hymns, originally written for his book, as too elevated in diction for common use, and published them afterwards as lyric poems. Those very compositions are now considered, many of them, at least, as too low for the use of our churches; and their style, in our new books, has been elevated. Job Orton, too, when he published the hymns of Dr. Doddridge, after the death of their author, deemed it necessary to append explanations of various words used in them, in foot notes to the pages; but who now ever feels a difficulty in ascertaining the sense of any term he employs?

Speaking of Watts, we are disposed to inquire whether any one on this side of the Atlantic possesses a copy of Brown's hymns, the book usually used by the Congregationalists and Baptists of Britain before Watts published his book? We remember, many years ago, giving it a cursory examination, and observing that not a few of the hymns which are placed to the credit of the good Doctor are the compositions of Brown, with some alterations and corrections. Will some literary friend throw a little light on this subject?

A word more about Watts, and we will pass on. Being employed some years since in London, to edit a standard edition of Watts' Psalms and Hymns, we were fortunate enough to obtain a copy of the first edition of the psalms; which, among other curious matters, contained at the end of it, an advertisement of a tune book, 'adapted to Mr. Watts' Psalms and Hymns,' and published under his patronage, 'price sixpence;' showing that our fathers had the notion of publishing books at low prices, but how many tunes the said book contained, this deponent knoweth not.

As we are speaking of collections of hymns, it may be interesting to say, that the selection published by Dr. Rippon was, as a literary speculation, exceedingly successful. By that work, with his tune-book, (which Walker prepared for him, and for which he was paid by the Doctor,) and his Arrangement of Watts, he is said to have realized nearly one hundred thousand dollars. The copy-right was his own, and now belongs to his family. Our English brethren have within the last few years prepared and adopted a new selection, which they have placed in trust as denominational property; and its profits are annually given to the widows of ministers and missionaries, amounting to from six hundred to a thousand dollars per annum, which will probably largely increase.

It would be very pleasing if, in imagination, we could assemble together the authors with whom we hold fellowship in our songs of praise. There we should meet, as Episcopalians, the once profane John Newton, the eccentric Berridge, the amiable but melancholy Cowper, and, strangely enough, the Puseyite of his day, Bishop Kerr; there would be the somewhat hyper-calvinistic pedo-baptist band, Toplady, Hart and Dobell; and among those of opposite tendencies, would be the two Wesleys, Montgomery and Kelly; as the representatives of polite literature, we should see Addison and Blackmore, while a large but highly estimable miscellaneous class would be represented by President Davies, Rowland Hill, and the talented shoemaker, Oliver, the author of the well-known and beautiful hymns, 'Glory to God on high,' and 'The God of Abraham praise;' coming to our own denomination, we should be charmed with the elegant and courtly manners of Dr. Samuel Stennett, and be somewhat awed by the dignity of Dr. Fawcett; we should listen with grateful pleasure to the once wicked sailor, Medley, as he sings of 'loving-kindness, O how great!' the classical tutor, James Newton, would show how piety can be harmonized with learning; while his friend, Mrs. Steele, would prove its harmony with tenderness; the seraphic Pearce would teach us so highly to love the presence of the Saviour, as even to sing of > 'Sweet affliction,

> Thus to bring my Saviour near;'

and Fellowes, a member of his church, though but a journeyman mechanic, would invite 'Humble souls who seek salvation' to 'Follow Christ without delay;' and Swaine, baptized also by Pearce, though himself born in a workhouse, would lead us to feel and to sing sweetly of the Saviour's love and of the joys of heaven; Cennick would take you back to the days of Whitefield, with whom he was associated, and with whom he endured persecution; while Edmond Jones, though a young man, and so much given to spiritualizing as to publish a sermon on 'Samson's hair a representation of the church of Christ,' will yet, before he leaves the world at 28, give us the favorite hymn, 'Come humble sinner, in whose breast.'

But where are we going? Time would fail us to tell of Doddridge and Ryland, of Francis and Beddome, of Needham and Gibbons, and a host of anonymous writers, as well as a noble band of men who yet are ornaments to the church on earth; we have said enough to excite a little interest, and we should hope, to induce literary brethren to labor in the mine we have thus sprung.

We could almost be tempted to add another paragraph to this rambling essay, to remark on the position of Wesley, when, sitting on a rock, the tide rising around him, [illegible] causing him to doubt whether he should not be overwhelmed, he composed the lines:

> 'Lo! on a narrow neck of land,
> 'Twixt two unbounded seas I stand;
> Yet how insensible!
> A point of time, a moment's space,
> Removes me to yon heavenly place,
> Or shuts me up in hell!'

Nor with less interest could we narrate the pleasing fact that good Dr. Ryland wrote the beautiful little child's hymn, 'Lord, teach a little child to pray,' at the request of the excellent Andrew Fuller, for the use of the little lace-makers of Kettering; for whose sake it was printed, and thousands of copies distributed by the little shopkeepers of that town, who wrapped up their pennyworth of thread in these papers, when sold to the little mechanics.

There are a hundred questions, as to who wrote certain favorite hymns? For instance, that 'Jerusalem, my happy home;' 'Old Dickson, of Scotland,' say some; but no; though the feeling, spirit, metre, all correspond with his composition, yet no one line is the same in both; 'Montgomery,' says 'The Psalmist;' but Montgomery pronounces the hymn the best in our language, and declares his ignorance of the author. But, happily for my reader, the bell rings for dinner.

THE AFRICAN AND HIS DOG.

When the devoted missionary, Robert Moffat, was in England, he told an amusing story of a poor African who lived near one of the missionary settlements, and whose dog by some accident had got possession of a Testament in the native language, and torn it to pieces, devouring some of the leaves. This man came to the missionaries in great dismay, and laid his case before them. He said that the dog had been a very useful animal, and had helped him to protect his property, by guarding it from wild beasts, and also in hunting and destroying them; but that he feared he would be useless for the time to come. The missionaries asked him how was this? And why should not his dog be useful as formerly? As for the injury done, that was but an accident, and the Testament could be replaced by another copy.

"That is true," said the poor man, "but still I am afraid that the dog will be of no farther use to me. The words of the New Testament are full of love and gentleness, and, after the dog has eaten them, it is not likely that he will hunt or fight for me any more."

How much may we learn, dear children, from the conclusion of this simple and unlettered savage! He certainly made a great mistake in supposing that the character of his dog would be changed by his repast. But how strikingly may this anecdote remind us that the disciples of the Saviour "must not strive, but be gentle and penitent unto all men!" How clearly must wars and fightings be forbidden in the New Testament, when a poor simple hearted negro thought that even his dog would be made peaceable by devouring it!

PROVIDENCE.

A singular providence happened to Rev. R. Cecil, in going from London to Lewes, to serve one of his children there. Instead of leaving town early in the morning, the farrier who shod his horse detained him till noon, in consequence of which he did not arrive on East Grimstead Common till after dark. On the Common he met a man on horseback who appeared to be drunk and ready to fall from his horse at every step. Mr. Cecil called to him and warned him of his danger; which the man disregarding, with his usual kindness he rode up to him, in order to prevent him from falling, when the man immediately seized the reins of Mr. Cecil's horse, who on perceiving he was in bad hands, endeavored to break away, on which the man threatened to knock him down if he repeated the attempt. Three other men on horseback immediately rode up, placing Mr. Cecil in the midst of them. On perceiving his danger, it struck him—'Here is an occasion for faith;' and that gracious direction also occurred to him, 'Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee.' He secretly lifted up his heart to God, entreating that deliverance which He alone could effect. One of the men, who seemed to be captain of the gang, asked him who he was and whither he was going. The leader said, "Sir, I know you, and have heard you preach at Lewes; let the gentleman's horse go; we wish you good night." [Visitor.

The Rev. Alfred Hewlett, of Astley, Eng., by way of inducing his congregation to become total abstainers, has promised that he will marry tee-totallers, christen their children, and inter their dead, free of charge.

---

* For decrees of kings and councils, on this part of the subject, see a communication, signed S., in the Sabbath Recorder of Feb. 27, 1845.

† Dwight's Theology, Ser. 108.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 2, 1847.

EARLY EFFORTS TO CHRISTIANIZE CHINA.

It is quite common to hear the missionary enterprise spoken of as peculiar to modern times. And true it is, that for a long period previous to the last century, comparatively little was done by the church to disseminate the Gospel in heathen lands. To suppose, however, that this apathy has existed ever since the days of the apostles, would be unjust to the church, and inconsistent with the facts in the case. There is reason to believe that even China, which was for so long a period closed against the Gospel, once enjoyed its light, and yielded in no small degree to its influence. The Missionary Journal has collected and published the principal evidences upon which this opinion rests; with the sum of which, our readers will no doubt be interested.

There is a generally-received tradition in the Syrian church, that the apostle Thomas preached the Gospel, not only in India, but in China. Hence he is called in the epitome of the Syrian canons, "the apostle of the Hindoos and Chinese." In the ancient Chaldee ritual, also, it is said that "by the blessed Thomas the kingdom of heaven was extended and opened to the Chinese." It is farther stated, that when the Portuguese found one hundred and ten native churches in Malabar, "wholly ignorant of the great western apostacy and its peculiar errors," they learned from them that their ancestors had received their instruction from this apostle, and that he had also preached to the Chinese. When these traditions are considered in connection with the known zeal of the apostles and early Christians—a zeal which would scarcely allow so large and accessible a portion of the world to remain unvisited—there is very good reason for the belief that the gospel was preached to the Chinese either by the apostles or some of their immediate successors. Mosheim doubts whether the apostle Thomas went there. He acknowledges, however, that the gospel was carried there "at a little later period," and says, "It may be proved by the Syriac records, that at the beginning of the fourth century Christianity was flourishing in two of the provinces of China." It is not impossible—nay, it is quite probable—that the farther exploration of China may develop a great deal of information in regard to the influence of this early preaching of the kingdom of God in that country.

About the middle of the seventh century, the Nestorian Christians made a vigorous effort to promulgate the gospel in China. The Nestorian seems to have been emphatically the missionary church of that period. Their missionaries are said to have "dared and endured all manner of perils and privations without flinching. The sands, and snows, and seas of Asia, could not intimidate them. The wild Tartars, and the wily Persians; the effeminate Hindoos, and the ferocious Abyssinians; the orderly Chinese, and the rude Bactrians, were all alike to them. They followed roaming tribes, and domesticated themselves for life in settled nations. They went out from Edessa with no bank credit at Babylon or Alexandria, and upon no term of limited service; but to live and die with the churches they might raise. And as they consulted not with their own flesh and blood, so they would know no man after the flesh; but forced their way to the thrones of both kings and khans as ambassadors of the King of kings, and into camps and cottages as heralds of salvation." Such were the men connected with the renowned mission schools at Edessa and Nisilis, from which laborers were sent forth into distant quarters of the earth. They probably entered parts of China as early as the sixth century; but it was not until about the middle of the seventh century, that they reached the capital itself, and established permanent churches. The history of their efforts is found on the celebrated Singanfu monument, the authenticity of which seems now to be well established. The inscription upon it, in Syriac, remarks on the principles of religion, the fall of man, the birth of the Messiah in Judea, together with some of the ceremonies and laws of Christianity, and gives a sketch of its introduction and progress in China. It also sets forth the excellencies of Christianity, and gives the following conclusion of a royal decree in its favor: "It is beneficial in all affairs and profitable to the people, and should therefore pervade the empire. Let the officers therefore erect a temple for the religion of Ta Tsin, in the street of the capital called Ining, and appoint twenty-one ministers for its oversight." The effects of these efforts of the Nestorians are not fully known; but Gibbon explicitly testifies, that "the Christianity of China between the 7th and 13th centuries, is invincibly proved by the consent of Chinese, Syrian, Arabic, and Latin evidence."

The article from which the above facts are principally gathered closes as follows:—

"About 678, we are told, 'the illustrious religion spread itself in every direction, and temples rose in a hundred cities.' In the year 698, the Budhist priests commenced a persecution against the new religion, and in 712 a severe edict was issued against it, by the combined influence of the literati and the lower classes. But this did not extinguish their zeal, as we find that they not only survived it, but flourished with renewed vigor under succeeding Emperors; so that, at the time the monument above referred to was erected, that is, in 781, they seem to have been in a state of great outward prosperity.

"In 845, the Chinese annals record an edict commanding the priests that belonged to the sect that came from Ta Tsin, (amounting to no less than 3,000 persons,) to retire to private life.

"Mosheim mentions that the Arabian voyagers, who visited China in the 9th century, speak of the Christians whom they saw, and it appears that in a persecution in 877 many of them lost their lives.

"The papal missionaries, who began first to find their way thither at the end of the 13th century, add their testimony. The manner in which the Nestorians are spoken of proves them to have been not only numerous but somewhat flourishing and powerful.

"Finally, Marco Polo, who traversed several of the provinces of China in the 13th century, frequently mentions the Nestorian Christians whom he saw; and his mode of referring to them implies that they were both numerous and respected, as well as long established.

"Such are the few and brief hints we can gather in relation to the history of this church in the wilderness for about 600 years. Enough only is extant to show that very considerable success had been attained, for at the end of 200 years their ministers in China amounted to three thousand. With all the wealth and enlightenment, and increased facilities of the 19th century, and all the labors of all denominations, all Christendom has furnished, during the nearly 40 years existence of the modern China mission, but 75 missionaries, of whom 12 have died, and 20 have retired from the work, leaving only 43 actually engaged. (These statistics are from a statement dated January, 1845.) This comparison may exhibit the degree of success to which they had attained. How would our hearts bound to hear, as the Nestorians heard at the end of 40 years, that the glorious religion of Jesus was 'spreading itself in every direction,' and that 'temples rose up in a hundred cities!'

"All this time, it is to be observed, the country was under the dominion of the Tartar princes; the Nestorians, as well as all other foreigners, had full liberty to propagate their opinions when and how they chose, provided they did not interfere with government; and even in many cases, they were directly countenanced and assisted by the Imperial authority. But now a King of a new dynasty ascended the throne, and other difficulties arose."

LETTER FROM MRS. CARPENTER.

Shanghai, August 10, 1847.

My dear Mrs. S.—I intended to have written you a long letter, but this opportunity is too good to be lost. We are happily situated in our Shanghai home, and feel that we want only more spiritual gifts to make us all happy indeed. How visibly has the hand of our heavenly Father led us all the way from our beloved land! You will learn from our letters of various dates, that we have felt continually that although our hearts devised our way, the Lord directed our steps. What was our joy, think you, on reading the letters from brethren Utter and Brown, to know that their own thoughts had preceded us up the coast of China, and to find our present location specified as one which would give them pleasure. Surely it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps. Mr. Wardner's letter* will tell you of the storm at sea, which we encountered on our passage from Hong Kong. Literally buried in the waves for almost twenty-four hours, too sick to eat, and in no circumstances to be supplied with food, had we desired it, there was no cooking or eating on the ship the whole time. The perilous voyage of St. Paul was often in our minds. Like him, we might say, "A night and a day have I been in the deep." Like him, we felt that there was no hope but in that God "who rides upon the stormy sky, and manages the sea." We trusted in him, and he saved us. How often, during that long, sleepless night—that night of prayer and heart-searching—did I repeat that beautiful part of the 107th Psalm, beginning with the 23d verse to the 32d. We all felt a calmness, a composure, which we could never have anticipated, although I must say, for myself, that I felt continually, that we were in the hands of one able to save, and that we should not then die, but live to declare the goodness of God among the heathen.

We have received calls from nearly all the missionaries here, and little presents from many of them. Yesterday Mrs. Bishop Boone sent us a jar of corn-meal. This, with milk, which we have here, gave us the most home-like dinner imaginable. Hasty-pudding in China! And then such tomatoes! We have also butter, but it was a present from Mrs. Syle, and came from America; it is not made here. Mrs. Boone is now preparing a phrase-book for us in the Shanghai dialect, to use in the house, and contain those little phrases so very important to us now. We are treated with the utmost kindness, and can but feel, that in this also we are debtors to that same grace that has hitherto kept us. I have not been outside our mansion walls since I entered. The streets are so narrow that I can not enjoy exercise in them; besides, we have abundance of "play ground" within doors.

You would smile to see our furniture—all Chinese entirely. Square tables, (two set together makes enough,) and so heavy, without leaves, highly finished; chairs, straight backs and board seats, yet so heavy that I can scarcely lift them, and carved, and polished, and varnished; a bamboo lounge, and the queerest writing-table that ever walked, and bedsteads still more queer. And such a strange house! We occupy the upper rooms; from the hall we enter the dining-room, which is also our sitting-room and parlor; this opens into our bed-room, of nearly the same size; beyond which is Mr. Wardner's room; and beyond that two other rooms which they also occupy; also a bathing-room, &c I hope the time is not far distant when our mansion will be colonized by new missionaries from our own Board.

We are beginning to dip into the language a little, and feel a deep interest in doing our best in it. But the time seems far off when we can hope to do much towards enlightening those around us. Our teacher, Lin-Sing-Sang, is very gentlemanly in his appearance, and very patient and kind towards us his dull pupils. Our cook does not understand a word of English; so we have to pick up his Chinese names, and use them, or not be understood. Mr. Carpenter surprises me by his ability to converse with him, as he has only been here about two months. It seems impossible for me in two months to be able to say so much in Chinese; but I shall labor for it.

Can you imagine how overjoyed we were at the sight of letters from home? And the Recorder—what a deluge of cold water for our thirsty souls! Speaking of cold water reminds me of my sufferings on the ship, during the storm. Confined to my berth by sickness, having taken no available nourishment for two days, such burning thirst I never before experienced, yet could not be supplied with drink, as the plunging of the vessel would not allow keeping it by me, and the labor of all the servants was required to manage the ship; so I could not get it often. And when this was past, I did not recover from my sea-sickness, but was really miserable until the last day of the passage. O how thankful was I to taste food once more which I could relish. I suffered more, many times told, than during our whole passage out. But it is over now. We thank the Lord for all his goodness to us. Remember us in your prayers, and let us hear from you. Affectionately, L. M. C.

---

* The letter here referred to is directed to the Executive Board, and can not, therefore, properly be published until it has been laid before that body. [Ed. Sab. Rec.

MISSION OF THE EASTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Board of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association held its first semi-annual meeting at the house of Horatio S. Berry, in Pawcatuck, R. I., on fourth-day, Nov. 17.

The Board was called to order by the President, A. D. Titsworth, of Metouchin, N. J. Prayer was offered by A. B. Burdick, of Rockville.

Visiting brethren were invited to sit with the Board and participate in its deliberations.

The Corresponding Secretary presented the report of C. M. Lewis, missionary at Newport, R. I., and its vicinity. The following are extracts from his report. After noticing Eld. Clawson's visit, he says:—

"I devoted myself to visiting our people here. I believe I have now succeeded in calling on all of them on this island, and Jamestown also; and I must say that I have felt much pleased with these interviews. They seem resolved to maintain their attachment and devotion to the cause of Christ, and contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. They seem much encouraged in view of what the Association has done for them in making arrangements whereby they enjoy the stated means of grace in connection with their brethren. I am sorry to find that family prayer is not attended to by them all, but have endeavored to urge it upon their consideration. I have succeeded in permanently establishing a weekly conference-meeting on sixth-day evening. There has been an evident increase in numbers and interest in our Sabbath meetings. Oct. 23d was our communion season. We had a very precious time, and it seemed peculiarly so to our brethren who had not enjoyed one for a long time. I believe all who participated felt revived and encouraged to pursue the Christian course."

Speaking of Jamestown, the report says:—

"I found the state of religious enjoyment very good among the few of our people on that island. In every meeting there was marked attention to the preached word, and evident tokens of the divine presence and favor. I give it as my opinion, that if a Seventh-day Baptist minister could take time, visit, preach, distribute Sabbath publications, and attend a series of meetings among them, good might be done in the cause of presenting the whole truth to men. Oct. 7th, a committee from a church of the Christ-ian denomination called on me for the purpose of engaging me to preach for them three months or more. I agreed to do so, when it should not interfere with the special object of my mission. I have conversed with some of them on the subject of the Sabbath, and have been met in a friendly way. I have preached once by request in the Asylum for the Poor."

The report farther states, that Bro. Lewis has preached a number of times in adjoining places.

The Board passed a resolution, that the missionaries in their employ be requested to make their reports quarterly to the Corresponding Secretary.

A communication from Eld. Henry Clark was read, showing that he had preached during the summer past one half of his time at Green Hill, and the other half at Richmond, R. I. Bro. Clark was appointed as a missionary of the Board to labor during the remainder of the associational year at Green Hill and vicinity. The thanks of the Committee were tendered to Bro. Clark for the voluntary services reported in his communication.

The following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary be directed to address the churches of this Association, requesting them to place more funds at the disposal of the Committee in order to the extension of missionary labor.

S. S. Griswold, Cor. Sec.

Hopkinton, R. I., Nov. 25, 1847.

◆

Anti-State Church.—The Anti-State-Church Party in England has grown to be a very powerful body, and is greatly encouraged with the prospect of a speedy dissolution of the Church Establishment. At a recent meeting of the Society in London, when Dr. Price presided, among other distinguished speakers, Mr. Miall, Editor of the Nonconformist, is reported in the London journals as having said, he verily believed that two more Parliaments, lasting their natural term, would be sufficient for carrying the objects of the Association. The subject had taken a deep and lasting hold on popular sympathies—common sense estimated it rightly—and the time would soon come when the people of that country would bear the thraldom of a State Church no longer. The establishment was doomed—nothing could save it. The reason, the common sense, the feeling of justice, the religion of the nineteenth century—all declared in the face of heaven that it was a monstrous wrong, and should not be. One potent consideration, which cannot fail to make its way in a country like England, was the great economical benefits of a divorce of Church and State. If the eleven millions sterling now annually devoted to keeping up an ecclesiastical standing army were to be applied to civil purposes, it would create a state of finances that would justify a vast decrease of oppressive taxation. Right or wrong, this is an argument which will be apt to be felt.

◆

The Jews.—The Journal of Commerce says that no feature in the Christian world is more extraordinary than the disposition which is beginning to appear, after eighteen centuries of oppression and hatred, to extend to the Jews the privileges of free citizens. This has not only been done in our own country, in Great Britain and France, but in Norway orders have been issued from the throne to place them on the same footing of equality with their kindred in France.

Letters from Tunis also announce that M. Albert Cohen, who lately visited Algeria for the purpose of devising means of improving the condition of the Israelites, had arrived in Tunis, and had an interview with the Bey. The facility with which M. Cohen speaks Arabic enabled him to converse a long time with the Bey relative to his mission. The Bey replied: "With the assistance of God, I promise you to do everything in my power for the Israelites of my kingdom. It is my sincere wish that they may be placed on the same footing as their co-religionists of France. In the meantime I give you full power to act as you think proper." The Israelites form about one twentieth part of the population of Tunis, and their condition is wretched in the extreme.

◆

Slavery in the Danish West India Colonies.—The St. Lucia Palladium says that at St. Thomas a royal decree has been promulgated proclaiming the abolition of slavery in the Danish Colonies. All slaves under 16 years of age are by this decree declared absolutely free from the 18th ult., and those above that age to be held in the condition of apprentices for four years from that date. We have not heard of the effect which this great measure has had upon the peace and industry of the islands where it has commenced operation; but there is reason to assume anything but evil results from it. The Colonists of St. Thomas and St. Croix must have been fully prepared for this new order of things at the hands of the Government which bears the reputation of having been the foremost in suppressing the horrors of the slave-trade, if not of slavery in general. The ground-work of the present measure of emancipation was laid in 1834, by a royal rescript for "taking precautions to secure the unfree negroes in the Danish West India Islands from improper treatment, and to render more easy the acquisition of their freedom."

◆

Mr. Clay and the War.—The speech of Henry Clay before a public meeting in Lexington, Ky., has been a fruitful topic of discussion for a week or two past. Presuming that our readers will nearly all have access to it through some other medium, we have thought best not to make extracts from it, but simply to say, that it was in support of a series of resolutions, afterwards unanimously passed by the meeting, which set forth, that it is the duty of Congress to declare distinctly for what purpose and object the war should be prosecuted—that if the President does not endeavor by all the means in his power to execute this declared will, that it will then be the right and duty of Congress themselves to arrest the farther progress of the war—that the war should not be prosecuted for the annexation of Mexico to the United States, but only for a just and proper adjustment of the limits of Texas—that slavery should not be introduced into any foreign territory acquired by the United States—and that the people should everywhere assemble to express their views on this subject.

◆

Taking the Veil.—The Cincinnati Catholic Telegraph of the 19th inst., says that three young ladies, two of them natives of that city, received the white veil in the Convent of Notre Dame. Also, that a very accomplished lady, one of those who have been educated in the East and sent out to the West under the patronage of Gov. Slade, having recently joined the Catholic faith, will shortly commence her noviciate in the same institution.

Mr. Abbott.—The November number of the Macedonian contains, among many other interesting articles, a letter from Rev. Mr. Abbott, dated "Steamer Hindostan, Mediterranean Sea, Sept. 30, 1847." Mr. A., after describing Gibraltar, and relating some minor incidents connected with his voyage from England, adds: "I came on board the Hindostan at Southampton, an invalid, but the mild air of the Mediterranean has had a most salutary influence on my health. Indeed, I am quite restored; thanks be to God for his unspeakable goodness. Among the crowd of passengers I have found a few warm-hearted Christians; enough to form a very agreeable religious circle, and to render the voyage much more pleasant. But I can reconcile myself to almost any thing, seeing I am on my way to the Karen jungles, although borne away, far away, from those I love."

◆

Wesleyan Missions.—At a meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society recently held in Edinburgh, Scotland, it was stated in the report, that the Society now occupies in various heathen and Romish countries, 294 principal stations, besides a much larger number of subordinate ones; that its mission chapels and preaching places are 2,597; that it employs 417 ordained missionaries, exclusive of 771 other paid agents, such as catechists, &c., and 7,074 unpaid agents; that its church members are 106,445; that the scholars in its day and Sunday schools are 72,000; and that it has eight printing establishments in vigorous and incessant operation. The contributions received last year from all sources, for the support of this extensive Protestant missionary institution, amounted to the large sum of $578,810.

◆

Revivals.—The New York Recorder informs us, says the Christian Chronicle, of a revival in Blenheim, Canada West. Forty-four converts had been baptized Nov. 1. The good work was then still progressing with unabated interest, and spreading into different neighborhoods. The Banner and Pioneer reports an interesting meeting in Albano, Ky., during which about thirty professed faith in Christ. A church was constituted and fifteen converts were baptized. At Marhulaville, we learn from the S. W. Baptist Chronicle, deep and increasing interest prevails. On the fourth Sunday in October, seventy-one were baptized. The meetings had been discontinued, but were about to be resumed. The Index informs us of a revival in Eufaula, Ala. Fifteen had been baptized.

THE WAY TO DO IT.

The following account of the mode in which a Roman Catholic missionary succeeded in getting up a religious excitement among the heathen, is given in the report of the doings of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith:—

"We armed ourselves with courage and patience; set in motion all our resources, in order to instruct and soften souls; we established the use of the meditations of the Way of the Cross, as I do every where; we distributed many books on religion; we opened public competitions, at which those who knew best their catechism obtained premiums, such as beads, crosses, and medals. The fire kindled imperceptibly; the hearts became inflamed; and presently extraordinary emulation and enthusiasm were evinced for study, prayer, and preparation for the sacraments.

"You will inquire, perhaps, how these great competitions are carried on. This is our method: I announce, that upon such a Sunday, or such a feast, there will be a great competition in such a village; this intelligence is rapidly spread to a great distance. Each individual studies with ardor from the close of day until very late at night. At the time fixed upon, the Christians begin to pour in large bands from all directions, on the previous evening. When repairing to the locality designated, they supply themselves with a small bag of rice for the following day's provision. On the day of competition, after mass and breakfast, each parish is arranged in groups, the men being stationed on one side and the women on the other side, round a placard which indicates the respective stations of the men and boys, and the women and girls of each village. Another placard, in large and beautiful Chinese characters, is raised upon an eminence, so as to attract the eye; it proclaims the beauty of religion, the necessity of studying it, the advantages resulting therefrom, with the enumeration of the different premiums. Lastly, there are seats arranged in the middle of the assembly for the catechetical examiners, and a platform covered with matting, upon which are to be seated those who enter the lists.

"When all the preparations are made, some young men go for the table upon which the premiums are placed, and it is brought with solemnity and playing of music to the place of competition. The examinations then commence. Each Christian congregation comes forward in its turn: first the men, then the youths, women, girls, and children, come up in files and sit down upon the matting prepared for them. They must there answer without the slightest mistake to three or four questions of the catechism, which are taken at random, and they must solve three objections, or give three explanations upon some difficult points. Now, these objections are determined on beforehand, and are not the same for each division. If the group interrogated answer all correctly, they are congratulated by striking the cymbal and drum; if they mistake, a recorder marks the error. At the close of the day, when all have undergone their examination, and the good and bad marks have been footed up, the premiums are distributed according to the merit of the candidates. Wherever I pass I institute similar competitions, which produce an admirable effect."

◆

A Baptist church was recently dedicated at Galveston, Texas. The dedication service was performed by Presbyterian, Episcopal, Methodist, and Baptist clergymen.

General Intelligence.

MEXICAN NEWS.

Letters from the city of Mexico state that Atlisco, in Mexico, was entirely destroyed by an earthquake on the 23d of October; not a house was left standing. A large portion of the inhabitants were buried in the ruins. Serious damage was also done to the surrounding country and the villages and monasteries, many of which were overthrown.

Canales died at Cerralvo on the 4th of Nov.

A letter from Queretaro, dated the 25th of Nov., says that seventy-one Deputies were then in the city, and several others on the way, and it was believed that very soon there would be sufficient to open the session. The first business is the election of a President. The candidates are Pena, Almonte, and Herrera.

The Arco Iris states that the number of Mexican troops now in the field, at different stations, is thirty-one thousand.

Gen. Taylor had not arrived at Matamoros, but would leave Monterey on the 8th. The health of Matamoros is improving. It was rumored there that the States of San Luis, Zacatecas, Durango, and one other, had declared in favor of Paredes' monarchial scheme, and proffered him 18,000 troops.

SHIPWRECK AND CANNIBALISM.

The Boston Chronotype says that accounts of the wreck of the schr. Caroline, (of Saco, Me.) bound from Wilmington, N. C., for Bath, with a cargo of lumber, reached this city on Wednesday night last. The Captain, Wm. Smith, arrived here yesterday, in the brig Sun, from Philadelphia, and reports that the schr. Caroline left Tybee Light, mouth of the Savannah River, Oct. 24. On the 26th, took a gale from E.N.E. and laid to all that day. At 7 P. M. the vessel sprung a leak, and in ten minutes she was on her beam ends, full of water. On the 29th Henry Hughes, one of the seamen, was swept overboard. The gale continued with unabated violence for eight days. On 31st spoke barque Isaac Mead, bound from Savannah to New York. The barque lay by the wreck from 7 o'clock in the morning till 4 o'clock in the afternoon, but a tremendous sea prevented them from rendering any assistance. The provisions and water had all been swept overboard, and on the 10th inst., having been fifteen days without food, and eight days without water, the famishing crew driven to the verge of madness, determined to adopt, as a last resort, the dread alternative of drawing lots "to see who should die to feed the remainder." The lot fell on an Irishman named Charles Brown, a brawny, athletic man, weighing about 180 pounds. This unfortunate man was armed with a sheaf knife, which he swore he would plunge into the breast of the first man who approached Deaf to all appeals to his reason, he insisted that the youngest on board, a Welsh boy named Hughie Rose should suffer.

The Captain now left the men, declaring that he would have nothing more to do with the affair. As he entered his cabin, however, he saw the handle of an adze, partially under water, which he called the Welsh boy to pick up. Seizing the adze, the Captain followed the boy on deck, when the Irishman approached the boy, apparently for the purpose of taking his life. The Captain at once struck him a violent blow over the head with the adze, and he fell dead upon the deck. The Captain now bled and dressed him, and the survivors with the blood quenched their thirst. The body was cut up into strips and hung up to dry. For three days the wretched men subsisted on the blood of the slaughtered sailor, when it spoiled, and they were again driven to the last extremity. Fortunately on the 13st the brig Tampico, bound from New Haven to the West Indies, hove in sight, and the three survivors were taken on board. The Captain and mate, Horace Smith, were afterwards transferred to the brig schooner Splendid, bound for Philadelphia. The boy, Hughie Rose, remained on board the Tampico. There is no doubt but the blood of Brown saved their lives, thougn we shudder at the thought that stern necessity compelled them to take the life of a fellow creature even to save their own.

A Runaway Slave may not be employed in Pennsylvania except under Penalty.—In the U. S. Circut Court, at Pittsburgh, a penalty of $500 has been awarded against Dr. Mitchell, of Indiana County, for enticing a slave from his master. The case was tried under the act of Congress of 1793, and for the penalty imposed by that act. The decision of this case goes somewhat farther than the famous Van Zandt case of Ohio. In the case decided at Pittsburgh there was no proof of any attempt on the part of Dr. M. to entice the slave away from his master. Nor was there any proved interference to prevent their return to their owners. He gave them employment, however, knowing them to be slaves, and according to the charge of the Judge, and the inference of the jury from the charge, there was room for the verdict rendered. In Judge McLean's charge, the act of employment simply was not deemed an offence under the act of Congress. The case occupied the Court, the Pittsburgh Gazette says, four days. Judge Grier's charge was pointedly against the defendant.

Improved Carriage Hub.—The Scientific American says that Mr. A. E. Lyman, carriage maker, Williamsburg, Mass., has invented a new and most useful improvement in the manner of combining the axle and hub of a carriage wheel. The invention consists in having a groove cut on the axle just inside of the hub, and having a coupling box bolted on the inside of the hub also, through which the axle slips into the hub and is fastened to it by a spring in the coupling box which catches the rim of the groove of the axle and holds it fast while it works in the grove smoothly as the wheel spins round. The outside of the hub is boxed over and no dirt enters. To gear and ungear the wheel on the axle for greasing or any thing else, is but the work of a moment, by turning the spring. Application has been made for a patent.

Threaded Bank Notes.—Messrs. Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass., manufacturers of bank note paper, have invented a very simple and efficient method of preserving the denomination of a bill from alteration. Threads of silk or cotton are arranged in parallel lines, lengthwise with the note, and embodied in the substance of the paper during its manufacture. A one dollar bill has one thread, and one added for each denomination up to five dollars; then a ten dollar bill has six threads; another is added for twenty, fifty, one hundred, five hundred, and one thousand; the last having eleven threads. It must be very difficult, if not impossible, to insert another thread after the note is finished, and as the threads mark its value as distinctly as the figures, the chances of a successful alteration are at least very greatly diminished.

Terrible Steamboat Disaster.—A telegraphic dispatch to the New York Tribune, dated Pittsburg, Nov. 26, gives the following account of a terrible steamboat disaster, by which it is believed that more than one hundred and fifty lives were lost:—

On Sunday morning last, about 4 o'clock, the propeller Phœnix, bound up to the lakes, when within 17 miles of the bayou, was discovered to be on fire under the deck. It was found impossible to extinguish the flames. She had more than two hundred passengers on board, thirty of whom took to small boats and were picked up by the steamer Delaware, which soon hove in sight, but not in time to save those on board. The remainder were burned or drowned. Capt. Street was sick in his state-room and was saved. One hundred and fifty passengers were emigrating Hollanders. Every attention was extended to the sufferers by the captain and crew of the Delaware. The Phœnix was owned by Pease & Allen, Cleveland, and insured for $15,000.

SUMMARY.

The Indianopolis Sentinel of the 17th ult. says: "We learned late last evening that a shocking accident happened to Gov. Whitcomb, on the down train of railroad cars yesterday, at Edinburg. The Governor had stepped off the cars for a few moments, and was about stepping on again while the cars were in motion. His foot slipped, and he fell between the cars and the platform of the dépôt, the cars whirling him around and crushing his thighs as they went. The Governor was insensible for some time after he was extricated, but finally recovered consciousness. The exact character and extent of the injury we are unable to state; but from what we are told, it will be some time, if ever, before he can recover."

Rev. Charles Van Loon, Pastor of a Presbyterian Church, in Poughkeepsie, says the N. Y. Tribune, died at that place on Sunday evening last, aged 28 years. He was one of the noblest men we ever knew—eloquent, able, pious, and devoted heart and soul to the good of his fellowmen. The Temperance Cause had no more effective advocate, and he had lately returned from a lecturing tour in Ohio and the broad West, where he had done a great work for humanity. As a friend of the down-trodden African race, he had been eminent and untiring; and in every good work (so far as it seemed such to him) he labored earnestly and ungrudgingly. We fear his life has been prematurely ended by his incessant labors.

A party of Naval Officers, under the command of Lieut. W. F. Lynch, will shortly sail from this port, in the U. S. ship Supply, to the Mediterranean, for the purpose of making an exploration of the Dead Sea. One great object of the investigation will be to ascertain whether this sea and its shores are of volcanic or non-volcanic origin. The elucidation of this subject is a desideratum to science. Costigan, the only man who has undertaken to circumnavigate this sea, perished in the attempt. British officers have tried, but also failed.

Among the deserters tried and sentenced to be hung in Mexico, was a man named Edward McHenry, of the 4th artillery. Gen. Scott, as commander-in-chief, had the power to approve or disapprove the sentence of the Court. In passing on that of McHenry, the General made these remarks: "A like remission [from hanging] is made in the case of Edward McHenry, company G., out of consideration for a son, a private in the same company, who has remained faithful to his colors."

Thanksgiving was observed, Nov. 25, in the following States: Maine, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Louisiana, Tennessee, Missouri, Michigan, Ohio, Washington City, Georgetown, D. C. Arkansas and Vermont chose Dec. 2.

The steamer Tempest, bound down, and the Talisman, from Clinton for St. Louis, came in collision on Thursday morning, 10 miles below Cape Garardean, Upper Mississippi. The Talisman sunk immediately in deep water. The total loss is estimated at forty lives—some think more. The ladies and passengers lost every thing, escaping only in their night clothes, and in that condition were taken to Garardean by the steamer Tempest.

Some time ago, says the Observer, we published in our paper several letters relating to Miss Aldersey's boarding-school for girls in Ningpo, China. A benevolent gentleman in Pennsylvania proposes to contribute one hundred dollars toward supporting that school, which has need of such aid, and he trusts that by calling public attention to it in this way, others may be induced to give of their abundance to the same object.

George Brown, a negro aged nineteen, shot a colored girl named Mary Crane, in Bangor, on Saturday evening, and afterward fired a pistol ball into his own mouth, thinking to commit suicide. The girl, who is only seventeen, and has a child two years old, had refused to marry Brown, and hence the tragedy. It is thought, however, that both will recover.

Gerrit Smith—so says the Madison County Whig—has addressed a letter to the Supervisors and Justices of the several towns of that County, requesting them to select seven unmarried, poor, landless women, (a part or all of them may be widows) to whom he proposes to give fifty dollars for the purpose of aiding them to purchase a home for themselves.

A German named Henry Sach, who arrived at New York a few days ago, accidentally met his brother, from whom he had been some time separated, on Friday night, in a house in Washington street, which caused him such excessive joy and excitement, that he burst a blood vessel in the chest and died in a few minutes.

We understand, says the Washington Union, from the best authority, that the treasury notes of the United States are 8 per cent. advance in the city of Mexico, and adds that this state of things is most fortunately calculated to benefit our schemes of finance. It will contribute to enable us to pay our expenses in that country upon more advantageous terms.

The Cumberland (Md.) Civilian says that the Mount Savage Iron Works, in Alleghany county, Md., were sold at auction for $225,000. The purchasers were Messrs. Coming & Winslow, of Albany, and J. M. Forbes, Esq., of Boston. The works will be resumed by the new company under the name of the "Sulworth Iron Company."

The new Constitutional Convention of Wisconsin is to be elected on the fifth Monday (29th) of November, and to assemble at Madison on the third Wednesday (15th) of December. A new census of the Territory is to be commenced on the 1st of December, completed by the 16th, and the returns made up by the 20th.

The New Bedford Mercury publishes an extract of a letter from S. H. Williams, Esq., mercahnt at Honolulu, stating that the port of Honolulu has become a free port to whalers of all nations, who are permitted to land $200 worth of goods without duty.

M. Julius Mohl, a learned German, has been appointed Professor of the Persian language in the College of France. The Professorship of the Turkish language is not yet filled, but Mr. Stane, an Englishman, is spoken of for that office.

The Pittsburg Gazette says that there are nine extensive distilleries of whiskey in Clermont county, Ohio, consuming daily about 2750 bushels of corn, and distilling about 10,000 gallons per day. Not less than 80,000 hogs are fattened at these distilleries every year.

It is said the nightly receipts of the new Broadway Theatre, New York, have not been less, any night since its opening, than $900, and have occasionally reached $1,700, while its expenses have not exceeded $350 a night.

James Kinney, a worthy young Irishman of 27, shot himself while hunting near Mendham, Morris County, N. J., one day last week. Holding his gun in one hand while attempting to start a rabbit with the other, it was accidentally discharged into his left breast, causing death almost instantly.

Major Iturbide, who arrived in New Orleans in the James L. Day, is a son of the ex-Emperor of Mexico; he was taken prisoner at Huamantla, and has come to this country with the expectation of taking up his quarters for a time in Philadelphia.

The Utica Herald of Nov. 27th says that the recent rains have swelled the usually modest Mohawk to a turbulent and mighty stream. The flats opposite this city are covered to a considerable extent with water, and we fear considerable damage has been done to the bridges and fences above. At Oriskany, we learn that a portion of the railroad track was flooded.

James Cannings Fuller, widely known as a prominent Abolitionist, and actively engaged in other Reform movements, died suddenly at his residence, Skaneateles, Onondaga Co., on Thursday morning last, after a painful illness of but a few hours' duration. He was a man of wealth, of intelligence, energy and benevolence; and his labors in behalf of temperence and other reforms will cause him to be long remembered and lamented.

The Wayne Sentinel says that one of the millstones in the steam flouring mill of J. B. Chipman of Palmyra, exploded on Sunday morning last, when the mill was in full operation. The fragments were scattered in every direction, causing several hundred dollars damage. Fortunately no person was in the room at the time.

The New Orleans Delta of the 18th publishes a list of the deaths of men attached to the Army in general Hospital in Perote Castle, from June 1, 1847, to the 30th of October. It is a frightful catalogue of mortality, and occupies nearly two columns of small type.

Monday, Nov. 15, the mail-stage came into Bangor, Maine, from Dexter, on runners, and found good sleighing to within three miles of B. There was said to be eight inches of snow 25 miles back of Bangor. A foot of snow fell at Skowhegan, Maine, on Monday.

The New Orleans La Patria says that Rubini has been engaged to sing 20 nights in Havana, at $1,000 a night, and that he will make his first appearance in Hernani, about the middle of November.

Clark's grist-mill, in Middletown, Conn., was burned down on Wednesday morning. The fire was occasioned by friction in the machinery. Loss estimated at $3,000, on which there was an insurance in New York of $1,000.

A colony of about 1,000 Hollanders have purchased two entire townships in Iowa, bringing with them their own mechanics, artizans, and religious teachers.

A process has been patented by which artificial stone of every quality may be produced, from granite to statuary marble.

On the 22d ult., the custom house officers in Newry made a seizure of 22 barrels of American flour, in which was found concealed a large quantity of cavandish tobacco.

A recent census, taken for school purposes by the city authorities of Cleveland, fixes the population at 12,769, the same showing an increase of 2,634 during the past year and a half. The number of children between the ages of 4 and 21 is 3,956.

In the construction of Girard College more than twelve millions of ordinary bricks have been used. The weight of this mass, allowing four hundred bricks to the ton, would be thirty thousand tons.

A gentleman from Missouri having lost his wallet, as he supposed, in the sewer corner of Broadway and Liberty-st., and having searched for it in vain, returned to the Astor House, when a chambermaid attached to the house by the name of Ann Clark, presented it to him, having found it behind his bed. It contained about $1,300. He immediately presented her with $50.

The fabrication of chemical allumettes occupies in the environs of Paris more than a thousand workmen. A single house employs three hundred. One house sends annually to London friction matches to the amount of 120,000 francs.

The total liabilities of all the houses that have recently failed in England are said to be one hundred and seventeen millions and a half of dollars. Of this amount at least one hundred and five millions of dollars belong to the United Kingdom.

The English Postmaster General has addressed a circular to the Post Office authorities of all the countries of Europe, urging them to co-operate with England in introducing a system of uniform penny postage in Europe.

A letter from Copenhagen states that the valuable library of Icelandic literatnre in that city was entirely reduced to ashes on the 28th ult. This is a very severe loss to literature, as it contained upwards of 2,000 unedited manuscripts, and a unique collection of ancient works printed in Iceland.

In addition to the thousands killed in battle, we must add those dying in the hospitals, if we would learn how great the sacrifice of life in Mexico has been. Our papers give a list of those who died at the hospital at Perote Castle from June 1st to Oct. 29th. They mention over 500, of whom more than 350 died from diarrhœa.

The Rochester Democrat says that W. W. Wadsworth, of Geneseo, lately received a severe cut in the head by being thrown out of his carriage. The wound, it is very gratifying to learn, was not considered dangerous, though several small pieces of the skull came off.

Twelve hundred steamers are employed on the Mississippi and its branches. The value of the commerce of these rivers is said to be about double that of the foreign commerce of the United States.

The Baltimore papers mention the arrival in that city of Col. J. Davis, who comes to Washington as U. S. Senator, via Buena Vista; of Hon. H. S. Foote, his colleague, from Mississippi; Com. Stockton, late Governor of California, and Col. Chas. A. May.

A new factory is going up at Thompsonville, Ct., over 300 feet in length and 60 feet broad. It will contain, when it is finished, 1,500,000 bricks.

The deficit of the first year after the cheap postage act was $800,000; the deficit of the last year was $640,000; while the deficit in this year is only $40,000.

It is said that a new paper, devoted to the exclusive support of the war, has been commenced down east, called the "Paixhan Gun and World Astonisher."

A large sum of money ($1,125) was found buried in the Public Garden, Boston. It was enclosed in a glass jar.

The Canada papers say that a gold mine has been discovered in Canada, at a distance of 40 miles from Quebec.

The Legislature of this State, by an act passed on the 13th ult., have abolished the office of county superintendant of common schools.

Since 1840, the personal property of Boston has increased from 34 to 64 millions of dollars; while that of New York has decreased from 65 to 59 millions.

The imperial Academy of Sciences of St. Petersburg, has offered a prize of 2000 roubles for the "best History of the Cholera."

A steam engine of twenty horse power is now being built at the Navy Yard in Washington, which is to be sent to California.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, NOV. 29.

ASHES—Pots $5 87. Pearls 7 87.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 25; Western 6 12. Corn Meal, 3 25 for State, 3 37 for Pennsylvania, and 3 50 for Jersey. Rye Flour 4 87. Buckwheat 2 00 for 100 lbs.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 36; Ohio 1 30. Corn 70 a 75c. Barley 88c. Oats 47c. White Beans 1 25. Black-eyed Peas 1 25 per bush.

PROVISIONS—The best butter is in good demand at previous prices, but inferior is dull. Cheese comes in freely, and is depressed.

MARRIED,

On the 25th of November, by Eld. S. S. Griswold, Mr. Nathan F. Chipman, of Hopkinton, R. I., to Miss Harriett A. Lewis, of North Stonington, Conn.

At New Market, N. J., Nov. 9, by Eld. W. B. Gillett, Benjamin Scudder to Elizabeth Hagerman, both of New Market, N. J.

DIED,

In Piscataway, N. J., Nov. 14, Elizabeth Dunham, aged 65 years. She has been for many years a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church. W. B. G.

In Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., Nov. 19, 1847, Mrs. Nancy Thurston, consort of J. L. Thurston, aged 70 years.

LETTERS.

S. S. Griswold, Rowse Babcock, John Whitford, F. Wilcox, G. W. Hinkley, Maxson Green, W. C. Kenyon, Philip Gore, R. W. Utter.

RECEIPTS.

Adin Rogers 1st, Oxford,	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Paul Clarke, "	2 00	"	4	" 31
H. A. Hull, Edmeston,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Perry Stillman, Berlin,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Barton Hall, Millville,	2 00	"	4	" 26
Silas Clarke, New York,	50	"	4	" 36
W. A. Babcock, Leonardsville,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Jos. Flint, Scio,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Davis Stillman, Phillipsville,	2 00	"	4	" 52
N. & S. Luce, Coudesport, Pa.	1 00	"	3	" 26
S. B. Bowen, Columbus, Iowa,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Wm. Cook, Iowa City,	2 00	"	5	" 20

☞ Money is particularly needed at this office about these days. Will our friends who have not yet made their remittances for the current volume, bear the fact in mind, and act accordingly? If there is an agent in your neighborhood, just hand the money to him at once without waiting to be called upon. But if there is no agent near you, send the money directly to us by mail, and it may come at our risk. Prompt attention to this request would save us a great deal of trouble. May we not expect it?

Gems for the Mind and the Heart.

THE YOUTH'S CABINET,

EDITED BY

REV. FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH,

Is a Repository, as its name imports, presenting the richest literary attractions for the young. The contents are mostly original, and unwearied pains are bestowed upon the editorial department. It aspires to be, both in the charactor of its articles and in its mechanical execution, a model of taste and excellence; and it is universally conceded that it stands at the head of all works of its class. The third volume commences in January, 1848; and the increasing popularity of the magazine warrants the publisher in promising that this volume shall be

MORE VALUABLE IN EVERY RESPECT

than either of the preceding ones. Several new contributors are engaged, among whom are T. S. Arthur and Prof. Alden, whose stories for the young are excelled by no writer in the country.

YEARLY SUBSCRIPTION, $1 ONLY.

Great inducements are offered to those who take the work in clubs, and

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS

for the new volume. The initial or January number is now ready It contains

A SPLENDID PORTRAIT ON STEEL,

and a great variety of Engravings on Wood, prepared expressly for the Cabinet. These engravings alone cost more than 200 DOLLARS.

A large edition of the initial number is published, to supply the demand of non-subscribers, as it is prepared with especial reference to the holidays, and is intended to be

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER.

This Number is the most splendid thing of its kind ever issued in this country.

☞ Price of a single copy of the holiday number, 12½ cents; 10 copies $1.

The money can be enclosed in a letter to the publisher, post-age paid. A quarter of a dollar can be sent in an envelope, for single postage.

The yearly volume, for 1848, besides containing nearly 400 large octavo pages of the choicest reading, with appropriate music, will be richer in pictorial embellishments than any of its contemporaries, whether they appear in an original American costume, or in one borrowed from the other side of the Atlantic.

The voice of the public press, so universally and so warmly expressed, is certainly indicative that this magazine has won its way to a high place in popular favor. The publisher selects two or three of these notices, as a specimen of more than a hundred:

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"This magazine is a model which we could wish were followed by all works of its class. It is serious, without dullness or melancholy; cheerful, but not frivolous; religious, but neither sectarian nor dogmatical; while it unites very happily the winning grace of familiarity with the dignit of self-respect."—N. Y. Daily Tribune.

"It abounds in precious gems, and seldom appears without a good supply of solid and valuable ores."—New Orleans Obs.

"We do not know of a more elegant and beneficial work for the young."—Noah's Weekly Mess.

"It is beautifully illustrated, and evinces great ability and interest. The editor has a fine tact for such a work."—N. Y. Evang.

"If any of our juvenile friends wish for a magazine which is entertaining, and richly worth its cost, here it is. We do not know a better work for their purpose."—Mother's Journal, N. Y.

"The editor is one of our best writers for the young."—N. Y. Com. Adv.

"The articles are original, and the tone fresh and lively."—N. Y. Christ. Enquirer.

"We can but express again our high opinion of this monthly."—N. Y. Christ. Adv. & Jour.

"It is universally admitted that the Cabinet is one of the most entertaining, instructive, and salutary periodicals for children."—N. Y. Christ. Intell.

"Its editor goes to work the right way to make children happy, by imparting useful knowledge, and interesting them in whatever is good and beautiful."—Charter Oak, Hartford, Conn.

TERMS---TO SUBSCRIBERS IN CLUBS.

4 copies,	one year,	in advance,	$3 00
7 copies,	"	"	5 00
10 copies,	"	"	7 00
15 copies,	"	"	10 00

☞ The money can be safely sent by mail. The publisher will pay the postage on orders of $3 and upwards. ☜

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE CABINET.

In preparing the monthly numbers, great pains are taken to make a tasteful and excellent volume for the library. In this particular the Youth's Cabinet has, as yet, no imitators; and it is believed that in no other compass can be found, in so convenient and elegant a form, and for the same expense, such an amount of entertaining knowledge, as in the yearly volumes of this work. They are provided with a copious index, and are particularly adapted to school libraries. Those interested in common schools, are invited to examine them with this view.

THE SECOND VOLUME, FOR 1847,

is now ready, and may be had separately, or in connection with the first. It is complete in itself, and cannot fail to be among the most popular things in the way of

A JUVENILE KEEPSAKE.

The publisher assures his patrons that there shall be no delay in filling their orders, as there was, unavoidably, last season. A much larger edition is bound.

PRICES, SEPARATELY OR TOGETHER.

In muslin,	$1 25	—the two volumes,	$2 25
In gilt edges,	1 50	—the two volumes,	2 75
Mail edition,	1 00	—4 volumes,	3 00

Both volumes in muslin, and one year's subscription, $3 00.

POSTAGE FREE.

☞ The mail edition can be sent to any part of the United States, for only 16 cents postage. Those who remit $2 for two copies, shall receive the same, postage free.

AGENTS WANTED.

Several gentlemen of ability and good address are wanted, to obtain subscribers for the magazine, and to sell the bound volumes. Applications should be accompanied with responsible testimonials as to character, and all letters post-paid. The best inducements will be offered to good agents. A small capital of some $25 is necessary, to be invested in bound volumes, which find a ready sale. This is the best season for the agency.

☞ Postmasters are authorized to act as agents, and may avail themselves of the premiums offered above, or reserve 25 per cent. of the monies collected of new subscribers. Specimens sent gratis. Address

D. A. WOODWORTH, Publisher,
Clinton Hall, New York.

☞ Editors of newspapers, who receive this advertisement marked, and who will give it three conspicuous insertions, shall be entitled to the two volumes of the Cabinet, richly bound in gilt, and a year's subscription.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847-8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	"	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	"	April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to $5 00
Extras—for Drawing 1 00
" Painting 2 00
" Piano Music 8 00
" Use of Instrument 2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture, 1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter. Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

Miscellaneous.

THE CHILD AND THE STARS.

BY J. E. CARPENTER, ESQ.

"They tell me, dear father, each gem in the sky
That sparkles at night is a star;
But why do they dwell in those regions so high,
And shed their cold lustre so far?
I know that the sun makes the blossoms to spring,
That gives to the flow'rets their birth;
But what are the stars? do they nothing but fling
Their cold rays of light upon earth?"

"My child, it is said that yon stars in the sky
Are worlds that are fashioned like this,
Where the souls of the good and the gentle who die,
Assemble together in bliss;
And the rays that are shed o'er the earth, is the light
Of His glory whose throne is above,
That tell us, who dwell in these regions of night,
How great is His goodness and love!"

"Then, father, why still press your hand to your brow?
Why still are your cheeks pale with care?
If all that was gentle be dwelling there now,
Dear mother, I know, must be there."
"Thou chidest me well," said the father with pain,
"Thy wisdom is greater by far;
We may mourn for the lost, but we should not complain,
While we gaze on each beautiful star."

A HINDOO GENIUS.

A native of Calcutta, by hereditary profession a blacksmith, who was employed for many years in cutting punches for the press, having now little occupation, has adopted the following ingenious mode of obtaining a livelihood:—He has manufactured an iron press upon the model of one of those in use here, and set up a printing-office, at which he has commenced printing for the country at large. Last year he produced a native almanac, of a superior character, which had a remarkable run. Soon after this, he began to engrave on lead, pictures of the gods and goddesses of the Hindoo Pantheon, of which hundreds of thousands were struck off on inferior paper, and obtained a ready sale. Some of them were afterwards adorned by the art of the limner, and being set in frames, sold of course for a higher price. Hawkers were employed in traversing the country with packs of these mythological prints, both on account of our Serampore printer, and others who found it advantageous to imitate his example at Calcutta. Hence there are few villages to be found in a circle of many miles round the country in which the cottage of perhaps the poorest individual is not supplied with the veritable effigy of some one of the popular gods. The supply, however, soon became too great for the demand, and his competitors relinquished the trade, which has since languished, and is now confined to a very limited extent. But his ingenuity was not exhausted.

He determined to print English books for the numerous youths of the poorer classes, who are now endeavoring to obtain a smattering of our tongue, and for whom even the low-priced elementary works of the Calcutta School Book Society are too high. Of these works thousands of pirated copies have been printed in Calcutta, and disseminated through the country. But the individual we allude to, finding English type, at second hand, too dear for his purpose, has cut a set of punches for himself, and cast the types which he employs for this work. They are entirely wanting in that beauty and exquisite accuracy which characterize English types, but to an inexperienced eye the difference between them and letters cast in Europe or America would scarcely be apparent; and to a native, the inferiority would be altogether imperceptible. Thus furnished with his own apparatus of a typographical establishment, he is enabled to produce works at so cheap a rate, as completely to undersell the presses in Calcutta. The native booksellers in that city, a rising race, though at present of little note, are happy to avail themselves of his labors, and purchase edition after edition of his cheap books. As soon as education in the vernacular language becomes the order of the day, it is by such men, and such means, that books will be multipled. Capital will be poured in upon the enterprise; the natives who are acquainted both with English and Bengalee, will find it to their advantage to cater for the press, and the means of improvement will be placed within the reach of the middling and lower classes of society.

[Calcutta Gazette.

LAST MOMENTS OF SCHILLER.

Feeling that his end was come, he addressed himself to meet this stern and sudden call as became him; not with affected carlessness or superstitious fear, but with a quiet, unpretending manliness, which had marked the tenor of his life. Of his friends and his family he took a touching, but a tranquil farewell; he ordered that his funeral should be private, without pomp or parade. Some one inquiring how he felt, he said, "Calmer and calmer;" simple and memorable words, expressive of the mild heroism of the man. About six he sunk into a deep sleep, which deepened and deepened till it changed into the sleep from which there is no awakening; and all that remained of Schiller was a lifeless form, soon to mingle with the clods of the valley.

Schiller's age was forty-five years and a few months. Sickness had long wasted his form, which at no time could boast of faultless symmetry. He was tall and strongly boned, but unmuscular and lean; his body, it might be perceived, was wasting under the energy of a spirit too keen for it. His face was pale; the cheeks and temples rather hollow; the chin deep and slightly projecting; the nose regular aquiline; his hair inclined to auburn; his countenance, withal, was attractive, and expressing delicate and honest sensibilities; a silent enthusiasm, impetuosity not unchecked by melancholy, in his soft kindled eye and pale cheeks, and the brow was high and thoughtful. To judge from his portrait, Schiller's face expressed well the features of his mind; it is mildness tempering strength—fiery ardor shining through the clouds of suffering and disappointment, deep but patiently endured. Pale was its proper tint; the cheeks bent and hollow. There are few faces affect us more than Schiller's; it is at once meek, tender, unpretending and heroic. In his dress and manner, as in all things, he was plain and unaffected. Among strangers, something shy and retiring occasionally was discovered in him; in his own family, and among his select friends, he was kind-hearted, free and gay as a little child. In public, his external appearance had nothing in it to strike or attract. Of an unpresuming aspect, wearing plain apparel, his looks as he walked were constantly bent on the ground; so that frequently, we are told, "he failed to notice the salutation of a passing acquaintance; but if he heard it, he would catch hastily at his hat, and give his cordial Guten tag!" Modesty, simplicity, a total want of all parade or affectation, were conspicuous in him. These are the usual concomitants of true greatness, and serve to mitigate its splendor. Common things he did as a comman man; his conduct in such matters was uncalculated, spontaneous, and therefore natural and pleasing. During his last fifteen years he wrote his noblest works; yet, as it has been proved too well, no day of that period could have passed without its load of pain. On a surgical inspection of his body after death, the most vital organs were found totally deranged. "The structure of the lungs was in great part destroyed, the cavities of the heart were nearly grown up, the liver had become hard, and the gall-bladder was extended to an extraordinary size."

GENTEEL.

How ridiculous some people make themselves, in trying to be what the world calls genteel! A woman must not work in the kitchen, make her bed, nor darn her stockings, because such things are not genteel. Another will not learn a trade, because to be obliged to earn one's living by sewing, is not genteel. A third will not go to church in her stout shoes, and her old-fashioned shawl, because it is not genteel. A fourth will not pay you a friendly call, until nearly bed-time, because it is not genteel to visit a neighbor in the day time. A fifth will keep her mouth shut, when she laughs or converses with you, because it is not genteel to laugh or speak, excepting through the teeth. A sixth will not attend church, unless she is able to dress as expensively as her neighbor, because it is not genteel to listen to preaching, without having on a showy dress and an expensive shawl. A seventh will not rise till nearly noon, because it is not genteel to take the fresh morning air, hear the birds sing, and trip among the new grass and light flowers.

We might go on without number, but what would it avail? Every one knows the truth of what we write, and sees the folly of it, but few have the independence to break caste—show their calloused hands, natural bodies, and their honest poverty. While multitudes follow the fashions of the day, and try to appear genteel at the expense of their health, we do not pity them when we see the wretchedness to which they are brought. A woman, instead of boasting of her domestic habits, takes pride in saying that she never cooked a meal's victuals, boiled a pot, stood over the tub, or rinsed a towel.

God made women to labor. If it had not been his intention that they should work, he would have put wings upon them instead of hands, and made them butterflies at once. And nothing that can be said of a woman is so creditable to her, as her domestic, industrious habits. We trust that those who read our remarks, will, from this time forth, turn over a new leaf—discard what is called gentility—another name for sloth, indolence, and folly—and begin to live like rational, immortal creatures.

WHAT I HAVE SEEN AND HEARD.

I have seen a lady adorned with costly apparel, clothed in silk and velvet, with her fingers ornamented by rings, and her wrists by jeweled bracelets; and that lady's seamstress, who was entirely dependent upon her daily earnings, has remained unpaid for months.

I have seen a young girl expend dollars upon a useless trinket, who half an hour before had refused a shilling to a needy beggar.

I have seen a mother cheerfully lavish money to purchase her daughters expensive and superfluous dresses; and I have heard the same mother grumble that she had to pay servants such enormous wages.

I have heard a wife whose apartments were furnished in the most rich and elegant manner, and who spared neither pains nor expense in procuring fashionable articles, either for her rooms or her wardrobe, complain bitterly that her husband took so many newspapers.

I have seen a man spend money profusely for the supply of his personal wants, while at the same time he would not give the least pittance for any charitable object.

I have heard a wealthy man talk largely about sympathy and benevolence, whose poor relations, struggling hard to support existence, might have queried whether he had ever known either of these qualities, except by report.

I have seen a father give money lavishly to a prodigal son, while he has grudgingly paid an indigent nephew for his daily labor.

I have seen a man's table spread with every luxury, whose wood-cutter has been more than once requested to take less than the usual price for his services.

WHO ROB ORCHARDS?

In a certain village of the far West was an atheist. He was a great admirer of Robert Dale Owen and Fanny Wright; but he could see no excellence or beauty in the Sun of Righteousness. This man, of course, never entered any place of worship. Indeed, in the fruit season, he was specially busy on the Sunday in defending his orchards from his great enemies the woodpeckers, and the idle and profligate persons of the village, who, on that day, made unusually sad havoc among his apples and peaches.

One day, while at work with his son-in-law—an atheist like himself, although a more kind and courteous gentleman—as the pastor of a congregation was passing, he very rudely accosted the minister:

"Sir, what is the use of your preaching? What good do you do by it? Why don't you teach these fellows here better morals? Why don't you tell them something about stealing, in your sermons, and keep them from robbing my orchards?"

To this the minister pleasantly replied, "My dear sir, I am sorry you are so annoyed, and I should most willingly read the fellows who rob orchards a lecture on thieving; but the truth is, they are all so like you and the major, here, I never get a chance."

"Good, good!" replied the major, laughing; on which the elder atheist, blushing a little, and in an apologetical tone, said,

"Well, I believe it is true enough; it is not the church-going people that steal my apples."

A HUSBAND WON IN A LOTTERY.—On Tuesday morning a marriage was celebrated at St. George's-in-the-East, which attracted many spectators. The bride was Ann McCormic, an exceedingly pretty girl, who belonged to Rain's £100 school, and the bridegroom, William Chinnery, a smart young fellow belonging to the Welleclose-square division of the fire-brigade. Mr. Rains, the benevolent donor, by will left a sufficient sum of money to support forty girls, to be elected from the parochial schools, for four years. At the end of that period they are sent out to service, and, upon attaining the age of nineteen, and their characters being irreproachable, they become eligible to draw in a lottery for a husband. Two marriages take place in every year—namely, one upon the merry first of May, or sweep's day, and the other on the 5th of November, or Guy Fawk's Day; and on the morning of each of those days a drawing takes place for the first of May, or the 5th of November, as the case may be; and Miss McCormick, having drawn the prize on the 1st of May last, was, of course, the next for preferment. When the lucky ticket is drawn, the next thing to be done by its fortunate owner is to look out for an eligible partner, (not a Roman Catholic, for they, according to the will of the testator, are ineligible,) in the parishes of St. George's-in-the-East, St. Paul, Shadwell, or St. John of Wapping, and, this being done, a notice is given to the trustees for their approval. In this instance, Miss McCormick's choice fell upon the "waterman fireman," and the trustees having no reason to find fault with his good looks or fair fame, nothing more was left than to go through the happy ceremony. In the evening, according to the usual custom, a dinner took place at the institution, at which the bridegroom, and several of their party attended, and, after the health of the happy couple was given, the chairman presented the bridegroom with 100 new sovereigns in a bag, as the bridal portion from the institution.

[Britannia.

BREAD.—Bread, when just taken out of the oven, should never be eaten by persons of weak health, as it contains a great quantity of carbonic gas, which is given off as it cools and its place supplied with oxygen. This is the reason why people can eat a great deal more of new, than of old bread. The atmosphere is a source of food to man as well as vegetables, and the relationship of different kinds of food to the animal economy in connection with the gases, ought to form a part of our studies. Those who study domestic economy and use bread that has been cooled in an airy apartment are to be commended as much for consulting health, as for studying the way to make "the means meet the end." Any person is able to eat more new than old bread, and this simple fact is evidence that the stomach is no mean judge between quantity and quality. Bread that is somewhat old can be refreshed by being steamed in a steamer or dipped in water and put in the oven, after which it should be cooled before using. The less yeast that is used to make bread, it will be found to be none the worse, although a little more labor is required to make it. In this lies the grand secret of the difference in the quality of bread. The French pull all their dough, and make good bread, but the same effect can be produced by using little yeast, but working the dough a number of times.

A PITIFUL CASE.—A poor fellow lately appeared in Boston breathing through an aperture in his wind-pipe about midway from the sternum to the chin. This aperture was made by a musket ball in Mexico, in one of the late battles. He scarcely breathed at all through the throat, and had nearly lost the power of articulation. It was with great difficulty that he could make himself understood, as he could neither read nor write. He could hear distinctly, and make signs to convey his meaning, which with great difficulty were intelligible. He tried to speak so as to be heard, but the volume of breath necessary to form a word or sentence passed out of the windpipe at the aperture before reaching the throat, and prevented the articulation. This aperture was healed, and a silver tube was inserted to assist respiration, which was performed with great difficulty. This was attached to his neck by a string. He had also been wounded in one of his legs, and he limped in walking. The color of his skin was nearly black, so much so that he looked like an inhabitant of the torid zone more than one born in this northern latitude.

A FRENCHMAN'S ACCOUNT OF ENGLISH SOUPS AND STOMACHS.—The English soups consist of turtle: a compound of that animal and of coxcombs, mushroons, ham and spices. There is but one house in London where it is to be seen; but the price forbids its being eaten, as it is four francs a portion. However, there is a substitute called mock turtle, which is within the capabilities of ordinary purses. Next to the turtles, real and mock, come the tribes of gravy, ox-tail, gibbet, hare, pea, muttonbroth and mulligatawny. The last named is a horrid importation from India, composed of all kinds of fiery ingredients, and so pungent that few of us Frenchmen could dip the tip of their finger in it with impunity. But the English of both sexes, actually devour it like salamanders, and the police do not think of interfering to prevent them. An Englishman's stomach is endued with marvellous elasticity, and easily digests four meals a day.

EMPERORS OF CHINA.—Of one hundred and twenty sovereigns of China who are enumerated in their annals, fifty-four died, thirty-one were killed, thirteen dethroned, ten abdicated. Of the fifty-four who died, only thirty-seven can be said to have died a natural death, the death of the others was hastened by misfortune, grief for political reverses, or beastly excesses. A sad picture of poor human nature in its proudest estate. The lords of millions and hundreds of millions, thus ending their uneasy lives. Alas for the vanity of earthly pomp and power!

Twenty-four dollars, says Watson, in his annals, purchased the whole city and county of New York, two hundred and twenty years ago. The streets were first paved in 1675; in 1711 a slave market was established, in Wall street. The first stage rout between New York and Boston was established in 1732—time fourteen days from city to city. In 1745 the first coach (Lady Murray's) was driven in New York.

VARIETY.

The intervention of a priest, or rather ecclesiastical functionary, was not deemed indispensable to a marriage, until the council of Trent, in 1409. The celebrated decree passed in that session, interdicting any marriage otherwise than in the presence of the priest, and at least two witnesses. But before the time of Pope Innocent III. (1118,) there was no solemnization of marriage in the church, but the bridegroom came to the bride's house and led her home to his own, which was all the ceremony then used. Bands were first directed to be published by Canon Walter, in the year 1200.

The Gardener's Chronicle says that the Memoirs of the London chemical society contain an interesting paper by Mr. Warrington, on the analysis of tea, in which he states that he has not only removed the whole of the coloring matter, or glazing, from green tea, but has been able to analyze the matter removed, and prove it by chemical evidence, to consist of Prussian blue and gypsum principally. So that in fact the drinkers of green tea, as it comes to the English market, indulge in a beverage of Chinese paint, and might imitate the mixture by dissolving Prussian blue and plaster of Paris in hot water. The Chinese do not drink this painted tea; they only sell it.

The Court Journal describes a method by which the most beautiful and easily attained show of evergreens in winter may be had by a simple plan, which has been found to answer remarkably well on a small scale. If geranium branches are taken from thrifty and luxuriant trees, just before the winter sets in, as for slips, and immersed in soap and water, they will after drooping for a few days shed their leaves, and put forth fresh ones, and continue in the finest vigor all winter. By placing a number of bottles thus filled in flower baskets, with moss to conceal the bottles, a show of evergreens is easily insured for a whole season. They require no fresh water.

Most of the files used in this country are imported; being made in England, by hand, with great labor. The Portsmouth Journal states that Mr. Richard Walker has invented and patented a machine, now in operation, which will ere long make files an article of export instead of import. Three machines which can be tended by one man, can complete twenty common files an hour. A steam engine of five horse power can put at least fifty of these machines in operation.

The Baltimore Sun says: "A well-known Banker, a few days ago, inclosed a check for $2,000 to the widow of Henry Whitney, saying, that while he was in want of the "needful," some years gone by, he obtained a small loan of a few hundred dollars from her husband, which was never called for, and that the present sum was the amount with interest and profits accruing; and though there was no legal obligation to return it, he felt it his conscientious duty, and was happy to send it to her, and beg her acceptance.

The following simple experiment is said to be a test of the soundness of the lungs. Let the patient draw in a full breath, and then begin to count as far as he can, slowly and audibly, without again inflating the lungs. The number of seconds he can continue is then to be carefully noted. In confirmed consumption, the time does not exceed eight, and often less than six seconds. In pleurisy and pneumonia it ranges from nine to four seconds. But when the lungs are sound, the time will range as high as twenty to thirty seconds.

Mr. William Croghan Esq., of Baltimore, has a large china bowl, which originally belonged to Oliver Cromwell. It is capable of holding a quart, and is set in very costly, fine guilt brass—the setting being probably a hundred years old. The bowl was presented to Mr. Croghan, during his late tour in Europe, by an English gentleman.

The rumor gains credence, in circles of the highest authority, of the symptoms of insanity having been decidedly manifested by her Majesty Queen Victoria. The well known liability of her family to this cruel malady strengthens the probability of the report.

A pious officer in the old French war, who loved his place and his pay much better than he loved fighting, although no coward in the day of danger, was accustomed in his family devotions to pray most earnestly for a long and moderate war. The Mexican war would have suited him, exactly.

In preparing a spot of land in North Sandwich, recently, whereon to erect a shop, the skeleton of an Indian was discovered buried a few feet below the surface of the ground. How long a time has elapsed since the red man's spirit departed to his 'hunting lands,' no one can affirm.

One of the surgeons of the Army, writing to a friend after the battle of Contreras and Churubusco, says: "I turned round to look at my amputating table; under it was a perfect heap of arms and legs; and looking at myself, I found I was covered with blood from head to foot."

In Great Britain there are eight hundred thousand voters, in the United States three millions, in France three hundred thousand. According to the population of the different countries, America has five times more voters than England, and fifteen times more than France.

Three huge veins of iron ore, have been discovered in Hawley, Mass., worth 63 per cent. of pure metal, and easily wrought. Arrangements are making for erecting a furnace there.

The man who cut the first tree in the wilds of Ohio, is still alive. His name is Daniel Cushwell, and he resides on a small farm in Oneida Co., N. Y., and is eighty-six years of age.

There are 4201 letters lying in the Dead Letter Office, London, which contain property to the amount of $200,000.

The canal through the isthmus of Suez is to be made deep and broad enough to float a first rate man of war.

The whole number of paupers in England is stated to be nine hundred and forty thousand two hundred and ninety-five.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. It speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

ALFRED, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

DITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMP L

VOL. IV.—NO. 25.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 9, 1847.

WHOLE NO. 181.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since.

An amazing amount of perverse ingenuity has been exercised, in modern times, especially in devising reasons to justify the church in her refusal to hallow the Sabbath of divine appointment. Not choosing avowedly to claim, as the church of Rome has done, full power to make alterations at pleasure. Protestants have striven hard to obtain the same object by twisting statements of Scripture into divine sanctions of their apostacy. It may, therefore, be proper here to notice certain other allegations which have been made, and arguments which have been advanced, adverse to the view we maintain.

By some, as we have seen, it has been contended that the Sabbath was instituted for the Israelites alone, and was designed as a distinguishing mark of their peculiarity as a people, and that its institution was in the wilderness; but the class to which we now refer, acknowledging the preëxistence of a Sabbath from creation, maintain that in the wilderness a change was made in the day, itself by divine authority or contrivance. For although there is not a word in the Scriptures intimating this, or from which such an idea can be supported, and although, so far as we know, such a thing had never once been surmised when the Evangelists and Apostles wrote, yet in later times imaginary discoveries have been made of a "distinction between the Mosaic and Ante-Mosaical Sabbath," and it has, confidently enough, been asserted by many that the day marked out by God's appointment of the Israelites' resting day and arrangement of the falling of the manna in the wilderness of Sin, was not the seventh in the order of creation—that although there is no intimation of the circumstance, the Sabbath had formerly been the first day of the week, and was then changed to the seventh.

Bishop Bloomfield, in his edition of the Greek New Testament, (notes on Matthew 28: 1,) says that from an elaborate sermon by Professor Lee, Cambridge, 1833, "there is great reason to think the Patriarchal Sabbath coincided with our Sunday; also that as it was thrown back to Saturday, in order to commemorate the Jewish Exodus—so that the return to the original Sabbath, when the purpose for which the new one had been appointed was answered, was just as reasonable as its former change." The Rev. Dr. Stone, of New York, also, (as appears from Sabbath Recorder, August 1st, 1844,) considers that "there is every reason to doubt the coincidence of the Jewish day with the one on which Jehovah rested from the work of creation."

All of these writers, we doubt not, and very many besides, have, to their shame, been led astray by the confident assertions of an influential author of a former age. Of the seventh day, Joseph Mede says, "Certain I am, the Jews kept not that day for a Sabbath till the raining of the manna. For that which should have been their Sabbath the week before, had they then kept the day which they afterwards kept, was the fifteenth day of the second month; and which day we read in the sixteenth of Exodus that they marched a wearisome march, and came at night into the wilderness of Sin, where they murmured for their poor entertainment, and wished they had died in Egypt; that night, the Lord sent them quails; the next morning it rained manna, which was the sixteenth day, and so six days together; the seventh, which was the twenty-second day, it rained none; and that day they were commanded to keep for their Sabbath. Now, if the twenty-second day of the month were the Sabbath, the fifteenth should have been, if that day had been kept before; but the text tells us expressly, they marched that day; and, which is strange, the day of the month is never named, unless it be once, for any station but this where the Sabbath was ordained, (Numb. 10;) otherwise it could not have been known that that day was ordained for a day of rest which before was none."[*]

Jennings, in his Jewish Antiquities, gives in substance Mede's statement, and speaks of the view it offers as "probable;" and Dr. Wardlaw, while he quotes with approval Bishop Horsley as assigning to it the place of mere "conjecture," does so without the condemnation which such conjectures surely merit. It is indeed painful to hear Christian men speaking calmly of such unwarrantable liberties with the word of God, and even characterizing them as "ingenious," instead of giving expression to the deep sorrow which such presumption ought to excite. Williams' Dictionary of Religions, referring to Mede's view, more honestly remarks, that the proof of it "is far from clear, and besides does not seem to agree with the original appointment, Gen. 2: 2, 3."

An author already alluded to presents us with this idea of the original Sabbath being the first day, wrought out in a manner not less remarkable than that of Mede. Acknowledging himself indebted indeed for it to Bedford's Scripture Chronology, this writer, in letters addressed to one who denies the authority of any day being specially sanctified now, says, regarding the statement of the original institution of the Sabbath, "that it was appointed by God to commemorate His rest or cessation from His work of creation, there is no difference between Him and us, unless perhaps as it regards the day of the week. He says it was the seventh, we say it was the first; and yet we agree in the identical day." This simultaneous difference and agreement would certainly be marvelous enough if true. Hear, then, his scheme for its establishment. "It was the seventh day, undoubtedly, from the first of creation; but it was the first day of the week to man." This statement is actually given by the writer in all seriousness; and, amplifying upon it, he afterwards adds, "This being man's first day, first day of his week, of his year, or of any other period by which he might afterwards reckon his time; it was also the Lord's Sabbath or day of rest." "Thus the first day of the week and the first day of his life was Adam's Sabbath day, and from Him was handed down to his descendants." P. 144.

As if the week might be begun and ended wheresoever the whim of man may please, in express contradiction of Scripture reckoning, according to which the day of Adam's creation is called the sixth day, and God's rest, invariably called the seventh, we are here told, "the first day of the week, and the first day of his life, was Adam's Sabbath day, and from him it was handed down to all his descendants." Once more, "And the first day of the week, as we have seen in the case of the first man, was the day which was observed universally as the Sabbath during the whole of the patriarchal age, till the time of Moses." P. 144.[*]

What objection, we may ask, could there have been, upon this principle, to Cain's also dating his week from "the first whole day he ever saw," whichever day that may have been? There is something so fearful in "Scripture Chronologers" taking such liberties with the inspired word, and of Christian authors gravely quoting each reasoning as argument, nay, talking of its throwing a luster on the subject of the Sabbath, that when we first read these passages, we could with difficulty believe that we had read correctly.[†]

We now add the reason why all this labor is undertaken in order to convert the seventh into the first day of the week,—for, as may well be conceived, such a theory was not framed without an object. It would be a very desirable thing, no doubt, with these authors, that, when men are stumbled by the church's acknowledged departure from the observance of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath of the Lord, it could be made even probable that in doing so they are only departing from a changed Sabbath, and are truly returning to the first and real Sabbath—that they have only left something which was instituted at a later period exclusively for the Jew, and are observing what God originally instituted at the creation, for the whole world.

Now, this is what they actually seek to have believed, "the completion of the great work of redemption, by the resurrection of Christ, on the same day of rest that was entered into at the creation;" (Letters, p. 34,) and that "the first day of the week, or the Christian Sabbath, is the seventh day computed from the beginning of time." (Jennings, p. 433.) This is what has led to all that tampering with the language of Scripture in the statements we have quoted, and of the gradual transmutation of the seventh day of the week by their own talk concerning the "first day of the week to man." And although we need hardly say, no text has been adduced, either to prove that during the Patriarchal ages the first day of the week was so observed as the Sabbath, or that, because of its being the first day to man, God therefore authorized this novel application of the name of the seventh to that of the first day, the author from whom we quote nevertheless proceeds to say, "when God delivered His people Israel from the Egyptian bondage by the hand of Moses, He appointed another day than the first day of the week for them peculiarly, as they were a peculiar people, to observe as the Sabbath in commemoration of that mighty deliverance He wrought for them. This was the seventh day of the week instead of the first." Letters, p. 145.

The boldness of such assertions, if we had not our Bibles to which again to refer, would certainly be ready to stagger, and make us doubt whether we had heretofore read them correctly. But a reference to the inspired account of the creation Sabbath, and the traces thereof in the history of the patriarchal ages, as well as the language of the historian concerning the time and manner of giving of the manna, demonstrate that such assertions are perfectly gratuitous, and without the shadow of countenance. What we have already adduced from that divine authority, and texts to which we shall still have occasion to refer, enable us to correct the mistakes and baseless calculations which we cannot but apprehend never would have been dreamed of but for the subsequent unauthorized change it is intended to help.

In alledged confirmation of the above reasoning, or rather as the basis on which it professedly rests, it is maintained that although the 15th day of the month was the Sabbath at the first journeying of the children of Israel upon their leaving the land of Egypt, that yet this their "ancient Sabbath, the first day of the week, and the 15th of the month," was on this occasion neglected; "circumstances prevented it from being observed as a day of rest. PROVIDENCE had ordered it otherwise, no doubt to wean them from observing that particular day; and therefore, instead of resting on this Sabbath day according to the commandment, they traveled from Rameses to Succoth, which could not be less than 30 miles." P. 146.

Thus, the author has, step by step, reached the height of affirming that the first day of the week had, previously to the Israelites leaving Egypt, been the "Sabbath day according to the commandment," at the very moment that he is seeking to establish the violation of this supposed "commandment" by the Israelites, through a kind of connivance of "Providence," without either involving God as having given an express charge to set it aside, or the Israelites of incurring the sin of wilful disobedience—and not only is this change pretended to have been effected without their knowledge or concurrence, but without their having ever afterwards been furnished with information of the weaning from the true Sabbath they are supposed to have undergone—so that, to this day, we have reason to believe, they remain utterly ignorant, not of the circumstance merely, but even of such a thing having ever been imagined by Jew or by Gentile.

Tracing on their history till the Israelites had passed through the Red Sea and praised the Lord in triumphant song upon its farther shore, the author from whom we quote continues: "From this time, therefore, the Israelites began te observe their new Sabbath on the seventh day of the week, instead of the first, which had uniformly been the day on which the Sabbath had been observed from its original institution at the creation of the world, and was, on that account, as a moral law, binding on all men; whereas this seventh-day Sabbath was peculiar to the Jews, who were indeed a peculiar people to God, and was therefore binding only on them." Letters, p. 147. Thus starting with the mere statement of fact, that the Sabbath was "the first day of Adam's life," and admitting that it was indeed "the identical" seventh day of the week, by his mere progress through four pages of his own words, without a single text in proof, without argument, (I had almost said without even attempt at argument,) this author seeks to lead us to the conclusion that "the Israelites began to observe their new Sabbath on the seventh day of the week, instead of the first, "which, (says he with singular confidence, considering the nature of his premises,) had uniformly been the day on which the Sabbath had been observed from its original institution, at the creation of the world."

[To be continued.

---

[*] Works of Joseph Mede. Sabbath of the Jews.

[*] Letters to Dr. Hamilton. Edinb. 1830. P. 144.

[†] It may serve the purpose of rendering this exhibition of sad perversions more complete, simply to add here that of one other author. Labin, on Gen. 2: 2, 3, says, "I would have you remember that it is called the seventh day, because of a perplexity which has arisen in the minds of some, concerning the change of the day of the week from the Jewish Saturday. The fact is, that neither the Jewish Saturday nor the Christian Sunday would be found by computation to be the exact seventh day from creation, inasmuch as the division of the year into 365 days, and of the day into 24 hours, does not give a precise even day or hour, and no division could. It is to be kept every seventh day, and so the apostles changed it, but still keeping every seventh day. As Jews they kept it on the last day of the week. As Christians they kept it on the first, which was the day of our Lord's resurrection."—God's History of Man, P. 39. Confessing myself altogether unable to perceive what the author means as preventing the seventh day from being the exact seventh day by computation, I leave it to others to discover.

LIBRARY OF THE SAMARITANS AT NAPLES.

I was now anxious to visit the Samaritan synagogue, being exceedingly curious to inspect the celebrated manuscripts which it contains. There was no difficulty in obtaining access. A Rabbin, but not the chief, who had remained engaged with the Pasha, led us to a small oratory, which was covered with straw mats, and not to be trodden, except bare-footed. Upon a book-shelf I observed about twenty manuscripts, chiefly upon parchment. To several I unhesitatingly accord an age of many hundred years. One exhibited by many peculiarities—for instance, that of being written in three columns—an antiquity of more than a thousand years. But I was chiefly occupied with the alledged exceedingly ancient manuscript which is said to contain a statement to the effect that it was written thirteen years after the death of Moses, by Abischua, the son of Phineas, who was grandson of Aaron. The Rabbin brought us a tin case, within which lay the manuscript, like a large synagogue roll of parchment, enveloped in a costly covering of crimson silk, with embroidered golden letters. It bears undeniable traces of antiquity. I examined the parchment, the color of the ink, the system of the lines, the punctuation, the divisions, none of which have initials, and the characters, as well as they could be examined, without a knowledge of the Samaritan. All combine to convey the idea of a manuscript of the sixth century. Even under this supposition it necessarily holds a very distinguished rank among all the ancient parchment codices of both the East and the West. With respect to the alledged statement, it may not, if in fact it exist, be considered otherwise than as a transcript carelessly copied from former documents and incorporated in it as a note founded on a remote tradition. Perhaps this Abiscua took some share in writing the original Pentateuch. In that case, the statement in question would receive some elucidation from the practice in the Greek manuscripts of the Gospel, wherein is frequently noted that it was written by Matthew, by John, &c., as well as the year in which it was first promulgated. These notices have misled uninformed persons. For instance, I found in a celebrated library, inscribed in a manuscript of the Gospel, a remark from the pen of the librarian himself, to the effect that the manuscript was written by the rhetorician Habriades, in the tenth century after Christ's ascension, and referred to an ancient commentary. But what stood in this commentary? Nothing more than that the Gospel of St. Matthew was published ten years after Christ's ascension, and that in the Hebrew tongue.

[Fischendorf's Travels.

DR. BAIRD ON WORSHIP.

Dr. Baird, in his letters from Europe, to the New York Evangelist, speaks as follows of the worship of the evangelical church of Lyons, which he thinks is the most "living church" in all France.

"I was very much struck with one thing, which I remarked in the public worship in that chapel, and which I should be glad to see prevail in our churches. It was the hearty response at the end of every prayer offered, and at the termination of every sermon, of Amen, by all the people, or at least by the pious. I know not when I have heard any thing which was more pleasant. It was done in a solemn and heartfelt manner, which most favorably impressed me. This is entirely in accordance with the primitive practice. Another thing also pleased me much. It was to see that almost all the congregation took part in singing the praises of God. The singing was good; good enough as to the manner. I should wish for nothing better. And what a contrast between this intelligent and hearty performance of a most important part of the worship of God, and that which prevails so extensively in some churches in our large cities—which consists in the whole congregation listening to the choir—just as in a theatre or opera. This is all wrong. It is outrageously wicked, and will attract the frown of God. Nothing would induce me to be pastor of a church where such a practice exists. If we cannot have choirs but upon such conditions, let us dismiss them and go back to the old plan of having precentors, as in Scotland. Edification is much better than gratification, and spiritual life is better than fine music."

THE ANGELS' INVITATION.

Hark! 'tis the angels' song,
List to their lay;
Bright is our starry home,
Haste thee away.
Come to the fragrant grove,
Where all is peace and love,
Here shalt thou ever rove,
Free from all pain.

Hath life no charm for thee,
Lone, weary one?
Jesus thy friend will be,
Come, pilgrim, come.
Come, join the spirit-throng,
Come, sing the angels' song,
While we our notes prolong,
Worthy the Lamb!

THE UNCLEAN SPIRIT IN DRY PLACES.

BY CHRISTMAS EVANS.

I see the wrecked spirit, like a winged dragon, having a long tail, drawing circles, and flying in the air in search of a dwelling place. Casting his fiery look upon a certain neighborhood, he spies a young man in the bloom of his days, and in the strength of his powers, sitting on the box of his cart going for lime. "There he is," says the old hellish dragon, "his veins are full of bood, and his bones are full of marrow; I will cast the sparks into his bosom, and will set all his lusts on fire; I will lead him on from bad to worse until he commit every sin. I will make him a murderer, and will plunge his soul forever beneath the boiling billows of the great fiery furnace." With this I see him descending in all the vehemence of his character—but when close by the lad, the dragon hears him sing,

"When on the cross the Saviour hung,
The mid-day sunk in midnight gloom;
When guilty sinners were redeemed,
The midnight burst in mid-day bloom."

Upon which the dragon cries out, "This place is too dry for me," and away he flies.

I see him again, a second time, hovering in the air, and seeking for a resting-place. In a flowery meadow, by a river of clear water, he sees a maiden, eighteen years of age, among the kine, picking up some beautiful flowers, here and there. "Behold her," says Apollyon, full of hellish joy; "I will poison her mind, and lead her astray from the paths of the almighty enemy. I will make her a harlot, and will ultimately cast her over the precipice, until she sing forever in the furnace of divine wrath." He hastens down; and approaching the maiden, finds her singing the following stanza, in a heavenly, transporting frame of mind, and with a voice that might almost melt the rocks:

"Unto the righteous will arrive
A day of rest serene,
When to their joy they see the Lord
Without a veil between.

"Then from the grave I shall arise,
Aud take my joyful stand,
Among the saints that dwell on high,
Received at God's right hand."

"This place is too dry for me," says he, and off he flies.

From the meadow he ascends like a great balloon, with renewed rage, blowing smoke and fire from his mouth, and threatening damnation to all creation. "I will have a place to rest and dwell in," says Apollyon, "in spite of the purposes, covenant, and grace of God!" With this he espies an aged woman, sitting at the door of her cot, and spinning on her little wheel. "Ah, she is ripe for destruction," says the dragon; "I will give her a taste of the burning gall of damnation, and will cast her into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone." With this he descends on the eaves of the cot, and hears the old woman, with a trembling voice, but with heavenly feelings, repeat the following beautiful passage: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee!" "This place is too dry for me," says the dragon, and is off again.

It might be thought that all these disappointments would discourage him from prosecuting his infernal designs farther; but not so; he is determined, if possible, to find a dwelling-place. For this purpose he rises again, to mark some spot where he may alight and find a welcome. He sees in a small village a neat and decent house of refreshment. "There," says he, "will I dwell, and lead to bondage every one that shall cross the threshold, and make him fast in eternal fetters." He flies down like lightning, enters the house, and walks into the parlor; but there he finds a company of ministers of the New Testament, returning from an Association, who are talking about the victory of Calvary, and exchanging appointments with each other. The wicked spirit can not stay within the sound of their voices, but retreats with hasty steps, muttering and growling as he goes: "This place is too dry for me; I will return to my house from whence I came out."

ILLUSTRATION OF THE POWER OF FAITH.

ELD. JOHN PECK.

This venerable and much-beloved servant of Christ, has been called to drink the cup of affliction to the very dregs. His noble sons, Philetus and Linus, ministers of great promise, have just been laid in their graves beside their sainted mother. The calmness and serenity of the husband and father was a sublime illustration of the power of faith, and as such it was most happily and touchingly improved by Eld. Eaton, in a discourse delivered by him in Broad street, Utica, from the passage in John, 'This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.'

On Wednesday, he said, he went to New Woodstock to attend the funeral of the youngest son, Linus. On entering the house of the well known and venerable father, he saw the beautiful corpse extended in his coffin in the parlor. The father had gone to bring the body of the other son, Philetus, who had died that day, with the same disease, a few miles off, that they might be interred from his dwelling the next day. In a short time the company arrived with the deceased, who was placed beside his brother, and there lay the manly forms of both, side by side, pale and motionless, which but a few days before were in the full vigor of active life. The serenity and calmness of the father was wonderful. When he took him by the hand, there was nothing which betrayed the deep emotion within, but the convulsive tremor of his grasp, and a quicker movement of the eye than ordinary. Said he, the hand of the Lord is heavy upon me, but I feel 'underneath the everlasting arms.' Amid the weeping company whose tears were flowing profusely, he stood up in the mild dignity of the Christian patriarch, the comforter of the mourners. The widows of the deceased in their desolating griefs fled to him for support, and threw themselves on his neck, and with indescribable tenderness and composure he presented to them promise after promise to sustain their spirits and assuage their sorrows. After doing this, he remarked to the assemblage, 'We will now have a season of prayer.' But, said he, we will sing first, and then repeated a verse of the hymn he desired sung—singularly touching, appropriate, and beautiful. The hymn was then sung, and prayer offered, and the speaker was then left to ponder on the sublimity of the scene, and the glorious triumph of Christian faith.

Another scene of equal sublimity was witnessed the next day at the close of the funeral services. After the interment of the deceased, the venerable father stood forth in patriarchal dignity, and after expressing thanks to his friends for their great kindness in his season of affliction, remarked to the vast concourse very much as follows:

Thirty-seven years ago I buried there—pointing to the spot where he lay—a little son. Three weeks ago the three who occupy these graves were all in health; but now, there lies my beloved wife, and there lies my dear Philetus, and there my darling Linus, and there, (pointing to a vacant spot) is the place I have selected for myself. It will not be long before I shall occupy it, and lie there among them, to rest until the resurrection morning. How glorious the thought of the resurrection! when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and those who sleep in Jusus shall awake in his likeness! Then I with all my dear family shall arise, and ascend together, to be forever with the Lord and the company of the redeemed—and sin and sorrow shall never obtrude. How blessed the anticipation! [Bap. Reg.

WHAT CHILDREN CAN DO.

In Burlington, Vt., there is a Juvenile Missionary Society, embracing a day school numbering from twenty-five to thirty children, the average of whose ages is about 8 years. The society appropriate one hour of the first Wednesday of every month to a missionary meeting; when all lay aside the spelling book and the geography, to sing sweet juvenile missionary hymns, to listen to such facts about missions as are adapted to their years, and to pay their pennies into the treasury. A happier circle is not to be found, than these children are represented to be in their little meetings. These have been held for something more than a year, and a short time since the society sent twenty dollars to the Treasurer of the Missionary Union as their first annual contribution to the Karen mission.

These children have a female teacher who loves the cause of missions. She is teaching them to do so. Who can estimate the influence which this little Society may exert on the children—on their parents—on the world? Should the Society continue in its present form, it would be a matter of no small interest, at the end of ten years, to observe the service and character of those who are now its members.

PRACTICAL BENEVOLENCE.

Benevolence is not in word and in tongue; but in deed and in truth. It is a business with men as they are, and with human life as drawn by the rough hand of experience. It is a duty which you must perform at the call of principle; though there be no voice of eloquence to give splendor to your exertions, and no music of poetry to lead your willing footsteps through the bowers of enchantment. It is not the impulse of high and extatic emotion. It is an exertion of principle. You must go to the poor man's cottage, though no verdure flourish around it, and no rivulet be nigh to delight you with the gentleness of its murmurs. If you look for the romantic simplicity of fiction, you will be disappointed; but it is your duty to persevere in spite of discouragement. Benevolence is not merely a feeling, but a principle; not a dream of rapture for the fancy to indulge in, but a business for the hand to execute.

[Dr. Chalmers.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 9, 1847.

DEEDS AND PLANS OF THE SABBATH UNION.

In several of our exchange papers, we find what purports to be a statement of the good deeds and wise plans of the "American and Foreign Sabbath Union." It is signed by eight of the officers, and may no doubt be considered as authentic; on which account our readers will probably feel interested to know something about it.

In the way of good deeds, it seems that "the Secretary of the Union has visited twenty of the United States, and traveled more than thirty thousand miles, addressing public bodies of all descriptions, and presenting reasons why, as a nation, we should keep the Sabbath; all secular business, traveling, and amusement, be confined to six days in a week; and all people assemble on the Sabbath and worship God, acknowledge him as the author of their blessings, and render that thanksgiving and praise which are justly his due, and our reasonable service." Besides this, he has prepared, and raised money extensively to circulate, a Permanent Sabbath Document, embodying numerous facts to prove the utility, as well as duty, of keeping holy the first day of the week, which the document in question most pertinaciously and unreasonably persists in calling the Sabbath.

The plan upon which the pecuniary means to carry forward these operations has been raised, is interesting, not only as showing how cheap it has been to profess the doctrines of the Union, but also as showing who compose this Union, which claims to be both American and Foreign. As to the plan of raising funds, the statement says: "It has not been our practice to appeal to public bodies, or ask them for money; but to go before them and show how, by keeping the Sabbath day holy, they may save money, save their children, save their country, and save their souls, and thus do them all the good in our power, and then leave them, without asking for any contribution. By so doing, we have been able to reach a greater number and variety of people, to make a stronger moral and religious impression, and do greater good. To obtain the needful means, we have applied to known friends of the Sabbath, who are blessed with property, and are in the habit of doing good with it, stated to them what we are doing, and requested them to aid us in this work. About fifteen men, at first, furnished a hundred dollars each, to start this movement. A part of them concluded, should they live, to give the same annually for five years. Others have given smaller sums." Here, then, we have the mode of operations by which the Union has been enabled to get up its great conventions, and make such a loud noise in the world. A few wealthy men have combined to raise a sum of money, which has been expended in proving to those who profess to regard themselves as bound by God's commandment to keep holy the Sabbath, that by doing so "they may save their money" and "save their souls!" The result has been, that a great many people, particularly judges and doctors, have declared their conviction of the advantage of keeping the Sabbath and the danger of neglecting it. And this is regarded as a sort of triumph for the American and Foreign Sabbath Union—so much so, that now, after the first five years for which funds were provided are closed, an appeal is made to the public at large for means to continue operations.

It is probably needless for us to say how little sympathy we have with this popular movement. Not that we suspect the motives of those who are engaged in it, for we have no doubt that many of them, if not all, think they are doing God service. Not that we question the right of any number of men to raise money and expend it as they please, in holding conventions or distributing publications, for they have an undoubted right to do so when they can without infringing upon the privileges of others. But there are reasons, which seem to us good and substantial, why we cannot give our sympathy to this movement, although it avowedly aims at an object exceedingly dear to us—the better sanctification of the Sabbath. In the first place, the Union professes a desire to promote Sabbath-keeping, not by compulsory means, but by enlightening community in regard to the duty; yet, while making such professions, its conventions have been characterized by a spirit of illiberality unknown in connection with any other reformatory movement. Any thing like a frank expression of opinion in relation to the claims of the day which it seeks to have sanctified, has never been allowed; on the contrary, it has often been prevented by most unjustifiable means. In proof of this we may refer to the reception of Messrs. Brown and Crandall at the New York State Sabbath Convention (so called) held at Saratoga; also to the treatment of Messrs. Hull, Magruder, and Lemmon, in the National Sabbath Convention at Baltimore. These gentlemen attended the conventions in question, as delegates, in exact conformity with the call which had been published. And yet, in one instance, they were denied seats except upon condition of being gagged; and in the other, although admitted to membership, they were refused a hearing when they wished to express their opinions. Thus was belied the profession of a desire to enlighten the public mind. In the second place, the Union professes to issue only such publications as agree with the belief of evangelical Christians generally. Instead of its publications being of this stamp, however, they represent the opinions of only a small portion of Christendom—opinions which date no farther back than two hundred and fifty years ago, and are now received among Christians only to a limited extent. In view of such facts, what friend of free inquiry and religious liberty can be blamed for not giving his sympathies to this organization? Though it may have said many good things in its conventions, and published many good things in its Permanent Sabbath Documents, it has refused to say, or allow to be said, many other equally good and important things. It has thus shown an unwillingness to let the whole truth be known. From such an organization we can expect but little good. We cannot say, therefore, in popular phrase. that we hope its appeal for aid will meet a generous response.

DIVINITY OF CHRIST THE BASIS OF CHRISTIANITY.

There is not a doctrine of the Bible perfectly solvable by a finite creature. If men try to reduce the system of divinity to their comprehension, they will get bewildered in their own darkness. Not that any thing revealed by God is unreasonable, but beyond the grasp of reason. The divinity of Christ is rejected by many because they can not understand how divinity and humanity can exist together. If, however, there is one doctrine more prominent than another in divine truth, it is this. The reason is obvious; it is because the whole of the Christian fabric rests upon it. Take away the divinity of Christ, and the whole world stands condemned, without the least fragment of a hope of deliverance. However perfect a created being may be—(though there may never have been one solitary deviation from the requirements of the law)—where shall be found an atoning sacrifice for a world of transgressors? Perfect obedience is the requirement of the divine law; and hence how could a created being, upon whom this was binding, cancel the vast debt which rebellious man had contracted? Yea, if all holy intelligences in the universe had laid their offerings at the feet of the Eternal, how could they have obliterated one crime committed against God? If pardon is procured for rebels against the perfect government of God, it must be in accordance with the justice of Heaven and the claims of the divine law. If, in order to divine acceptance, a sinner must be justified through the imputed righteousness of another, that person must certainly have righteousness to impute, or the sinner must stand in all his native deformity before the eyes of infinite purity, and be driven away from the presence of a faithful God, who has affirmed that "the soul that sinneth shall die." Whether we understand how divinity dwelling in human nature could constitute a person capable of offering an infinite atonement and procuring a transferable righteousness better than any other way, this is the way revealed to us in the Bible. When Isaiah called the Messiah Immanuel, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, (or the Father of Eternity, as it may be translated,) he did not tax his understanding to comprehend it. When Paul said, "Great is the mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh," he prostrated his spirit before the divine throne, and would not allow a controversy The prophets of old, and the apostles of Jesus, based all their hopes upon the work, merits, and death of this great and mysterious personage. This person, whom angels are commanded to worship, who was worshiped by inspired men, from whose presence devils hasted away, and whose voice all nature obeyed, is called the chief corner-stone, or the key-stone of the building. Take away this stone, and the whole Christian fabric falls into ruin; in other words, we are all lost, and lost forever.

Christian brethren, hold fast this glorious doctrine, as for your life, lest you sink in the "swellings of Jordan." Oh, ye ministers of the sanctuary, let all your sermons exhibit this truth; let them be full of a divine Saviour. Oh, tell poor sinners of infinite love displayed in the God-man, Christ Jesus, dying on the cross to save a sinking world from hell, and procure for them a mansion in the skies, that their hearts way be subdued, that they may repent and live.

W—R.

SALEM, N. J.

JEWS AT ODESSA.—The Russian government has just erected at Odessa a school for Karaite Jews, a sect which admits only the written law, and which dissents from the rest of the Jews, called by them Rabbinists, who acknowledge the Talmud and the oral law. In the southern provinces of Russia there are a great many Karaites. The school was opened on the 15th of September. Religion, the Hebrew language, the Russian and French languages, arithmetic, book-keeping, the knowledge of commercial law, and penmanship, are taught in this school.

MOVEMENTS IN DELAWARE.—The Tribune says that a large meeting was held at Wilmington a few days since to mature plans for calling a convention to amend the Constitution of the State. If a convention is called, the question of providing for the final extinction of all that remains of slavery in Delaware will doubtless have to be discussed and settled. Thus in Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland, and Delaware, there are indications of hostility to slavery which bid fair to result in direct measures to procure its overthrow.

ROMAN CATHOLIC MISSIONS.

The "Annals of the Propagation of the Faith," for July, contain a long "letter of the Right Reverend Dr. Retord, Vicar-Apostolic of Western Tonquin," giving an account of his apostolic labors and successes, a few brief extracts from which will give some insight into the missionary policy and movements of Romanists. He gives an account of his success on a missionary excursion, as follows:—

"Upon the 31st of August we quitted Kenon to proceed to Kedam, a Christian congregation of nearly one thousand souls, and the central district of the parish of the same name. During the twenty days that we remained there, between us three we heard six hundred confessions and baptized twenty adults. Our efforts seemed at first a failure, but at last they were crowned with the utmost success. The greatest sinners suffered themselves to be caught in our nets, and the most dangerous spiritual maladies were healed by the unction of divine grace."

He then tells about "the edifying lives" of the nuns in the monastery of Kedam:—

"Moreover, we have founded at Kedam a new monastery, which reckons already twenty-five subjects, thus raising already to thirty the number of these establishments over the whole mission, and to six hundred and sixteen that of the Lovers of the Cross. These good daughters live for the greater part very edifying lives: they never eat meat; they fast and discipline themselves twice a week. They are very badly housed, and still worse fed. They live by the labor of their hands, cultivating a few fields, spinning cotton, and selling in the markets some medicinal pills."

These nuns not only lead "edifying lives," but "regenerate little pagan children in the water of baptism," thus transforming them into so many "little angels:"—

"They visit and console the sick, assist us in instructing the women who are admitted as catechumens, and some of them are always engaged proceeding from village to village, in search of pagan children who are at the point of death, in order to regenerate them in the water of baptism. Last year they baptized about one thousand of these little creatures, who are now so many little angels, beaming with innocence and happiness before the throne of God."

He speaks thus of his great labors and great success:—

"Mr. Titaud and myself exerted ourselves at Langdoan like angels. The mountains were brought low, the valleys filled, the crooked paths made straight, the weeds extirpated by the root, the good grain reaped, and the harvest abundant. Langdoan is one of the places where I experienced most consolation in my apostolic excursions. We heard there more than one thousand confessions, and baptized fifteen adults. Upon both feasts of All-Saints and of All-Souls I celebrated pontifical mass before a concourse of people."

In his aggregate of "sacraments administered during the year" are "4,162 baptisms of children of pagans upon the point of death," in the year 1844. He tells of the great success they met with at a place called Ke-luong, "where the inhabitants came forth in mute astonishment, in order to see him whom they called the king of religion:"—

"At the commencement of our labors appearances wore rather a chilling aspect; but a movement shortly took place; the country became electrified, and we were overwhelmed with work; we caught so many and such large fish, that our nets broke. I must state to you one of my chief means of attracting sinners. I publish and cause to be circulated, that on such a day I shall bless little children, on such another day I shall bless the village, that I shall say mass for the prosperity of the Christians of the parish, that is to say, that they may have a numerous family, that they may have a sufficient harvest of rice, that they may long enjoy good health, that they may live and die saintly. 'But know,' I say to them, 'that I do not mean to bless the children of those who refuse to observe their religious duties, nor do I mean to offer the holy Sacrifice for them.' Now, this threat terrifies them more than all the sermons; this is a blow which strikes home to the heart, and overpowers them all; for they have great faith and great confidence in the Priest's blessing, and much more so in that of the Bishop. I then keep my word and execute my promise."

He describes the rapid process by which he takes wicked pagans, and in a very short time makes them Christians, "joyful and fervent as angels:"

"I have not as yet stated to you how we manage to reclaim to God those poor Pagans who are seated in the shades of death; hear in a few words our method. I announce publicly to our Christians, that he who shall convert an idolater shall obtain a medal or cross. I exhort them to seek out for those pagans who are their acquaintances, their friends or their relations, to speak to them of the gospel, and to lend them religious books. I receive information concerning those pagans of the environs who present some hope of success; I send sometimes catechists, sometimes Christians, both men and women, to preach to them our holy truths. I cause prayers to be offered in the church for the conversion of infidels; and presently some are brought before me; then others come in succession. I place them in a family which supports them at my expense, and I station a catechist with them, in order to instruct them day and night. The rumor is soon spread, and other pagans ask of their own accord to be made Christians. When I have about ten adults well instructed and tried, I procure a white dress to be made for each of them, and when the day of baptism arrives, I announce the ceremony to the Christians with whom I am staying. I cause my catechumens to be conducted to the church with music playing, and I baptize them solemnly. On the next day I confirm them and give them holy Communion, then I make them a present of beads and a medal, and they retire joyful and fervent as angels. From that moment they become preachers, who announce religion to the other pagans, and secure us other conquests."

REAL HELP TO MEXICO.—Now that the Government has subdued the Mexicans and humbled their pride, it is well that somebody should try kindness and conciliation. The American Tract Society has sent a colporter out there to do good, and the officers of the United States stationed at Vera Cruz have asked for tracts, which have been sent and distributed in the ranchos and hospitals. They have been read with great interest, both by Mexicans and Americans; and so much gratified was the Catholic Bishop with one of the tracts, that he caused it to be printed for general circulation. Two liberal donations have been received by the Tract Society, one of $200 and the other of $500, to sustain colporters in Mexico, and one, we understand, is now on his way to Vera Cruz. Instead of bombs and grape-shot, let the efficacy of kindly intercourse and the distribution of works which shall improve their minds and warm their hearts be tried, now the fierceness of the contest is over. A few thousand dollars judiciously distributed in this way would probably bring about peace quite as quick as the use of gunpowder. At least, the effort merits the friendship and support of every good citizen. The experiment is worthy of trial. So says the New York Tribune.

KEY TO NATIONAL PROSPERITY.—At a recent meeting of a Colporter Association in Cincinnati, Rev. Dr. Beecher, in a characteristic address, remarked that Napoleon once said to one of his generals, on the eve of a most important battle, that the battle was fought, and the victory won. He meant that he had the key to the battle, and he knew how to turn it. So, said Dr. B., I feel that I have got the key. This great battle is fought, and the victory is ours. Here is the key in what we have heard here to-night. This colporter work is the key to this great battle. I have looked upon the masses of Germans, rushing like an avalanche upon this land, till I trembled and my heart grew faint. Prof. Stowe and I have often considered the matter, and have been on the point of sending circulars to the evangelical ministers of Germany among us. And now God is converting these Germans in their own land and here too, and driving them away by persecution, that they may come over here and work among their countrymen.

DR. JUDSON IN BURMAH.—It is said, in a letter to the Christian Chronicle, dated August 12, that Dr. and Mrs. Judson had permission to proceed to Ava, the capital of the Burman Empire, and were preparing to go, when, by returns from Maulmain, they learned that remittances from the Board were 1,000 rupees, about $500, short of meeting necessary demands; which left, for their support, only 17 rupees a month; hence they must wait or return to Maulmain until more funds came. There had been much sickness in Rangoon; Dr. Judson and the children had been very ill. Spies were set upon them, and their disciples no longer dared congregate for worship. Mrs. Judson says: "We do not feel that our coming to Rangoon has been in vain—we go not back to Maulmain empty-handed; the two young men that the Dr. baptized here, go with us to pursue studies in reference to preaching the everlasting gospel to their benighted countrymen."

LAW vs. DIVINITY.—It was stated by a minister of a New York church a few weeks ago, in the pulpit, that the number of students in one of the principal colleges of the country, which has furnished a larger proportion than any other of ministers of the gospel, who have graduated for the ministry for the last two or three years, has not been half so great as in previous years, and that the number of those who graduated for the profession of the law has proportionally increased; and that, on inquiry, a similar state of things is found to exist in the other colleges of the United States.

THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—This society has recently fitted out two colporters with a boat-load of tracts and religious books, for distribution among the boatmen and travelers on the Tennessee and Mississippi rivers. The boat will be under the colporters' own direction, and they will touch, as they may see fit, at the various landing places on the way to New Orleans. It is said that the society, since the 1st of April, has issued publications to the amount of $136,000.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for November has been republished by Leonard Scott & Co., 70 Fulton-st. The following is its table of contents. The Navigation of the Antipodes—American Copyright—Evenings at Sea, No. 2 Was Rubens a Colorist?—The American Library—Units, Tens, Hundreds, Thousands—Research and Adventure in Australia—Magus Muir—A November Morning's Reverie—Valedictory Visits at Rome—Highland Destitution.

☞ The January number of the Youth's Cabinet lies before us, and a beautiful thing it is. It opens with a splendid steel engraving of the Editor, Rev. Francis C. Woodworth, and contains besides more than a dozen original cuts, in the study of which grown-up children, as well as the real little folks, might find amusement and instruction. We do not know of a magazine of the kind which furnishes better evidence of diligence and taste on the part of both editor and publisher. The third volume begins with the new year, rendering the present a favorable time to subscribe. Published by D. Austin Woodworth, 135 Nassau-st., N. Y.

RELIGION AND FIGHTING.

Just before the new regiment of volunteers from Nashville, Tennessee, started for Mexico, a great meeting was held for the purpose of presenting them with a banner. The Reverend C. D. Elliott delivered a speech on the occasion, of which the following is a report. Who can read it, and then look at the real history of the Mexican war, withont blushing that a man calling himself a minister of Christ should dare to use such language? To talk about our army "seeking peace" is a perfect burlesque:—

"How can an American look upon this scene and not exult? Before me are brave men, ready and willing to dare anything—to die—for the honor of their country. Around me are the fair daughters of Tennessee, with their smiles and benediction, eager to cheer and bless their noble countrymen. Thus it should be, and while it is thus, our country can but remain free, prosperous and happy. I will make to you one remark—I make it as a minister of the Religion of your country. Whatever else the future historian may write in regard to this war, he will certainly write, in connection with it, one of the brightest pages written in our history or in the history of any nation enlightened by the sun—it will be this—before each battle we have said to our implacable foe, 'give us peace,' in the moment of victory, before the echo of our cannons died away, the same—'give us peace.' No man doubts but this offer has been made in sincertiy. This is 'seeking peace and pursuing it,' and hence is fulfilling the command of God; and my faith is that no individual—no nation—obeying the commands of God, can fail of glorious success in the end. We now entreat you all, when far away in a hostile country, also to have respect for the precepts and commands of our holy religion. From many a consecrated home, and from pious ministers, will ascend daily prayers that God may protect you all.

"And now, in conclusion, we, as a minister of the religion of your country, with a heart free to the deed and full of its solemn import, do invoke the blessing of the God of Washington upon your Colonel—upon you all. Should any fall, may He be nigh in the great Redeemer, to save: and if his will, may you all be restored to your happy homes and loving friends and families.'

ARRIVAL OF MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.—A letter from Rev. Mr. Dean to the editor of the New York Recorder, dated Hong Kong, August 18, says that the following missionaries had arrived at that port within a month:—

Per Ashantee, July 25.
Mr. and Mrs. Shuck,	(Southern Bap. Con.)	for Shanghai.
Mr. and Mrs. Toby,	" "	"
Mr. Johnson,	" "	Canton.
Mr. Spalding,	(Am. Epis. Society)	Shanghai.
Per Hugh Walker, July 27.
Mr. and Mrs. Hobson,	(Lon. Miss. Society)	Hongkong.
Dr. Hiershberg,	" "	"
Miss Selmer,	(Soc. Fem. Education)	Ningpo.
Per Heber, August 14.
Mr. and Mrs. Doty,	(A. B. C. F. M.)	Amoy.
Mr. Talmage,	"	"
Mr. and Mrs. White,	(Am. Methodist)	Fu-Chau.
Mr. Collins,	"	"
Per T. W. Sears, August 17.
Mr. and Mrs. Yates,	(Southern Bap. Con.)	Shanghai.

RELIGION IN PRUSSIA.—The Jewish Chronicle publishes a letter from Rev. Mr. Hirschell, a native of Germany, and a converted Jew, who labored in this country for a while as a missionary among the Jews. The following is a paragraph from his letter:—

"The state of the Church in Prussia is very remarkable just now. There are three distinct parties. 1st. The Orthodox, who hold by positive Christianity; and with this they hold very strongly the principle of a Church Establishment; and, I am sorry to say, they think far too favorably of Romanism, owing to their great dread of Rationalism. 2. There is a moderate or middle party, who have a strong desire for religious independency—state support, but no state interference, is their cry! Their religious views rather lean toward Orthodox, but their hatred to Popery and desire for spiritual freedom, make them lean toward the Rationalists. These are strong and very numerous, and with them the great conflict begins; for the King must take measures to turn them out of the Established Church, and this will bring the whole Prussian system into a state of revolution."

RELIGION IN GERMANY.—Dr. F. W. Krummacher, in a recent number of his "Palmblatter," states that the theology of Germany, which for so long a time has persisted almost wholly in denying the fundamental truths of Christianity, is now approaching a purer faith, and becoming reconciled with the Gospel. In nearly all her great Universities, the science of true theology is making rapid advances.

LIFE OF BUNYAN.—Lewis Colby & Co., of 122 Nassau-st., have just published "The Life of John Bunyan, Author of the Pilgrim's Progress, compiled from his own writings, and from other authentic sources, by Ira Chase, D. D." It is a neat little volume of 166 pages, and contains the pith and soul of Bunyan's biography of himself, as recorded in Grace Abounding.

JEWISH CONGRESS.—A Congress of reformists Israelites was to meet in the course of the last month, at Berlin, Prussia, to discuss questions relative to exterior worship, and to the reforms of which Judaism may be susceptible, in accordance to the wants of the age.

"AN HOUR IS NOTHING TO YOU."—Having some business to transact with a gentleman in the city, I called one day at his counting house; he begged I would call again, as I had much more time to spare than he had, who was a man of business. "An hour is nothing to you," said he. "An hour nothing to a clergyman!" said I; "you seem little to understand the nature of our profession. One hour of a clergyman's time rightly employed, sir, is worth more to him than all the gains of your merchandize."

General Intelligence.

WAR NEWS.

The news received from the seat of war since our last is of very little importance.

Nothing positive is known of the whereabouts of Santa Anna. Many believe he is secreted near Vera Cruz, waiting an opportunity to ship off in a British steamer. The Arco Iris of the 28th states that he had arrived at Orizaba with 1,500 ragged followers, but gives no hints of his future movements.

The Mexican Congress at Queretaro has removed to the City of Morelia, (the ancient Valadolid,) now Capital of the State of Michoacan. It appears that at Queretaro they were always threatened by a new revolution, and, therefore, they wanted a safe place to deliberate with all the independence and freedom that they require.

A revolution had broken out at Guadalaxara, in favor of the election of Farias to the Presidency. A sanguinary engagement ensued between his troops and a mob headed by Priests. In the action Gen. Ampudia, and many others of Farias' party, were killed. The Church party was victorious. Paredes is at Tulancingo, and has openly pronounced in favor of Monarchy, seconded by the garrison at Mazatlan. Some of the Mexicans have still an unquenchable hatred for the Americans, and express no desire for peace.

PROPELLER PHŒNIX—250 LIVES LOST.

The Buffalo papers of Monday confirm the previous reports of the burning of the Propeller Phœnix on Lake Michigan, on Sunday, the 21st ult., and, what is worse, represent the loss of life to have been even greater than was stated in the first accounts. We copy the following particulars from the Buffalo Express:—

Capt. Robinson, of the schooner Ontonagon, which arrived at this port on Sunday, saw and conversed with the Mate of the Phœnix, who is on board the Propeller Delaware, and gathered from him the following particulars: On Sunday, the 21st ult., the Propeller Phœnix, having on board some 200 men, women, and children, emigrant passengers, mostly from Holland, beside the crew of about 30 persons, and forty cabin passengers, bound for Chicago, made Maintowoc Bay, Lake Michigan, in heavy weather, for shelter from the gale.

She let go her anchors, but the sea was so heavy that she dragged them, and to save themselves from shipwreck she put out to sea again. She had proceeded to within about 15 miles of Sheboygan, being about equally distant from that place and Maitowoc, and about six miles off shore, when a fire was discovered in her hold. Every effort was made to extinguish it, and with good success. But the vessel seemed doomed to destruction, for they had no sooner mastered the fire in the hold, than it broke out between decks, having been communicated from the boilers. The wind was quite fresh and blowing directly on shore, which accounts for her being so far off land. Capt. Sweet was confined to his berth by sickness, and the command devolved upon the first mate. The greatest terror and confusion ensued on the second appearance of fire, and all hope of saving the vessel was soon abandoned. A rush was then made for the small boat, when Mr. David Bliss, of Southport, with great presence of mind and determination of purpose, ordered and drove them away from the boat, directing the mate to take possession of it and lower it away. He then took Capt. Sweet from his room, and placed him in the boat, when he directed some twenty others to follow, and the boat left the propeller for the shore—Mr. Bliss himself remaining behind.

The propeller Delaware hove in sight about the time that the boat left, and new hopes were raised on board that she might reach them in time to save them from destruction; but it was a vain hope. The boat that left for shore arrived in safety; but before the Delaware could come up with the burning vessel, she had sunk, and all on board, except two picked up, had perished, either by fire or flood. Mr. Bliss fell a victim to his efforts to save others—he being among the lost.

This calamity involves a greater destruction of human life than has ever occurred, in one event, upon these waters. Most of those on board were foreigners, and their loss will not be realized; but still it is a dreadful catastrophe which carries to destruction, in so short a time, more than 200 human beings, with so small a chance for escape as appears upon this occasion. Only 30 saved from some 270 persons.

☞ Later accounts represents the loss of life by the burning of the Phœnix as still greater than above stated. Mr. Donohue, the clerk, says that there were on board 175 Hollanders, large and small, and about 100 other passengers, and 25 of the crew, making in all 300 persons—45 is all saved, 255 lost. When the Delaware left on her downward passage, in passing in the track where the burning vessel was found, she fell in with many floating bodies, to the number of about 100. Some of them were standing upright in the water, some of the women were lying on their sides, some—the children generally—on their faces. Some of the passengers were in full dress, some in undress, and others entirely naked—all with their heads to the northward.

Steamer Sunk and Lives Lost.—On the morning of Nov. 19, between Pittsburg and St. Louis, a collision took place between the steamers Talisman and Tempest, by which the former was sunk to the hurricane deck. There were on board a large number of farmers and their families, emigrating to the Upper Missouri and Mississippi country, of whom many were lost, but how many accounts differ. One account says more than one hundred were lost. Another account, on the authority of the Clerk of the boat, says that about thirty-five were lost, principally women and children.

Martin Luther said: "Wealth is the Smallest gift of God; what is it to be compared with his word, or corporeal gifts, such as beauty, health and activity? What is it to the gifts of the mind, such as intellect, science and taste? And again he said truly: "God commonly gives riches to cross asses, to whom he can afford nothing else."

CHOLERA.

The steady advance of the cholera westward has induced Mr. William Herapath, of Bristol, to publish for the public benefit the results of his chemical experiments on the nature of the infection during the visitation in 1832. Mr. Herapath gives reasons why the recently-discovered disinfectants will be of no avail in grappling with this particular form of infection.

"For some time I attended almost daily at the cholera hospitals, and experimented in every way I could think of, upon the dead and living subjects, their contents and ejecta, the atmosphere surrounding them, and their articles of clothing. The conclusions I arrived at I forward for the information of those who have not had the same opportunities.

"1. That the cause of cholera is a putrid animal poison, capable of being recognized by the smell by some, emanating from and surrounding the dead or living cholera subject or articles of clothing.

"2. That it is not sulphuretted hydrogen or hydrosulphuret of ammonia, as it does not decompose salts of lead or zinc, and when passed through nitrate of silver it only forms a red solution when exposed to light.

"3. That it is only received into the living body through the lungs, and cannot be propagated by inoculation.

"4. That infection can be conveyed by articles of clothing, bedding, &c.; and that washerwomen are more subject to infection than ordinary persons from that cause.

"5. That all persons are not equally liable to infection from equal exposure, and even the same individual becomes more sensitive under certain circumstances.

"6. That the poison is destroyed by chlorine gas and a heat of 300 degrees Fahrenheit.

"As the object of the present communication is merely to give the public opinion a right direction so as to help the future boards of health to combat this insidious and powerful enemy, I must at once state that the two most popular disinfectants of the day—the chloride of zinc and the nitrate of lead, known as Sir W. Burnet's and Ledoyen's—will be of no avail, although they will promptly remove ordinary putrid effluvia. The only chemical preventative I depended upon in my numerous exposures to the virus, was chlorine gas; and this I believe to be a perfect one if the fumigation is complete. I invariably passed through an atmosphere of it on my return home, and kept it escaping in my residence during the continuance of the disease in the city. I also placed large quantities of the substance necessary for the evolution of this gas in the hands of a Bristol druggist, who was kind enough to distribute 1,200 quantities of it gratuitously to applicants during three days, with instructions for the use; and I am happy to say, that, during that time, the deaths fell from ten to one per day; and I have but little doubt, that if every ship arriving in England from an infected place should be exposed to a perfect fumigation with chlorine, we shall be preserved from the infection. If the disease should pass this cordon by any accident, then, every house in the infected district should be simultaneously fumigated with it—say three times a day; unless done in all houses at the same time, it would be useless, or nearly so; and to do it effectually, a mixture of three parts of common salt and one of black oxide of manganese should be placed just inside the outer or street door of the dwelling-house, and a little common vitriol poured upon it. The inward current of air will convey the chlorine gas to every part of the interior; and wherever it can be smelt the effect is produced—the miasm is destroyed. If articles of clothing are infected, and the colors are likely to be injured by the gas, they may be heated in an oven or in a kiln, to 250 or 300 degrees, (about the heat of baking bread,) when they might be handled or used with perfect impunity."

SUMMARY.

The following list of new counterfeits is from Thompson's Bank Note Reporter: 2s on the Bank of Kentucky; 5s on the Hampden Bank, Westfield, Massachusetts; 10s on the Mechanics' Bank, South Boston; 2s on the Warren Bank, Danvers, Mass.,—this is a counterfeit of the old plate; 3s on the Chemical Bank, N. Y.; 1s on the Ballston Spa Bank, N. Y.; 1s on the Sussex Bank, N. J.; 5s on the Kensington Bank, Philadelphia; 10s on the Randolph Bank, Mass.; 5s on the Middletown Bank, N. Y.; 3s on the Chicopee Bank, Mass.; 1s on the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, Philadelphia; 5s on the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, Rochester; 1s on the Smithfield Exchange Bank.

The Somerset (N. J.) Whig says that a young man at May's Landing, Atlantic County, some time ago, was bitten, along with several other persons, by a dog supposed to be rabid, but as the wounds soon healed and no unfavorable symptoms appeared, he anticipated no farther trouble or danger. But on Saturday, the 23d of November, he began to complain, in the course of two days became completely frantic, and on Wednesday morning died—being just about six weeks from the time he was bitten.

Last Thursday was the first day fixed upon by the Direators for receiving applications for the admission of orphans into Girard College, and we understand that a very large number were presented. The Directors will meet on the 15th inst., to elect a President, Matron, Steward, and Teachers of the Institution; and the College will be opened on the 1st of January for the reception of orphans, under the provisions of Mr. Girard's Will.

The amount received for Canal Tolls at the Collector's Office in Albany, from the commencement of navigation to the 1st of December, during the year 1846 and 1847, is as follows:

1846	$263,551 03
1847	358,067 72
Showing an increase of over 35 per cent. being	$94, 516 69

We learn from the Portsmouth (N. H.) Journal, that the grand desideratum of applying steam and water power to propel common stocking looms, on which vast sums of money and much time have been unsuccessfully spent in England, has at length been discovered—and three common looms, with slight variations, are now in successful operation in that town, and operate better than the most sanguine expectations of the inventor had anticipated.

The Scientific American says that Mr. Richard F. Loper, of Philadelphia, has made an important improvement in ship building, whereby he uses hollow iron ribs, instead of timber, or solid iron ones, and binds them together by wooden planking, thereby combining strength with buoyancy and lightness. The ribs being hollow, he uses them as canals to lubricate the bolts and fastenings by pouring oil through the hollow ribs, thereby preventing the rotting of planks and oxidization of the metal.

The Apalachicola Advocate contains a communication, setting forth the feasibility of uniting the waters of the Gulf with those of the Atlantic. The writer says a ship canal 47 miles long, connecting the Wathlacochee river on the Gulf side, with the St. Johns, which flows into the Atlantic, will accomplish the object. The expense of such an undertaking is estimated at $500,000. There can be no question as to the advantages of such a work.

The Providence Journal describes a horse collar which has been invented in England which must be regarded as a very great improvement. It consists of a tube of India rubber or other suitable substance, inflated with air like a life preserver. Its advantage is that it fits the horse exactly, easily, and without undue pressure upon any part, and leaves the breast and joints of the fore legs free from galling and sudden pressure to which the common collar subjects them.

The best composition that can be prepared to relieve carriage wheels and machinery from friction, is composed of hog's lard, wheat flour, and black lead (plumbago.) The lard is to be melted over a gentle fire, and the other ingredients—equal in weight—may be added, till the composition is brought to a consistence of paste, without raising the heat near the boiling point. One trial of the paste will satisfy any one of its superior quality.

A Coroner's inquest was held at Toronto, on the 4th inst., on the body of William Paris Vincent, who died suddenly of delirium tremens. The Jury rendered the following verdict: "That the said William Paris Vincent, on the 3d day of November, departed this life by delirium tremens, induced by habits of excessive drinking; and they [the Jury] consider Mr. Sutherland highly blameable in supplying him with wines in large quantities within the last ten days, he knowing the young man's previous habits."

A meeting of the descendants of the late Holland Weeks of Salisbury, Vt., was held on the 22d of September. Eighty of the family attended, who are all the descendants of John Alden, the first Pilgrim whose foot touched Pilgrim Rock. These meetings have been held occasionally for more than a century; and one of their objects is to keep the genealogy perfect, from the landing of the Pilgrims in New-England to the latest posterity. The list, by the way, is soon to be published, and already amounts to more than 4,000 names.

Henry Cobb, of Boston, has obtained a divorce from his wife Augusta, she having been converted to the 'spiritual wife' doctrines of a portion of the Mormons and gone to live with Brigham Young, who claims to be the legitimate successor of Joe Smith. Elder Adams, theatrical performer and preacher, who was formerly connected with the Mormon sect and one of their 'great guns,' was the principal witness against Mrs. Cobb.

It is proposed to construct a Plank Road from Schenectady to Saratoga Springs, by way of Ballston. Books of subscription will be opened on the first of December. Such a road cannot fail to be advantageous to the business interests of that city, as well as to the towns through which it may pass, and a good investment to the stockholders.

In many of the British West India Islands, including Jamaica, Barbadoes and Trinidad, the planters are taking vigorous measures to induce the Home Government to afford them protection for their great staple, sugar, by levying duties on the sugar raised in other countries by slave labor. The prospect of success is rather dubious.

We learn from the London Morning Herald, that the project of uniting the Mediterranean and Red Sea is about to be executed. The Viceroy of Egypt, having been baffled by the jealousies of the great European Powers, in his attempts to secure their co-operation in this great work, appealed to private enterprise and interest. The response has been satisfactory. A joint company of capitalists and merchants of London, Paris, and Vienna, has been formed, and their agents by this time have reached the theatre of projected operations.

In the Maine Circuit Court of the United States, in the case of Levi Brown vs. Wellington Burnett, the jury returned a verdict of $300 for the plaintiff. The defendant was charged with having enticed away two workmen who were under a written contract to work for the plaintiff for two years.

Mr. Whitney addressed the Legislature of Georgia on the 16th ult., upon his great project for connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by railroad. He asked the passage of resolutions approving his plan. These were passed in the House without dissent, and in the Senate after a long debate.

A distressing accident occurred at Scotch Plains, N. J., with a fowling piece—a young man named Wiggins being fatally wounded in the face and brain in consequence of the gun being fired by contact with a stick of wood.

103 hogsheads of adulterated wine were lately brought out from the entrepot at Paris, and their contents spilt into the Seine. "Immediately after this operation (says an eye witness) the surface of the river was covered to the distance of 200 yards with an innumerable quantity of fishes, poisoned by the deleterious liquor."

We learn from the Detroit Free Press, that the State Departments will be removed from Detroit to Michigan City about the middle of December, at which time the Capitol will be ready.

The November term of the Boston Municipal Court was brought to a close on Saturday. The fines and costs for violations of the license law, paid in by defendants during the term, amounted to $1,182 52.

At the suggestion of the Hon. Capt. Owen, R. N., Mr. Robert Wallace, brass founder, recently constructed a brass trumpet, about five feet long, with a bell mouth, the latter two feet eight inches in diameter. This instrument is fitted tightly on the end of a loaded musket, on the discharge of which a very loud noise is produced, similar to that resulting from a cannon of a large calibre. Such an instrument must prove to be useful and economical, on board of ships and at light-house stations, for the purpose of making signals in foggy weather, or in the night time, or upon occasions of distress.

A Telegraphic Dispatch from Boston to the Herald, says that Capt. Whelden, of the schr. Aben Atkins, from Cape Haytien, 14th ult., reports that information had been received at that place, that the Haytien man-of-war bark Nautilus had been blown up in the harbor of Port-au-Prince, killing ninety persons. No farther particulars given.

The State of Georgia has prosecuted with great steadiness and enterprise her system of railroads until now the main line from Atalanta has nearly reached the Tennessee river. This connection will soon be completed, and when finished, with other works now in progress, the investment of Georgia in railroads will not fall short of fifteen millions of dollars.

Mr. Russel made a speech on the occasion of the celebration of the Northern Railroad Company, in which he quoted the following prophecy from the prophet Nahum, ch. 2, v. 4: "The chariots shall rage in the streets; they shall jostle one against the other in the broadways; they shall seem like torches; they shall run like lightning."

It is supposed from the best information that can be obtained that the number of lives lost by the wreck of the Talisman on the Mississippi was at least 75. All of those who perished were deck passengers, except a young lady and gentleman recently married.

The St. Louis Republican of a late date says: "Seventeen hundred letters were received, on the 17th, at our Post-Office, from Santa Fé. This looks as if New-Mexico were one of our provinces, indeed!"

Mrs. Crawford said she wrote one line in her 'Kathleen Mavourneen,' for the express purpose of confounding the cockney warblers, who sing it thus: 'The orn of the unter is eard on the ill;' but Moore had laid the same trap in the 'Woodpecker,' 'A art that is umble might ope for it ere.'

Refuse all bills on the New-Haven Bank, dated anterior to this date. The Bank is about issuing new bills of all denominations; they can be distinguished from the old ones by a circular die of "the Sabbath in Quinnipiac, 1638."

The Court of Appeals ajourned on Wednesday last, after having ordered that the Terms of the Court for the year 1848, be held as follows: At Albany on the first Tuesday of April; at Rochester on the first Tuesday of June; and at Syracuse on the first Tuesday of October.

The Washington Whig announces that Mr. Clay proposes to visit Washington this Winter, and that he will probably arrive about the 23d inst. He goes for the purpose of attending the session of the Supreme Court, in which he has professional engagements.

On Friday evening a telegraphic dispatch was received in Philadelphia from the banks of the Wabash! The Western line is now working in an unbroken connection from Philadelphia to Vincennes, Indiana, a distance of nine hundred miles!

The men employed in digging the foundation of the new church at Jerusalem had to make their way through forty feet of remains of ancient buildings, before they came to the solid ground.

In Tiverton, on the 16th, Jerome B. son of Mr. Silas Manchester, 2 1-2 years of age, fell over a chair, bit his tongue, and bled to death. He lived about 24 hours after the accident.

A clergyman assigned as a reason for preaching an old sermon on Thanksgiving day, that his people had neglected to give him a turkey.

It is stated from official documents, that there are but 31,000 slaveholders in Kentucky, in a population of 275,000 whites over 21 years of age.

A gentleman named Ridgeway, from Staffordshire, Eng., has established a manufactory of china and queensware on the Big Sandy River, in Virginia, within a mile and a half of the Ohio.

In the middle ages, in France, a person convicted of being a calumniator was condemned to place himself on all-fours, and bark like a dog, for a quarter of an hour.

Pope Pius has issued a declaration against the New Irish Colleges. The reason given is that the professors are not exclusively of the Romish Church.

The cars now run through from Baltimore to Philadelphia in the short space of five hours and a half.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, DEC 5.

ASHES—Pots $5 62. Pearls 7 50.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 37; Oswego and Ohio 6 25. Meal, Jersey 3 50, State 3 37, Western 3 25

GRAIN—Prime Genesee Wheat 1 42; Wisconsin, Michigan, and Illinois 1 30. Corn 70 a 76c. Rye 89c. Barley 75c. Oats 48c.

PROVISIONS—The Pork market is completely unsettled, so that it is hardly possible to state a price. In Beef and Beef Hams there is very little doing. Lard is declining, and sold for 9½c. Butter and Cheese dull at former quotations.

MARRIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., Nov. 30, by Eld. S. S. Griswold, Mr. John Cundall and Miss Harriet E. Babcock, daughter of Jacob Babcock, Esq.

DIED,

At Mystic Bridge, Conn., November 29, Miss Lucy Marie Champlin, in the 21st year of her age.

"Thou art gone to the grave; but we will not deplore thee;
Since God was thy Ransom, thy Guardian, thy Guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore thee;
And death has no sting, since the Saviour has died."

☞ Money is greatly needed at this office about these days. Will our friends who have not yet made their remittances for the current volume, bear the fact in mind, and act accordingly? If there is an agent in your neighborhood, just hand the money to him at once, without waiting to be called upon. But if there is no agent near you, send the money directly to us by mail, and it may come at our risk. Prompt attention to this request would save us a great deal of trouble.

Gems for the Mind and the Heart.

R. HOWLAND Sc

THE YOUTH'S CABINET,

EDITED BY

REV. FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH,

Is a Repository, as its name imports, presenting the richest literary attractions for the young. The contents are mostly original, and unwearied pains are bestowed upon the editorial department. It aspires to be, both in the character of its articles and in its mechanical execution, a model of taste and excellence; and it is universally conceded that it stands at the head of all works of its class. The third volume commences in January, 1848; and the increasing popularity of the magazine warrants the publisher in promising that this volume shall be than either of the preceding ones. Several new contributors are engaged, among whom are T. S. Arthur and Prof. Alden, whose stories for the young are excelled by no writer in the country.

MORE VALUABLE IN EVERY RESPECT

YEARLY SUBSCRIPTION, $1 ONLY.

Great inducements are offered to those who take the work in clubs, and

NOW IS THE TIME TO FORM CLUBS

for the new volume. The initial or January number is now ready It contains

A SPLENDID PORTRAIT ON STEEL,

and a great variety of Engravings on Wood, prepared expressly for the Cabinet. These engravings alone cost more than 200 DOLLARS.

A large edition of the initial number is published, to supply the demand of non-subscribers, as it is prepared with especial reference to the holidays, and is intended to be

THE HOLIDAY NUMBER.

This Number is the most splendid thing of its kind ever issued in this country.

☞ Price of a single copy of the holiday number, 12½ cents; 10 copies $1.

The money can be enclosed in a letter to the publisher, post-age paid. A quarter of a dollar can be sent in an envelope, for single postage.

The yearly volume, for 1848, besides containing nearly 400 large octavo pages of the choicest reading, with appropriate music, will be richer in pictorial embellishments than any of its contemporaries, whether they appear in an original American costume, or in one borrowed from the other side of the Atlantic.

The voice of the public press, so universally and so warmly expressed, is certainly indicative that this magazine has won its way to a high place in popular favor. The publisher selects two or three of these notices, as a specimen of more than a hundred:

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"This magazine is a model which we could wish were followed by all works of its class. It is serious without dullness or melancholy; cheerful, but not frivolous; religious, but neither sectarian nor dogmatical; while it unites very happily the winning grace of familiarity with the dignity of self-respect."—N. Y. Daily Tribune.

"It abounds in precious gems, and seldom appears without a good supply of solid and valuable ores."—New Orleans Obs.

"We do not know of a more elegant and beneficial work for the young."—Noah's Weekly Mess.

"It is beautifully illustrated, and evinces great ability and interest. The editor has a fine tact for such a work."—N. Y. Evang.

"If any of our juvenile friends wish for a magazine which is entertaining, and richly worth its cost, here it is. We do not know a better work for their purpose."—Mother's Journal, N. Y.

"The editor is one of our best writers for the young."—N. Y. Com. Adv.

"The articles are original, and the tone fresh and lively."—N. Y. Christ. Enquirer.

"We can but express again our high opinion of this monthly."—N. Y. Christ. Adv. & Jour.

"It is universally admitted that the Cabinet is one of the most entertaining, instructive, and salutary periodicals for children."—N. Y. Christ. Intell.

"Its editor goes to work the right way to make children happy, by imparting useful knowledge, and interesting them in whatever is good and beautiful."—Charter Oak, Hartford, Conn.

TERMS—TO SUBSCRIBERS IN CLUBS.

4 copies,	one year,	in advance,	$3 00
7 copies,	"	"	5 00
10 copies,	"	"	7 00
15 copies,	"	"	10 00

☞ The money can be safely sent by mail. The publisher will pay the postage on orders of $3 and upwards. ☜

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE CABINET.

In preparing the monthly numbers, great pains are taken to make a tasteful and excellent volume for the library. In this particular the Youth's Cabinet has, as yet, no imitators; and it is believed that in no other compass can be found, in so convenient and elegant a form, and for the same expense, such an amount of entertaining knowledge, as in the yearly volumes of this work. They are provided with a copious index, and are particularly adapted to school libraries. Those interested in common schools, are invited to examine them with this view.

THE SECOND VOLUME, FOR 1847,

is now ready, and may be had separately, or in connection with the first. It is complete in itself, and cannot fail to be among the most popular things in the way of

A JUVENILE KEEPSAKE.

The publisher assures his patrons that there shall be no delay in filling their orders, as there was, unavoidably, last season. A much larger edition is bound.

PRICES, SEPARATELY OR TOGETHER.

In muslin,	$1 25—the two volumes,	$2 25
In gilt edges,	1 50—the two volumes,	2 75
Mail edition,	1 00—4 volumes,	3 00

Both volumes in muslin, and one year's subscription, $3 00.

POSTAGE FREE.

☞ The mail edition can be sent to any part of the United States, for only 16 cents postage. Those who remit $2 for two copies, shall receive the same, postage free.

AGENTS WANTED.

Several gentlemen of ability and good address are wanted, to obtain subscribers for the magazine, and to sell the bound volumes. Applications should be accompanied with responsible testimonials as to character, and all letters post-paid. The best inducements will be offered to good agents. A small capital of some $25 is necessary, to be invested in bound volumes, which find a ready sale. This is the best season for the agency.

☞ Postmasters are authorized to act as agents, and may avail themselves of the premiums offered above, or reserve 25 per cent. of the monies collected of new subscribers. Specimens sent gratis. Address

D. A. WOODWORTH, Publisher,
Clinton Hall, New York

☞ Editors of newspapers, who receive this advertisement marked, and who will give it three conspicuous insertions, shall be entitled to the two volumes of the Cabinet, richly bound in gilt, and a year's subscription.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

Miscellaneous.

From the Southern Churchman.

THE PARSON GOING TO MILL.

The parson sat in his house one day,
While wintry storms did rage;
High-rapt, he drank in lofty thought
From Hooker's classic page.
But as he sat, an holy dream
Into his heart did steal,
His sweet wife opened the door and said,
"My dear, we have no meal!"

With saddened brow and heavy sigh
He laid aside his book,
And with a meek, despairing eye,
Upon the earth did look.
"My people think that I must break
To them the bread of heaven.
But they 'll not give me bread enough
Three whole days out of seven."

But hunger is a serious thing,
And it is sad to hear
Sweet children's mournful cry for bread
Loud ringing in your ear.
So straight he mounted his old horse,
With meek and chastened will,
And on his meal-bag, patched and coarse,
He journeyed to the mill.

The miller bowed to him, and said,
"Sir, by your tall church steeple,
I truly give you praise for this,
But none to your church people."
The parson mounted his old horse,
He had no time to lag,
And journeyed like a hero home,
Upon his old meal bag.

But as he rode, he overtook
A proud and wealthy layman,
Who, with a close, astonished gaze,
The parson's bag did scan.
"My reverend friend, the truth to tell,
It makes me feel quite wroth,
To see you compromise this way
The honor of your cloth.

"Why told you not, my honored friend,
Your meal was running low?
What will the neighbors think of us,
If to the mill you go?"
"My wealthy friend," the parson said,
"You must not reason so;
For 'tis a fixed and settled thing,
My meal is always low.

"If my dear people wish to know
How to promote my bliss,
I'll simply say, a bag of meal
Will never come amiss;
Just keep the store-room well supplied,
And I will be right still;
But if my meal give out again,
Then I must go to mill."

Laymen! it needs no miracle,
No hard, laborious toil,
To make the parson's meal-bag like
The widow's cruise of oil.
Pour forth into his wife's store-room
Your gifts right plentiful;
The miracle is simply this,
To keep it always full.

THE SOFT ANSWER.

BY T. S. ARTHUR

"I'll give him law to his heart's content, the scoundrel!" said Singleton, walking backward and forward, in an angry state of excitement.

"Don't call harsh names, Mr. Singleton," said lawyer Trueman, looking up from the mass of papers before him, and smiling in a quiet, benevolent way, that was peculiar to him.

"Every man should be known by his true name. Williams is a scoundrel, and so he ought to be called!" responded the client, with increasing warmth.

"Did you ever do a reasonable thing in your life when you were angry?" asked Mr. Trueman, whose age and respectability gave him the license to speak thus freely to his young friend, for whom he was endeavoring to arrange some business difficulty with his former partner.

"I can't say that I ever did, Mr. Trueman; but now, I have good reason for being angry, and the language I use, in reference to Williams, is but the expression of a sober and rational conviction," replied Singleton a little more calmly.

"Did you pronounce him a scoundrel before you received this reply to your last letter?" asked Mr. Trueman.

"No, I did not; but that letter confirmed my previously formed impression of his character."

"But I cannot find, in that letter, any evidence proving your late partner to be a dishonest man. He will not agree to your proposed mode of settlement, because he does not see it to be the most proper way."

"He won't agree to it, because it is an honest and equitable mode of settlement, that is all! He wants to over-reach me, and is determined to do so if he can!" responded Mr. Singleton, still excited.

"There you are decidedly wrong," said the lawyer. "You have both allowed yourselves to become angry, and are both unreasonable; and if I must speak plainly, I think you are the most unreasonable, in the present case. Two angry men can never settle any business properly. You have unnecessarily increased the difficulties in the way of a speedy settlement, by writing Mr. Williams an angry letter, which he has responded to in the like unhappy temper. Now, if I am to settle this business for you, I must write all letters that pass to Mr. Williams, in future."

"But how can you properly express my views and feelings?"

"That I do not wish to do, if your views and feelings are to remain as they now are—for anything like an adjustment of the difficulties, under such circumstances, I should consider hopeless," replied Mr. Trueman.

"Well, let me answer this letter, and after that, I promise that you shall have your own way."

"No, I shall consent to no such thing. It is the reply to that lettter which is to modify the negotiation for a settlement, in such a way as to bring success or failure; and I have no idea of allowing you, in the present state of your mind, to write such an one as will most assuredly defeat an amicable adjustment."

Singleton paused for some time before making a reply. He had been forming in his mind a most cutting and bitter rejoinder to the letter just alluded to, and he was very desirous that Mr. Williams should have the benefit of knowing that he thought him a "tricky and deliberate scoundrel," with other opinions of a similar character. He found it, therefore, impossible to let the unimpassioned Mr. Trueman write this most important epistle.

"Indeed, I must write this letter, Mr. Trueman," he said. "There are some things that I want to say to him, which I know you won't write. Yot don't seem to consider the position in which he has placed me by that letter, nor what is obligatory upon me, as a man of honor. I never allow any man to reflect upon me, directly or indirectly, without a prompt response."

"There is, in the Bible," said Mr. Trueman, "a passage that is peculiarly applicable in the present case. It is this—'A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger.' I have found this precept, in a life that has numbered more than double your years, to be one that may be safely and honorably adopted, in all cases. You blame Mr. Williams for writing you an angry letter, and are indignant at certain expressions contained therein. Now, is it any more right for you to write an angry letter, with cutting epithets, than it is for him?"

"But, Mr. Trueman"——

"I do assure you, my young friend," said the lawyer, interrupting him, "that I am acting in this case for your benefit, and not for my own; and, as your legal adviser, you must submit to my judgment, or I cannot consent to go on."

"If I will promise not to use any harsh language, will you not consent to let me write the letter?" urged the client.

"You and I, in the present state of your mind, could not possibly come at the same conclusion in reference to what is harsh and what is mild," said Mr. Trueman; "therefore I cannot consent that you shall write one word of the proposed reply—I must write it."

"Well, I suppose, then, I shall have to submit. When will it be ready?"

"Come this afternoon, and I will give you the draft, which you can copy and sign."

In the afternoon, Mr. Singleton came, and received the letter prepared by Mr. Trueman. It ran thus, after the date and formal address—

"I regret that my proposition did not meet your approbation. The mode of settlement which I suggested was the result of a careful consideration of our mutual interests. Be kind enough to suggest to Mr. Trueman, my lawyer, any plan which you think will lead to an early and amicable adjustment of our business. You may rely upon my consent to it, if it meets his approbation."

"Is it possible, Mr. Trueman, that you expect me to sign such a cringing letter as that?" said Mr. Singleton, throwing it down, and walking backward and forward with great irritation of manner.

"Well, what is your objection to it?" replied Mr. Trueman, mildly, for he was prepared for such an exhibition of feeling.

"Objection! How can you ask such a question? Am I to go on my knees to him, and beg him to do me justice? No! I'll sacrifice every cent I've got in the world first, the scoundrel!"

"You wish to have your business settled, do you not?" asked Mr. Truemen, looking him steadily in the face.

"Of course I do—honorably settled!"

"Well, let me hear what you mean by an honorable settlement."

"Why, I mean"—— The young man hesitated a moment and Mr. Trueman said,

"You mean a settlement in which your interest shall be equally considered with that of Mr. Williams."

"Yes, certainly, and that"——

"And that," continued Mr. Trueman, "Mr. Williams in the settlement shall consider and treat you as a gentleman?"

"Certainly I do; but that is more than he has done."

"Well, never mind. Let what is past go for as much as it is worth. The principal point of action is in the present."

"But I'll never send that mean, cringing letter, though."

"You mistake its whole tenor, I do assure you, Mr. Singleton. You have allowed your angry feelings to blind you. You certainly carefully considered before you adopted it, the proposed basis of a settlement, did you not?"

"Of course I did."

"So the letter which I have prepared for you states. Now, as an honest and honorable man, you are, I am sure, willing to grant to him the same privilege which you asked for yourself, viz: that of proposing a plan of settlement. Your proposition does not seem to please him; now it is but fair that he should be invited to state how he wishes the settlement to be made—and in giving such an invitation, a gentleman should use gentlemanly language."

"But he don't deserve to be treated like a gentleman. In fact, he has no claim to the title," said the young man.

"If he has none, as you say, you profess to be a gentleman, and all gentlemen should prove by their actions and words that they are gentlemen."

"I can't say that I am convinced by what you say; but, as you seem to be bent on having it your own way, why, here, let me copy the thing and sign it," said the young man, suddenly changing his manner.

"There, now," he added, passing across the table the brief letter he had copied, "I suppose he'll think me a low-spirited fellow, after he gets that; but he's mistaken. After it's all over, I'll take good care to tell him that it did n't contain my sentiments."

Mr. Trueman smiled, as he took the letter, and went on to fold and direct it.

"Come to-morrow afternoon, and I think we'll have things in a pretty fair way," he said, looking up with his usual pleasant smile, as he finished the direction of the letter.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Singleton," he said, as that gentlemen entered his office on the succeeding day.

"Good afternoon," responded the young man. "Well, have you heard from that milk-and-water letter of yours? I can't call it mine."

"Yes, here is the answer. Take a seat, and I will read it to you," said the old gentleman.

"Well let's hear it."

"DEAR GEORGE: I have your kind and gentlemanly note of yesterday, in reply to my harsh, unreasonable, and ungentlemanly one of the day before. We have both been playing the fool; but you are ahead of me in becoming sane. I have examined, since I got your note, more carefully the tenor of your proposition, for a settlement, and it meets my views precisely. My foolish anger kept me from seeing it before. Let our mutual friend, Mr. Trueman, arrange the matter according to the plan mentioned, and I shall most heartily acquiesce.

Yours, &c., THOMAS WILLIAMS."

"He never wrote that letter in the world!" exclaimed Singleton, starting to his feet. "It's Thomas Williams's own hand, as I live!" ejaculated Singleton, on glancing at the letter. "My old friend, Thomas Williams, the best-natured fellow in the world!" he continued, his feelings undergoing a sudden and entire revolution. "What a fool I have been!"

"And what a fool I have been!" said Thomas Williams, advancing from an adjoining room, at the same time extending his hand towards Singleton.

"God bless you, my dear friend!" exclaimed Singleton, grasping his hand. "Why, what has been the matter with us both?"

"My young friends," said old Mr. Trueman, one of the kindest-hearted men in the world, rising and advancing towards them, "I have known you long, and have always esteemed you both. This pleasant meeting and reconciliation, you perceive, is of my arrangement. Now, let me give you a precept that will make friends and keep friends. It has been my motto through life, and I don't know that I have an enemy in the world. It is,

"'A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger.'"

* * *

A TURKISH DEAN SWIFT.—Nasreddin, the Joe Miller of Turkish story, it is recorded, once being at a mosque, was moved by the spirit of drollery to step into the pulpit and look down upon the spiritually an-hungered audience: "O true believers!" said he, "do you know what I am going to say to you?" "No," was the general response. "Then I will not waste my words on so stupid a rabble," said the extempore D. D., and coming straightway down in high dudgeon went his way. On a second occasion, he renewed his experiment and his inquiry, and the audience, moved by their previons disappointment, replied, "Yes." "O well!" said the Doctor, since you know, there's no use in my telling you, and again he made his exit. A third time he mounted the pulpit, and made his inquiry, and the audience, resolved not to be baffled again, replied, "Some of us know, and some don't know." "Well," said he with great coolness, "let those who know, tell those who don't know,"—and again girded up his loins and vanished in silence.

* * *

THE POOR BOY'S COLLEGE.—"The printing office," says the New Orleans Globe, "has indeed proved a better college to many a poor boy, has graduated more useful and conspicuous members of society, has brought out more intellect and turned it into practical, useful channels, has awakened more mind, generated more active and elevated thought, than many of the literary colleges of the country. How many a drone or dolt has passed through one of these colleges, with no tangible proof of his fitness to graduate, other than his inanimate piece of parchment, himself, if possible, more inanimate than his leathern diploma. There is something in the very atmosphere of a printing office calculated to awaken the mind, and inspire a thirst for knowledge. A boy who commences in such a school, will have his talents and ideas brought out; if he has no mind to be drawn out, the boy himself will be driven out."

* * *

CELLARS.—Probably one of the chief causes why vegetables of certain kinds, particularly carrots, beets, and turnips, rot so soon after being deposited in the winter bins, is the want of proper care in ventilating the cellars in which they are deposited. The Germans, who are famed for their exemplary domestic economy, are rigidly circumspect in this particular. In all or most of their houses there is a communication maintained between the cellar and the principal chimney, in order to facilitate the escape of the noxious and stagnant gases engendered by the vegetable or other contents. It is a well-known fact, that the air in cellars, from its rapid deterioration and impregnation by nauseous miasma, soon becomes highly deleterious to health; and to this fact, doubtless, is attributable, in a great measure, the almost uninterrupted ill health of many families among us, both in town and country.

* * *

BE ECONOMICAL.—No matter if your parents are worth millions, it is not the less proper that you should know the value of money, and the honest, honorable means of acquiring it. What multitudes of young men, particularly in our cities, make fatal shipwrecks of health and reputation, and eventually of property, by a neglect of this simple maxim! They are aware that their fathers obtained their wealth by habits of industry, but they are ashamed of the very name. They forget that wealth in this country passes rapidly from one to another, and that he who is rich to-day, may be poor tomorrow; or that he who relies on wealth amassed by his father, may end his days in a poor-house. It is for the young man to say, whether by industry and economy he will secure a competence and respectability, or by extravagance and idleness become a worthless beggar and a sponging outcast.

* * *

JUDICIAL INTEGRITY.—Judge Sewall, of Massachusetts, who died in 1760, went one day into a hatter's shop, in order to purchase a pair of second-hand brushes for cleaning his shoes. The master of the shop presented him with a couple. "What is your price?" said the Judge. "If they answer your purpose," said the other, "you may have them and welcome." The Judge upon hearing this, laid them down and bowing, was leaving the shop; upon which the hatter said to him, "Pray, Sir, your Honor has forgotten the principal object of your visit." "By no means," answered the Jndge; "if you please to set a price I am ready to purchase; but ever since it has fallen to my lot to occupy a seat on the bench, I have studiously avoided receiving to the value of a single copper, lest at some future period of my life, it might have some kind of influence in determining my judgement."

* * *

POST-OFFICE STATISTICS.—The Norwich Aurora publishes some notes from the charge of Judge Judson to the Grand Jury, at the late term of the Circuit Court of Hartford, relative to private mails. In 1790 the whole number of post-offices in the United States was 75, and the amount of postage collected was $37,934 00. In 1845, the post-offices numbered 14,003, and the revenue amounted to $4,289,841 00. In 1790, the amount of postage collected in Hartford was $74 24,—in 1831 the nett revenue, after deducting compensation to postmaster, was $1,714 78. The amount collected in New York in 1790 was $1,067 08,—in 1831 the nett revenue was $136,500 28.

JAMES T. WOODBURY, Esq., brother of Hon. Levi Woodbury, when delivering lectures on the subject of slavery, not unfrequently adverts to the circumstance which first drew his attention to the subject. During his stay in the capital of the United States, he had a wish to visit the tomb of Washington. He was attended by an aged negro, whose business it has been for many years to guide travelers to that consecrated spot. This old man was formerly the slave of General Washington. Mr. Woodbury asked him if he had any children.

"I have had a large family," he replied.

"And are they living?" inquired the gentleman.

The voice of the aged father trembled with emotion, and the tears started to his eyes, as he answered:

"I don't know whether they are alive or dead. They were all sold away from me;—and I don't know what became of them. I am alone in the world—without a child to bring me a cup of water in my old age."

Mr. Woodbury looked on the infirm and solitary being with feelings of deep compassion.

"And this," thought he, "is the fate of slaves, even when owned by so good a man as General Washington! Who would not be an abolitionist?"

* * *

FRESH AIR.—Horace Mann has well said:—"People who shudder at a flesh wound, or a tinge of blood, would confine their children like convicts, and compel them, month after month, to breathe quantities of poison. It would less impair the mental and physical constitutions of our children, gradually to draw an ounce of blood from their veins, during the same length of time, than to send them to breathe, for six hours a day, the lifeless and poisoned air of some of our school rooms. Let any man who votes for confining children in small rooms, and keeping them on stagnant air, try the experiment of breathing his own breath only four times over; and if medical aid be not at hand, the children will never be endangered by his vote afterwards."

VARIETY.

The statistics of shipwrecks are curious. It appears that in 1833, 1834, and 1835, when there were 24,500 vessels belonging to Great Britain, the average loss each year was 610 ships, averaging 210 tons each; and the number of lives lost on these occasions was 1,550. In 1841 and 1842, when the shipping had increased to nearly 29,000, the average loss was only 611, and the loss of life 1,050, a diminution of 100 on the former periods. Since that, though the commercial marine has gone on increasing at a rapid rate, the number of ships wrecked in 1844 had decreased to 517; in 1845, 539; and in 1846, when the number of ships belonging to Great Britain and its dependencies was 32,000, the number lost was 537.

Coleridge, in a lecture twenty years ago, divided readers into four classes. The first he compared to an hour-glass, their reading being as the sand—it runs in and out, and leaves not a vestige behind. A second class, he said, resembled a sponge—which imbibes every thing, and returns it in nearly the same state, only a little dirtier. A third class he likened to a jelly-bag—which allows all that is pure to pass away, and retains only the refuse and the dregs. The fourth class, of which he trusted there were many among his auditors, he compared to the slaves in the diamond mines of Golconda—who, casting aside all that is worthless, preserve only the pure gem.

We mentioned, some weeks ago, that the British Government had consented that the provinces in North America should arrange the postage as they might agree among themselves. For this purpose, delegates from Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have recently assembled in Montreal, and have agreed that a rate of three pence, Halifax currency, per half ounce, be the charge for letters sent a distance of not more than three hundred miles, and beyond that distance sixpence. Sixpence Halifax money is equal to ten cents.

During the regime of the Peel Administration, an important situation in Ireland became vacant, to which an Irish relative of the Duke wished to be appointed. He therefore wrote to his Grace, and, after stating his wish, concluded his letter with these words: "One word from your Grace will be sufficient." The Duke sent the following laconic and characteristic reply:—"Dear ——. Not one word—from y'rs, aff'y, Wellington."

It was said of a work, which had been inspected by a severe critic, in terms which at first sight appeared very flattering, "There is a great deal in this book which is new, and a great deal that is true." So far good, the author would think; but then came the negation: "but it unfortunately happens that those portions which are new are not true, and those which are true are not new!"

We found the other day, in an old and rare book we were turning over, a mention of the first use of rouge, which, by this account, seems to have been somewhat perverted from its original purpose. It "was worn by the Roman Generals in their triumphs, that they might seem to blush continually at their own praises!"

A Scotch professional gentleman, who was called upon to visit the Queen in the course of her journey, asked one of the gentlemen in attendance on the royal party, if any particular manners were necessary. 'None, sir,' was the reply; 'you will only recollect that the Queen is a lady.'

Some mathematical genius calculates, that a man who shaves daily, cuts off nearly half a foot of beard per annum, and that at eighty years of age he will have removed in his time twenty-seven feet of hair from his own visage!

The English papers say that the Archbishop of Lyons, a conservative Roman Catholic, has ordered prayers to be put up for the conversion of the Pope, who is too liberal for him.

A writer in Graham's Magazine very justly remarks, that 'economy is a good thing, and should be practiced by all; but it should show itself in denying ourselves, and not in oppressing others.'

Rev. E. M. Johnson, of Brooklyn, built St. John's Church, and has preached in it for twenty years, without "fee or reward;" in other words, he has received no salary whatever.

FIRESIDE READING
For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters.
"Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.
A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev. R. W. Cushman.
"We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist.
Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.
Facts for Girls: By the same Author.
The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.
Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.
Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.
The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.
Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate."
Christian Secretary.
Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.
Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.
The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.
My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.
The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.
Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

☞ Publishers of Newspapers who will give the above six insertions, and send us a copy, shall be entitled to a set of the books.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY
Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846; and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

ALFRED, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 26. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 16, 1847. WHOLE NO. 182.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since.

Before proceeding farther, we would now examine more closely the assumption adopted as the foundation of our author's theory, namely, whether the Israelites really did perform a journey of not less than thirty miles upon the day which they had hitherto been accustomed to sanctify as the Sabbath, and which indeed according to our author was "as a moral law binding on all men." And first, we remark, that there is no intimation in Scripture that the Israelites ever marched on any Sabbath, nor, so far as we can perceive, a single word authorizing such an inference. The Lord of the Sabbath, who, in His infinite mercy, and by His Almighty power, at this very time clave the waters of the flood, and made a way for His ransomed to pass over, could enable them fully to sanctify His Sabbath even in the trying circumstances in which they were placed. He did so, in the manner of bestowing the manna; and we are not to suppose without evidence, nor to assert without authority, that "Providence had ordered it otherwise" on the present occasion.

But not only is the assertion gratuitous that they marched from Rameses to Succoth on the Sabbath, whether calling it the first day of Adam's life or the seventh day as divinely reckoned; we have not even proof that they marched this distance in one day at all, and we certainly have reason to question this, if it "could not be less than thirty miles." This is surely too great a journey for the whole congregation to perform in one day, whether Sabbath or working day only, considering the circumstances of that vast assemblage of men, women, and children, carrying all that they possessed, "their kneading-troughs being bound up in their clothes upon their shoulders," and having with them "flocks and herds, even very much cattle." Ex. 12: 34—38. A disciplined army, inured to the fatigues of the march, does not, we believe, in ordinary cases, travel at a rate of more than half the distance; how much less then are we to suppose this of such a multitude, unaccustomed to travel, however much they may have been inured to toil—a multitude embracing the young and the old, the sick and infirm, mothers and children, flocks and herds!

Israel's first encampment, indeed, after leaving Rameses, was at Succoth; but they were not restrained from marching during the night, and from the account of "their goings out according to their journeys," we find them, immediately after the time here spoken of, going "three days journey" from one place before they pitched at another. Thus, "they departed from before Pi-hahiroth and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days journey, and pitched in Marah." Num. 33: 8. In the account of their journeyings, on leaving Succoth, we are told, "the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them by the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light to go by day AND NIGHT." Ex. 13: 21. Num. 9: 15—23. And in this very journey of three days together, it appears to have been in the night that they passed through the Red Sea. Ex. 14: 20, 24, 27. So that although we have each encampment expressly marked immediately after the Israelites left the land of Egypt, yet as they traveled by night as well as by day, till the resting of the cloud of glory gave intimation of their arrival at the place of temporary rest, we must not come hastily nor so decidedly to the conclusion that after leaving Rameses they had traveled all the distance to Succoth, if it "could not be less than thirty miles," in a single day.

This long journey assigned by our author to the Israelites, "instead of resting on the Sabbath day, according to the commandment,"—a commandment, "as a moral law, binding on all men,"—appears the more remarkable when we observe how he disposes of the time and space of the rest of the journey. Thirty miles is about a third of the whole distance which they are believed to have traveled until they were safe after having passed through the Red Sea. Now, for this whole distance, he, without authority and contrary to the more ordinary opinion, allows an entire week except a day, or rather, to preserve his new mode of reckoning, an entire week of six days, in order that he may find a Sabbath which they violate for their starting from Rameses, and a new Sabbath which they observe on finding their deliverance. Thus, on the 15th of the month he gives them a journey of not less than thirty miles, while he allows them to rest without advancing on the 16th, and again to wait the whole of the 18th and 19th, that Pharaoh and his army may have opportunity of overtaking them, which according to his account they did, and were destroyed on the 20th in the evening. Pp. 146, 147. Surely a little ingenuity might have enabled our author to plan the journeyings of the Israelites better, had not a purpose deemed important, been to be served by the plan adopted.*

Our author seems even to have mistaken entirely the time of day at which the Israelites left the land of Egypt, and as it is an error which extensively prevails, and affects other questions, we shall agian follow him, hoping to be enabled to set this point also distinctly before the mind of the reader. We are informed by the inspired historian, that, according to the appointment of God, the passover was killed on the 14th day of the month Abib, and that on the 15th the Lord's freemen went forth. With a hastiness of conclusion altogether unwarrantable, it has been assumed that only a very few hours, if even so much, elapsed between the one event and the other. "On the 14th day of the month," says the writer from whom we have so often quoted, "the children of Israel eat the passover. On that same night the destroying angel killed all the first-born of the Egyptians. This fatal stroke caused the Egyptians to hurry away the Israelties in great haste on that very night, lest, said they, 'we be all dead men.' So they immediately began their march that very night." Letters, p. 146.

This we regard as wholly incorrect. It makes really, although perhaps unconsciously, the eating of the passover and the Exodus to have taken place not on two succeeding days, but on the evening and morning of the same day, contrary to the express declaration of Scripture, that the passover was on the 14th, and their departure on the 15th. Those to whose view we are objecting do not observe that, as we have already proved, the Scripture principle of computation is "from even to even;" that if the passover had been eaten in the evening of the 14th day, the morning immediately succeeding would be the 14th still. This first mistake is, then, one of the evil consequences arising from the church's taking the maxims of the world, even in such matters, in preference to God's reckoning, and the light His word is given to impart. For it is obvious that, the day beginning with the evening, and the passover being killed on the 14th "in the evening," or, as translated in the margin, "between the two evenings," (Ex. 12: 6,) the Israelites leaving Egypt on the 15th, in the evening, twenty-four hours would of necessity intervene between the occurrence of the two circumstances—and it shall now be our object to prove that this time did elapse, whatever more.

In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's passover; (Lev. 23: 5;) and so, as in other cases, the principle of computation being "from even to even," the passover day continued till the corresponding time of the following day, that is, till the following evening, when the 15th day began. Till that evening arrived, it would not, and could not, be the 15th, "the morrow" after the 14th. The whole feast of unleavened bread was to continue seven days, from the 14th to the 21st day of the month, of which both the beginning and termination were at even. (Ex. 12: 18.) Each of these days, therefore, including the 15th, are thus expressly declared to begin with the evening. Not only, then, is there no necessity, from the immediate succession of the 14th and 15th days, for our imagining the Exodus to have followed the eating of the passover on the same night, but we are shut up to the very contrary, by the fact that the 14th day, commencing in the evening, continued till the next evening; and the 15th then commencing, continued in like manner till the evening following. They departed from Rameses in the first month, on the 15th day of the first month; on the morrow after the passover, the children of Israel went out with an high hand, in the sight of all the Egyptians." Numb. 33: 3.

Indirectly, it is thus shown that a whole day and night must have intervened between the passover and departure of the Israelites, and we shall endeavor to confirm this view by a consideration of circumstances mentioned in the context. From evidence contained there, we shall find that, however great the haste, not until the close of the day whose sun arose on Egypt's first-born slain, the liberated bondsmen left the land of their captivity. On "the morrow after the passover," which took place on the 14th, is one of the Scripture declarations concerning it—"on the fifteenth day," is another—and now we proceed to prove that their departure was in the season of the night—and, being on the 15th day of the month, necessarily the night following the night of the passover, which was on the 14th. "Observe the month of Abib," it is commanded, (Deut. 16: 1,) "and keep the passover unto the Lord thy God, for in the month Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth of Egypt, BY NIGHT." Not in the morning, therefore, but "by night" on the 15th were they brought forth.*

In father confirmation of this, let us look back upon the account given by Moses of the Exodus. It is said, "Now the sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of the four hundred and thirty years, even the self same day it came to pass that all the hosts of the Lord went out from the land of Egypt. It is a night to be much observed unto the Lord for bringing them out from the land Egypt; this is that night of the Lord to be observed of all the children of Israel in their generations." Ex. 12: 40—42. Now their departure having been on the fifteenth, if it was at night at all, it could not be the night on which they eat the passover, that being the 14th; and attention to the circumstances would, independently of this testimony, make it exceedingly probable, that their departure was on the night following their eating of the passover; and these circumstances connected with this testimony of its having really been at night puts it beyond all question. [To be continued.

---

* Sicard, who, by long residence in Lower Egypt, had a thorough acquaintance with its geography, with a view to the elucidation of the Scripture account of this portion of the Israelitish journeyings, traveled with a companion their entire course from Rameses to Pi-hahiroth, at the same season of the year, the same time of the month, tracing as he was convinced their very path, and encamping at their encampments. He reckons the distance from Rameses to Succoth at between eight and nine French leagues, and the whole at about 26, which he considers the Israelites to have traveled in three days, and says they could do so easily enough. Schimelpenninck's Biblical Fragments, p. 172. Kitto's Biblical Cyclopædia concurs in Sicard's view, which makes the distance between Rameses and Succoth 18 miles.

* We may remark in reference to this, that the general term day is used in specifying the day of the month, while, when the time of day is more minutely particularized, it is yet spoken of, in the same context, as having been at "night;" we never read in any text that it took place in the morning.

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

A Free Paraphrase of the German.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel comes;
No power hath he to banish pain,
Or give us back our lost again,
And yet, in tenderest love, our dear
And heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his still countenance;
He mocks no grief with idle cheer,
Nor wounds with words the mourner's ear;
But ills and woes he may not cure,
He kindly learns us to endure.

Angel of Patience! sent to calm
Our feverish brows with cooling balm,
To lay the storms of hope and fear,
And reconcile life's smile and tear;
The throbs of wounded pride to still,
And make our own our Father's will.

O, thou who mournest on thy way,
With longings for the close of day,
He walks with thee, that angel kind,
And gently whispers, 'Be resigned;
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!'

From the People's Journal.

THE HOLY LAND.—BY HARRIET MARTINEAU.

BETHANY, AND THE PLAIN OF JERICHO.

We made an excursion from Jerusalem to the Jordan and the Dead Sea; going by way of Bethany and Jericho, and returning by the convent of St. Saba. There is at this day so much danger of falling among thieves in going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, that travelers join parties when they can, and unite their guards into a corps of armed men. Our own party of four joined the ten with whom we had traveled in the desert; and four strangers—European gentlemen—requested permission to ride with us. Thus we were eighteen; and the dragomen, cooks, horsekeepers, and mule-drivers, who took charge of our tents and baggage, and ten armed guards, swelled our number to that of a caravan which no robbers were likely to attack. Indeed, we scarcely saw anybody the whole way. The dangerous part of the road appeared deserted, and the plain of Jericho, once studded with towns, and filled with fertility lay before us almost as lifeless as the basin of the Dead Sea.

We left Jerusalem by St. Stephen's gate—proceeded by the camel road to Bethany, which winds up the side of Olivet, and crosses its ridge to the east. As soon as we had passed the ridge, Bethany came in view, lying on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, and, as we all know, "fifteen furlongs" distance from Jerusalem. It is now a village inhabited by about twenty families; a very poor place; but looking less squalid than might be expected, from its houses being built, as everywhere in that country, of stone, square, substantial, and large, compared with the cottages in England. Its position on the side of the hill is very fine, seen from below.

Before descending the hill, however, we alighted from our horses, to visit an old tomb, which is called the tomb of Lazarus. I have often wished that the old painters had enjoyed such opportunities; and then we should have had representations of Lazarus coming forth from a chamber in the rock, and not rising from such a grave as is dug in the European churchyards. The limestone rocks of Judea are full of holes and caverns; and we know from the Scriptures how abundantly these were used by the old inhabitants, as dwellings for themselves and their cattle, as a shelter to the wayfarer, a refuge to the fugitive, a hiding-place for robbers, and a place of deposite for the dead. Where a cavern was found with holes or recesses in its sides, a little labor would make it an extensive place of burial. By squaring the entrance, and giving some regularity to the arch of the roof, a handsome vestibule was obtained; and then the recesses were hewn into form, for the reception of bodies. Sometimes these recesses had pits; sometimes niches in their walls, so that each recess would contain several bodies; and sometimes they were small, so as to contain only one each. Sometimes the vestibule opened out into passages, which had recesses on each hand; so that a large company of the dead might lie hidden in the heart of the mountain. The whole was secured from wild beasts and other intrusion by a stone door fitted to the entrance, or large block rolled up against it. Those who have seen these eastern tombs can never again be puzzled, as I was in my childhood, when reading of "the chambers of the grave," and of the dead calling to one another in the house of death, and of the stone being rolled away from the mouth of the sepulchre. Many a child wonders, as I did, how the way was made clear for Lazarus to come forth, merely by the removal of a stone; but, once having stood looking in at the door of the sepulchre, how vivid becomes the picture of Jesus standing there, and calling to Lazarus with "a loud voice," to come forth! How one hears that voice echoing through the chambers of the tomb, and sees the dead man in his cerements appearing from the steps of the vault, or the shadow of the recess.

We looked back upon the village again and again, as we descended into the valley; and it was painful to lose sight of the place where Jesus was wont to go to solace himself with the friendship of Lazarus and his sisters, and rest from the conflicts which beset him in the great city over yonder ridge. But we were now on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho, and about to pass among the fastnesses of the thieves who seem to have infested this region in all times. Our road now gradually ascended the high ridge from which we were soon to overlook the plain of Jericho.

From the ridge we had a splendid view of the plain of the Jordan—apparently as flat as a table to the very foot of the Moab Mountain, while the Dead Sea lay, a blue and motionless expanse, to the right—(the south)—and barren mountains enclose the whole. The nearer mountains were rocky, brown, and desolate, with here and there the remains of an aqueduct, or rather ancient buildings, marking the sites of settlements which have passed away. The distant mountains were clothed in the soft and lovely hues which can be seen only through a southern atmosphere. The plain was once as delicious a region as ever men lived in. Josephus calls it a "divine region," and tells of its miles of gardens and palm groves; and here grew the balsam which was worth more than its weight in silver, and was a treasure for which the kings of the east made war. Jericho is called in the Scriptures the city of Palm Trees; and Jericho was but one of a hundred towns which peopled the plain. Now, all near was barren; and equally bare was the distant tract at the foot of the mountains; but in the midst was a strip of verdure, broad, sinuous, and thickly wooded, where we knew that the Jordan flowed. The palms are gone; and the sycamores, and the honey which the wild bees made in the hollows of their stems. The balsam, which Queen Cleopatra so coveted as to send messengers from Egypt for plants to grow at Heliopolis, has disappeared from the face of the earth; and instead of these, and the fruits and sugar canes which were renowned in far countries, we find now little but tall reeds, thorny acacias, and trees barren of blossom or fruit. The verdant strip, however, looks beautiful from afar, and shows that the fertility of the plain has not departed. There is enough for the support and luxury of man, were man but there to wish for and enjoy them.

It may be remembered, that the men of Jericho complained to Elisha the prophet, that the water of their spring was not good, either to drink, or to water their land for tillage. (2 Kings, ii. 19;) and that, though their city was pleasant, they could not enjoy it for this reason; and that Elisha purified the spring, "so that the waters were healed unto this day." Beside this spring, now called Ain Sultan, we encamped in the afternoon, and found its waters truly delicious. Nothing could be prettier than this encampment, in a spot so forest like as to contrast strongly with all we had seen for many weeks past. After a walk to the remains of an acqueduct, and other traces (mere traces) of former habitation in the days when Jericho was a great city, I went, with one companion, to see the spring, which was but a short way from our tents. The water bubbled up from under some bushes, and spread itself, clear and shallow, among some squared stones, which seemed to show that the source had once been enclosed. By this time it was dusk; the evening star hung above the nearest hill. All was silent about us, except the rustle and dip of the boughs which hung above the water. My companion and I found the temptation to bathe quite irresistible. Under the shadow of a large overhanging tree there was a pool deep enough for the purpose, and there we bathed, rejoicing with the people of Jericho in the sweetness of the water.

RE-UNION OF GOOD MEN IN A FUTURE STATE.

If the mere conception of the re-union of good men in a future state infused a momentary rapture in the mind of Tully; if an airy speculation, for there is reason to fear it had little hold on his convictions, could inspire him with such delight, what may we be expected to feel who are assured of such an event by the true sayings of God! How should we rejoice in the prospect of spending a blissful eternity with those whom we loved on earth, of seeing them emerge from the ruins of the tomb, and the deeper ruins of the fall, not only uninjured, but refined and perfected, "with every tear wiped from their eyes," standing before the throne of God and the Lamb. What delight will it afford to renew the sweet counsel we have taken together, to recount the toils of combat, and the labor of the way, and to approach the throne of God, in company, in order to join in the symphonies of heavenly voices, and lose ourselves amidst the splendors and fruitions of the beatific vision!

To that state all the pious on earth are tending; and if there be a law from whose operation none are exempt, which irresistibly conveys their bodies to darkness and to dust, there is another, not less certain or less powerful, which conducts their spirits to the abode of bliss, the bosom of their Father and their God. The wheels of nature are not made to roll backwards; everything presses on towards eternity; from the birth of time an impetuous current has set in, which bears all the sons of men towards that interminable ocean. Meanwhile, heaven is attracting to itself whatever is congenial to its nature, is enriching itself by the spoils of earth, and collecting within its capacious bosom whatever is pure, permanent, and divine, leaving nothing for the last fire to consume but the objects and the slaves of corruption. [Hall.

BENEVOLENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

A certain philosopher once expressed a wish that he had a window in his breast, that he might lay open his heart to all the world. He felt so much satisfaction in his past attainments, and in his daily researches after knowledge, that, had it been possible, he would have shown it to the whole universe, and enriched the minds of his fellow-creatures throughout the habitable globe with the same literary stores of pleasure which he enjoyed himself. Similar to the wish of this liberal philosopher is the desire of every sincere Christian. He derives so much comfort from the possession of religion himself, that he longs to have all mankind made acquainted with its blessedness. He by no means wishes to monopolize these pleasures, and thus steal to heaven alone, but with a heart expanding with celestial charity, and glowing with "the love of Christ," he cries,

"O that the world might taste and see
The riches of his grace;
The arms of love that compass me
Would all mankind embrace."

CHINESE SAILORS.

There came recently to the port of New York in the Chinese Junk Keying, about thirty Chinese sailors. It appears from their own statement, that they shipped for Java, expecting to return to their wives and children in a few months; but instead of it, at the end of two hundred and twelve days, were landed in this city, ignorant of our language, and we of theirs. Under such circumstances, all hope of soon seeing their homes and little ones was well nigh lost. But the lack of the gift of tongues was supplied by the arrival, just at this time, in an American ship, of Lin King Chew, an educated Chinaman, who interested himself in his countrymen. Twenty-six of them left the junk, and became inmates of the Sailor's Home for several weeks; and of the two hundred and twenty or thirty boarders, none were more quiet, orderly, and respectful than they. Their conduct was certainly contradictory to the reports of some who visit China, that almost all the Chinese are thieves. Those of them able to read their own language were supplied with the Chinese New Testament. They attended regularly the morning and evening worship, the Saturday evening prayer meetings, and the Wednesday evening temperance meetings.

Lin King Chew, himself a professed believer in the truth of the religion of Jesus, though perhaps not a Christian, was unwearied in his efforts among his countrymen; at the prayer meetings and temperance meetings, he preached to them, "in their own tongue, wherein they were born," "Jesus and him crucified," and reasoned with them on "temperance and a judgment to come." The last temperance meeting they attended, they all enrolled their names, in the Chinese character, among the members of the New York Temperance Society, and some of them, their teacher informs us, professed to have renounced their idolatry and to be believers in the religion of Christ.

They have seen our country, our railroads, our iron race horse; they have seen our city, the palaces of our merchant princes, and the temples of our God; they have seen our finely modeled ships, and our swift gliding steamers; they have learned something of our religion, the foundation of our obvious superiority. They have returned with the seaman's chaplain to their country.

The tears started from the eyes of some of these Celestials, as they were shaking hands and bidding farewell to those from whom they had received so much attention, Christian kindness, and instruction. They have gone back to report. What may be the ultimate effect on themselves, their relatives, and countrymen, of their unintended visit, the future must develop. [Sailor's Magazine.

MARRIED COMPARED WITH SINGLE LIFE.

Marriage is a school and exercise of virtue; and though marriage hath cares, yet a single life hath desires which are more troublesome, and more dangerous, and often end in sin; while the cares are but instances of duty and exercises of piety; and therefore, if single life hath more privacy of devotion, yet marriage hath more necessities, and more variety of it, and is an exercise of more graces.

Marriage is the proper sense of piety and patience, of the duty of parents and the charity of relations; here kindness is spread abroad, and love is united and made firm as a centre; marriage is the nursery of Heaven. The virgin sends prayers to God, but she carries but one soul to him; but the state of marriage fills up the number of the elect, and hath in it the labor of love, and the delicacies of friendship, and the blessings of society, and the union of hands and hearts.

It hath in it less of beauty, but more safety, than the single life; it hath more care, but less danger; it is more merry and more sad; is fuller of sorrows and fuller of joys; it lies under more burdens, but is supported by all the strengths of love and charity, and those burdens are delightful.

Marriage is the mother of the world, and preserves kingdoms, and fills cities, and churches, and Heaven itself. Celibacy, like the fly in the heart of an apple, dwells in perpetual sweetness, but sits alone, and is confined, and dies in perpetual singularity; but marriage, like the useful bee, builds a house and gathers sweetness from every flower, and labors and unites into republics, and sends out colonies, and feeds the world with delicacies, and obeys their king, and keeps order, and exercises many virtues; and promotes the interests of mankind, and is that state of good things of which God has designed the present constitution of the world. [Bishop Taylor.

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT.

Life is beautifully compared to a fountain fed by a thousand streams, that perish if one be dried. It is a silver cord twisted with a thousand strings, that part asunder if one be broken. Frail and thoughtless mortals are surrounded by innumerable dangers, which make it much more strange that they escape so long, than that they almost all perish suddenly at last. We are encompassed with accidents every day to crush the mouldering tenement that we inhabit. The seeds of disease are planted in our constitutions by nature. The earth, and the atmosphere whence we draw the breath of life, is impregnated with death, health is made to operate its own destruction! The food that nourishes contains the elements of decay; the soul that animates it by a vivifying fire, tends to wear it out by its own action; death lurks in ambush along our paths. Notwithstanding this is the truth, so palpably confirmed by the daily examples before our eyes, how little do we lay it to heart! we see our friends and neighbors perishing among us, but how seldom does it occur to our thoughts that our knell shall, perhaps, give the next fruitless warning to the world.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 16, 1847.

HOSTILITY TO PROGRESS.

Only a few persons can be found who will frankly avow it as their belief, that all important truth has been discovered, so that we need not look for any considerable change in the theological opinions of the Christian world. But although only a few persons are willing to avow such a notion, there are vast numbers who act as though they believed it. If a new doctrine is presented to their consideration, they close their ears against it as promptly and closely as though there was danger in even hearing. If a reform in regard to some long-established practice is proposed, they scout the idea of improvement being possible, and not unfrequently heap contempt upon those who propose it. It was so when Luther commenced his career of reform. It was so when the Anabaptists began to talk about the duty of baptism and the independence of churches. It was so when the subject of temperance was broached. It is so now whenever a new doctrine is advocated, which cannot number doctors and judges among its advocates. And this too among Christians, who profess to believe that they are bound to grow in knowledge as well as in grace—who agree that the men of old, to whom the apostles preached, were praiseworthy for searching to see if the things they asserted were so—and who read a Bible which teaches that there must be overturn, overturn, until He shall come to reign whose right it is! It is strange that a notion of perfection in knowledge, and a fear of change, should take possession of such men. Yet so it is. Although the leaders in the reforms of the day are generally Christian men, there are vast numbers bearing the Christian name who not only refuse to coöperate with them, but actually pull back when any progressive movement is attempted.

The cause of true Sabbath reform has brought to light a large number of the class of persons to which we have alluded. There is a movement, calling itself a Sabbath reform, which involves no sacrifice of interest or popularity on the part of its advocates, and which, therefore, meets with but little opposition. But when a return to the true Sabbath is proposed, it involves such changes as vitally affect the interests and popularity of men. Hence that reform not only finds no favor, but is called to contend with open and deadly hostility. When the subject is first presented, it is with the greatest difficulty that any hearing at all can be obtained. But if sufficient hearing is obtained to make an impression, and let truth take some hold upon the consciences of the people, what a commotion is produced! The clergy begin to preach upon the subject, with a view to quiet those who are disturbed. They repeat, as if they really believed it, the oft-refuted notion that Christ changed the Sabbath, and his apostles sanctioned the change by their practice. They harp upon the practice of the early Christians, and the church generally from that day to this. And most of all, they insist, that what has been believed and practiced by so many good men in all ages cannot be wrong. Thus they oppose progress, not by sound and Scriptural argument, but by an appeal to the example of men as fallible as themselves. Such hostility to investigation and progress as the discussion of this subject has developed, is lamentable in the extreme, and shows a fear, unworthy of Christians, to examine the foundation upon which popular dogmas are based.

◆

Christian Contributions.—At the Monthly Missionary Meeting held in the Tract House on the first Monday of Dec., an address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Ward, not long since Missionary to Madura, which was of much interest, but contained but little news. He said the liberality of American Christians needed to be exercised to supply the deficit now existing in the treasuries of our great religious institutions. In India £1,500,000 sterling is often contributed at the festival of Doorga, and it is not uncommon for a single individual to give £30,000; while we Christians, with the lamp of the Gospel to guide us and animate our zeal, often begrudge our scanty pittance, and suffer our institutions to languish for want of funds.

◆

Missionaries to Southern India.—Rev. Chas. Little and wife, destined to the Madura mission, under the direction of the American Board, sailed from Boston on the 4th inst., in the barque Mary Adams, for Madras. Rev. C. F. Heyer goes in the same vessel, on his return to a mission among the Telugu people, a short distance from Madras, under the direction of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States. The mission at Madura was commenced in 1834. Rev. William Todd and Rev. Henry R. Hoisington, with their wives, were the first missionaries located there. It now consists of 7 stations and 2 outstations, 10 missionaries, 1 male and 10 female assistant missionaries, 3 native preachers, and 54 other native helpers.

◆

History of the Baptist Foreign Missions.—The organ of the Baptist Missionary Union says that the Executive Committee have recently engaged the services of a competent individual, to prepare for the press a sketch of the history of the origin of our foreign missionary operations, and of all the missions of the American Baptist Missionary Union; with notices of the geography, history, religious and social condition of the tribes or nations among whom the missions are planted. The work will be prosecuted as rapidly as may be consistent with its character, and the professional duties of the author. The demand for such a history has been long increasing; and we hazard little in predicting that the forthcoming book will be eagerly sought by all who desire to be the intelligent friends of our missions.

◆

Labors and Opinions of Mr. Gutzlaff.—The Commercial Advertiser says that Mr. Gutzlaff has concluded the history of the Chinese Empire on which he has been so long engaged, and has sent the manuscript to M. Cotta, the well known publisher at Stuttgardt. Mr. Gutzlaff has also published, at Hong Kong, a 'universal geography,' with sixty maps, and is engaged upon a Chinese dictionary which it will take him three years to complete. In the prosecution of his mission labors he has established a native Chinese society, numbering six hundred members. It has published several popular works. Mr. C. places his chief confidence for the regeneration and Christianization of China upon native labors.

◆

WAKING UP.

When a man once bows to the delusions of error, he not only becomes indifferent to truth, but endures the reproach of his folly rather than make an effort to emancipate himself from its baneful and degrading influence. And to this sad failing of human nature, must be attributed the apathy men have manifested, at different periods of the world, to the investigation of truth, and to apply themselves to their deliverance from grievous errors, saddled upon them for ages, by the ambitious and crafty. But when assumptions become too flagrant, this criminal indifference of the community must be astounding indeed, especially in a republic, if the citizens do not wake up to the danger of impending ruin, concocted by the insidious machinations of a power aiming to ensnare body and soul.

Eternal vigilance, it has been justly said, is the price of liberty; and when citizens of a republic are so derelict to duty, as to lack that never-ceasing watchfulness over their heaven-born rights, they become fit subjects for oppression and vassalage—the worst of vassalage, spiritual bondage; for even in this, nominally, free country, the evil genius of spiritual vassalage is at work, and that not confined, as is generally supposed, to old mother Rome, but riots under the auspices of her prostitute Protestant step-children.

Mourning, as we have often done, over the slow but steady advances of ecclesiastical power, engendering certain spiritual despotism, and deeply deploring the unwary yielding of the populace to the soporific nostrums of the astute priesthood, and their ready minions, until the vitality of the republic, has, virtually, been sapped to the foundations, and the incubus of an incipient hierarchy already oppresses us, and we really began to despair of any recuperative energy in the body politic, to rebuke the destroyer, restore the inherent rights of the people, and restrict the functions of the law-making power to its legitimate and limited province—we were greeted, a day or two since, with the following Proceedings of the Commissioners of the District of Moyamensing, at their stated meeting on Monday last, published in the Public Ledger of Tuesday morning; which we hail as the harbinger of better days for the Republic; as it is the first movement of the sovereign people, to arrest the usurpation of those in authority, as it professes to stay the advances of infractions on the Constitution of the State; which has too often been made a wax-nose, by legislators and judges, to the great injury of many citizens of that Commonwealth.

These proceedings were elicited by the very extraordinary stand taken by one of the judges of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the County of Philadelphia, who recently announced from the Bench, that he did not regard the license law as giving any authority to keep the bar of public houses open on Sunday, and intimated that he would punish all who keep open bar and sell spirituous liquors on that day, as violators of the Sabbath!

"Moyamensing Commissioners.—The stated meeting of the Board was held yesterday afternoon. After the presentation of petitions and the transaction of other business, the following preamble and resolutions were offered by Mr. Miller, and, on motion, laid over till the meeting in January next.

Whereas, a mandate has gone forth from the Court of Quarter Sessions, and resolutions have been passed by the Board of Commissioners of some of the incorporated districts of this County, directing the keepers of inns and taverns to close their houses on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. And

Whereas, it is a palpable fact, taught by history and reason, that the respective Sabbaths of Christians, Jews, Seventh-day Baptists, and Mohammedans, are religious establishments, and that abstinence from worldly labor on certain days, is a part of the mode of worship of those religious sects. And

Whereas, to the end "that the general great and essential principles of liberty and free government may be recognized and unalterably established," the people of this Commonwealth have by their suffrages declared that every thing contained in the ninth article of its Constitution, "shall be excepted out of the general powers of government, and shall ever remain inviolate;" and among the provisions of this article is the solemn declaration, "that no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship." (Con. Penn. Art. 9, Sec. 3.) And it is therefore

Resolved, That we cannot join with the Board of Commissioners of Spring Garden in directing that public houses be closed on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. It is the duty of the police of this district to preserve peace and order on every day of the week, and not to interfere with the lawful business or occupation of any one; and it is alike the duty of keepers of public houses to furnish their guests with the necessary food and refreshment on the first, as well as all other days of the week. Public houses are established, and must be used for public convenience and accommodation.

Resolved, That we deplore the existence in our community of a spirit of religious fanaticism, intolerance and persecution, and we deeply dread the consequences if this spirit should be imbibed by those whose duty it is to dispense justice and administer law. It is a foul spirit that prompts men to denounce those of their fellow men who follow an occupation that has been especially sanctioned and protected by law since the earliest period of the settlement of this country, with the epithet of rum-seller, and their establishments as rummeries and rum-holes.

It is the same fanatical, persecuting spirit that enacted the Connecticut blue laws, and prompted the Puritans of Massachusetts, under the solemnity of legal proceedings, to maim, maltreat, and murder, those who differed with them in religious belief.

Resolved, That we humbly suggest to the judges of the Court of Quarter Sessions, that they can not value too highly or preserve with too much care that great chart of civil liberty, the Constitution of our Commonwealth. It is the great power operating unseen that gives vitality and vigor to their mandates, and force and effect to their judgments—that secures to them their term office and an adequate compensation. The rights secured by its provisions are to all, and for all, without regard to class or occupation, and the humble and lofty are equally entitled to its protection."

Such are the proceedings of the Commissioners of the District of Moyamensing. We do not introduce them here because we endorse them in toto; but because they announce some vitally important principles, overlooked and trodden under foot, for some years past, in the land of Penn. We are no advocate for the license system, nor do we defend "rummeries;" neither do we stop to inquire into the validity of the power to grant licenses or to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors, nor to question the abstract right of the Legislature, to order the bar of public houses to be closed on any one, or more, of the seven days of the week, as a mere matter of policy, without, thereby, recognizing an ecclesiastical polity, and establishing a "preference" for sect—the Sunday sect; but when official functionaries, in attempting to overcome one vice, inflict a greater evil, an irreparable injury on the institutions of the country, and do violence to the most inestimable vested rights of a portion of its citizens, we protest, and shall protest, against making use of one restriction covertly to impose another under the sanction of an ostensibly judicious prohibition—in plain language, to close the bar of public houses, as one among many other means, to enforce—coerce—the sanctification of a particular day of the week, not required by the Law-Giver in Zion, but much to the detriment of the Heaven-appointed Rest-Day—the true Sabbath of the Lord. Therefore we do protest, and ever shall protest, against any judicial officer transcending his legitimate powers, for any purpose whatsoever, however specious; and hail the above reproof, against such usurpation, as a signal omen of returning to the first principles of republicanism—as an evidence of the waking up of the people to their rights, which are in imminent danger of being, clandestinely, wrested from them. We trust it will induce others to look into some other statutes of the State; where they will find the inestimable rights of civil and religious immunities filched from a respectable class of citizens, by partial, by sectarian legislation. There is much need of reform; and we rejoice in this step towards revision. We trust that it is the opening wedge, and that the work will be prosecuted vigorously, until every wrong and every infringement on the Charter of our liberties, shall be removed from the statute book of the State, and all the oppressed be redeemed and disenthralled from all unjust and partial legislation. W. M. F.

December 10.

◆

"The Power of Illustration an Element of Success in Preaching and Teaching," is the title of a neat little volume, written by John Dowling, D. D., and published by Lewis Colby & Co., 122 Nassau street. It contains the substance of an address delivered before a society of candidates for the ministry in the New Hampton Theological Institute, to which is added some new matter calculated to increase its value to Sabbath School teachers and Christian parents who would succeed in adapting the truths of the Gospel to the understandings of their youthful charge.

◆

The Union Magazine for January, just published, exceeds in attractions any of the previous numbers. It contains a large amount and good variety of original reading matter, three mezzotint engravings, eight wood cuts, and two pages of music, making an interesting book of itself. Edited by Mrs. C. M. Kirkland; published by Israel Post, No. 140 Nassau-st.

◆

Receipts of the American Board.—The receipts of the American Board during the month of November, 1846, were $14,326 42. During November of the present year, the receipts of the same Board were $25,164 78.

Sabbath Lectures in New York.—Eld. Thomas B. Brown is about to commence, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in this city, (on Eleventh-st., between Bowery and Third Avenue,) a series of Lectures sustaining the claims of the seventh day of the week as the only Bible Sabbath. The Introductory Lecture will be delivered on Sunday evening next, at half past seven o'clock, and the course continued on each subsequent Sunday evening. Those who wish to hear the subject ably handled have now an opportunity.

◆

Jews in Baltimore.—The correspondent of the Tribune says that "the Jews have commenced the erection of another fine synagogue in Baltimore, in Eden street, for a Hebrew congregation, of which Mr. Philip Emmerick is president. The building will be fifty by seventy-one feet. By the way, the Jews in Baltimore have been splitting up and dividing for several years past, until they now have several places of worship, notwithstanding one synagogue would accommodate them all."

◆

Qualification for the Ministry.—A Convention of Universalists in Cambridge, Mass., after a long and somewhat exciting debate, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Association express its solemn conviction that, in order for one to be regarded as a Christian Minister, with respect to faith, he must believe in the Bible account of the Life, Teachings, Miracles, Death and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.

◆

The Peculiar Institution.—Samuel D. Burns, a colored schoolmaster, at Wilmington, Delaware, has been sentenced to ten months' imprisonment, and to be sold as a slave out of the State, for aiding the escape of slaves. The New York Tribune, in alluding to this circumstance, says:—

"We are often told by slaveholders that the free colored people are worse off than the slaves, and yet we find that when they would punish a free black with the utmost possible severity short of death, they make a slave of him! It is certainly an odd way of punishing men, to place them in a condition where their happiness is to be augmented. So, on the other hand, when the slaveholder seeks to reward his slave for meritorious services, he makes him free; that is, if there be any truth in the popular allegation in respect to the comparative happiness of the free and enslaved, he puts him into a condition in which he will be worse off than before! Happiness the reward of crime! Misery the recompense for generosity and fidelity! Surely slavery is a 'peculiar institution,'—so peculiar that, in the nature of things, he who undertakes to justify or apologize for it must of necessity talk nonsense, putting light for darkness and darkness for light!"

◆

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

The following intelligence, taken from the Boston Traveler, was communicated at the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Foreign Missions, held in Boston on the evening of the first Monday in December:—

Sandwich Islands.—The latest intelligence from the Sandwich Islands is to the 3d of August. Letters from Mr. Chamberlain, who was in the United States last year, announce his safe arrival at the Islands on the 4th of May, in improved health. Mr. C. writes that at several of the missionary stations on the islands there is more than usual religious interest. The Government continue their friendly countenance toward the Mission, and the good work of christianizing and elevating the inhabitants of this important group of islands is still in a flourishing and encouraging condition.

China.—A letter from Mr. Johnson, dated Fuh Chau, August 14, speaks in terms of encouragement of the prospects of his mission. He says he is everywhere kindly received. The Government, though aware of his presence, does not molest him; and some of the inferior magistrates even visit him in a friendly manner. The demand for books is very great, so much so that it is not safe to attempt to distribute them in the public streets. Mr. Johnson has begun to preach in Chinese.

Armenia.—A letter from Mr. Peabody, dated Erzeroom, August, 28, says that the cholera broke out in that city about two weeks previous. The deaths had averaged about four a day, and the number of victims was on the increase. The cholera reached Trebizond on the 5th of September, and in two days there had been about twenty cases and five or six deaths.

Nestorians.—Mr. Perkins writes from Oroomiah, Aug. 8, that Mar Shimon, the Nestorian Patriarch, had been spending some weeks in the neighborhood of the American Missionaries, with whom he had held pleasant and familiar daily intercourse, often being their guest and lodging in their houses. He had invited the American Missionaries to preach in his tent, which they did, he being present and pronouncing the benediction at the close of the services. This is regarded as a very interesting movement on the part of the Head of the Nestorian Church. By this act he has given his formal and public sanction to the labors of the American Missionaries among the Nestorians.

A letter from Mr. Wright, dated Aug. 26, announces that the cholera had made its appearance at Oroomiah. It commenced its ravages, some weeks previously, in Georgia, and was traveling southward. In Tiflis and Erivan (Georgia) its ravages had been truly awful. It next appeared in Khoy and Salmas; then in Oroomiah and Tabreez, in Persia. The time for the appearance of this awful scourge is considered peculiarly unfavorable; it is the season of the Mussulmen's annual fast, when they abstain wholly from food during the day, and glut themselves by night; it is the season of the year, too, when fruit is the principal food of the people; and moreover, the heat of the summer is not yet past. The locusts, too, are devastating the country.

Scott & Co.'s Republications.—The November number of the North British Review has been republished by Leonard Scott & Co., with their usual promptness. The following is a list of its articles: "Sketches of the History of Christian Art;" "Oxford;" "Our Mining Population;" "The Abuses of Jury Trials;" "The Lands of the Bible;" "Bunsen's Church of the Future;" "Mediæval History of Italy;" "A Voyage of Discovery and Research in the Southern and Antartic Regions, during the years 1839—43;" "The Life and Writings of Percy Bysshe Shelly;" "The Microscope."

The November number commences the third volume of the North British Review, rendering the present a favorable time to subscribe. The same may be said of the other reprints of Scott & Co.—the London Quarterly Review, the Edinburgh Review, and Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine. They all begin new volumes near the beginning of the new year. What better holiday present could be given to a clergyman than a year's subscription to one or more of these reprints? The price for any one of the Reviews is $3 per annum, for any two $5, for any three $7, for all four $8, for Blackwood's Magazine $3, for Blackwood and the four Reviews $10. Orders should be addressed to Leonard Scott & Co., 79 Fulton-st., corner of Gold, New York.

◆

Pope Pius IX. and the Jews.—The Jewish Chronicle says that one of the present Pope's most praiseworthy reformations has been in behalf of this oppressed part of the population of Rome. They number about 8,000, and have hitherto been obliged to reside in an inclosed place, called the Ghetto, on the north side of the Tiber, entirely insufficient, and therefore miserably crowded and unwholesome. The gates of this inclosure were shut at sunset, and a Jew found outside after this time was imprisoned. They were, however, allowed the privilege of depositing goods for merchandise in buildings without the inclosure. Another prohibition was from the practice of any of the liberal or artistical professions. The Pope has commenced examining into these and their other grievances, and has appointed a Commission to propose improvements. As a consequence, the confinement of the Jews to the Ghetto is already abolished, and other ameliorations are about to follow. Cardinal Ferretti has avowed himself the patron and protector of the Israelites. The Roman populace have shown themselves worthy of liberty, by the cordiality with which they have welcomed the accession of this hitherto despised race to some of their own privileges. Dinners have been given to them, and bodies of artisans have visited the Ghetto to offer their congratulations. The Jews themselves are full of the most enthusiastic gratitude toward their benefactor, and have sent a deputation to the Pope, headed by their Rabbi, begging to be permitted to enroll themselves as a National Guard, armed at their own expense, to join in the defense of the Papal States. Some of their most learned Rabbis have also pronounced the present Pope the Messiah. To support this, they quote the passage in the old Rabbinical book, the Kadhakemach, fol. 48, col. 1, where it is said—"The last Redeemer who shall be revealed very soon in our days will be of the metropolitan city, Rome; and this is the prediction of the prophet Isaiah, xxvii., 10, For the defensed city shall be desolate, and the pleasant habitation shall be forsaken and left like a wilderness; the calf shall feed there, (that is the Pope,) there shall he lie down, and he shall consume the branches thereof."

◆

Secession of German Catholics.—On Sunday, the 21st ult., fifty-eight Roman Catholics, in Newark, N. J., formally seceded from the Roman Catholic Church. They had been meeting in private for some time previous, to study the Scriptures—had chosen themselves a Pastor—and now came together to make a public renunciation of their allegiance to the Church of Rome, in which they had been brought up. Dr. Brinsmade's Church (Presbyterian) was offered them for the occasion, and there were present, beside the seceders and their families and friends, in all about 200 Germans, a large audience of spectators. Among the exercises were addresses from the venerable Dr. Milledoler, from Rev. Mr. Lockmeyer, a converted Roman Catholic priest from Bavaria, and their Pastor. A very impressive ceremony was the presentation of a Bible by the people to the Pastor, with injunctions to draw all his teachings from it. As a class they seemed intelligent, serious, and in earnest; they deprecated the denunciations which this step had brought upon them, and asked why they should not be allowed, in this free country, to read the Bible and follow out what they believed to be its teachings, in quiet. They insist that they remain Catholics of the one Catholic Apostolic Church; that from this they do not secede. They disavow connection with any denomination of Protestants, or with Ronge and his doctrines. They adopt the Bible as their creed, and claim for every one the right to read and investigate it for himself. They also subscribe to a short formula of its principal doctrines, very similar to that adopted by the German Catholics who seceded in the Tabernale at this city, last year, and with slight exceptions entirely Protestant in its character.

◆

Distressing Calamity.—Island of Tobago—It will be recollected that, from the Jamaica papers received some weeks ago, we announced that a terrible hurricane had recently devastated the beautiful Island of Tobago, one of the British West India possessions, causing a great destruction of property and human life. The New-Orleans Commercial Times has letters giving some details of this catastrophe, from which we learn that sixty-one large country residences, fifty-nine plantation sugar-works, and six hundred and thirty-two dwelling houses and other edifices, of which some were religious ones, churches, chapels, &c., have been swept into irretrievable ruin by this awful storm. Up to the latest dates, the names of thirty human beings have been ascertained, as having perished during the terrible war of elements; and it is believed, when full accounts are received from the remote parts of the Island, that the number will be very much increased. The Jamaica papers say that the distress occasioned among the population by the disaster, is so great, that a memorial has been addressed to the Home Government, for aid and succor.

General Intelligence.

OPENING OF CONGRESS—THE MESSAGE.

The Thirtieth Congress of the United States commenced its first session at Washington, on Monday, Nov. 6th.

The SENATE was called to order by Geo. M. Dallas, Vice President. After the new Senators had taken the usual oath of office, a message was sent to the House of Representatives announcing the organization of the Senate.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, 220 members answered to their names on the calling of the roll. After several ballotings, Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, was chosen Speaker. Thomas Jefferson Campbell, of Tennessee, was elected Clerk; Nathan Sargent, of Pennsylvania, Sergeant-at-Arms; and Robert E. Hornor, of New Jersey, Door-keeper.

The PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE was presented and read before Congress on Tuesday. It is a long document—so long that we judge best not to publish it entire, but to give the following synopsis of it:—

The Message opens with an allusion to the "wide-spread and universal prosperity" of our country, and the evidence which we are affording to the world that man is capable of self-government.

The Mexican War furnishes the next topic, and one upon which several columns are expended, principally in narrating what has been done, and endeavoring to prove the wisdom and justice of it. No change in our relation to Mexico has taken place since the adjournment of Congress. The Peace Commissioner sent out to Mexico has accomplished nothing. His instructions were to negotiate for peace on condition of such a cession of territory to the United States as would indemnify the claims of her citizens and reimburse the expenses of the War. He was therefore authorized to agree to the establishment of the Rio Grande as the boundary, from its entrance into the Gulf to its intersection with the southern boundary of New Mexico, in north latitude about thirty-two degrees, and to obtain a cession to the United States of the provinces of New Mexico and the Californias, and the privilege of the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. "The boundary of the Rio Grande, and the cession to the United States of New Mexico and Upper California, constituted an ultimatum which our commissioner was, under no circumstances, to yield." This Mexico would not agree to, and consequently the commission failed, hostilities were renewed, and the city of Mexico taken. The President is now persuaded, that "the best means of vindicating the national honor and interest, and of bringing the war to an honorable close, will be to prosecute it with increased energy and power in the vital parts of the enemy's country." With this view, he would abandon the policy which has heretofore been pursued, of paying for all provisions and supplies for the army; and would recommend the policy of levying upon the enemy contributions in every form, consistent with the laws of nations, which it may be practicable for our commanders to adopt. He would also recommend the enrollment of an additional regular force to serve during the war with Mexico, and to be discharged upon the conclusion and ratification of a treaty of peace.

Our relations with all other countries are friendly and peaceful. Particular attention is invited to the condition of our citizens in China. Under our treaty with that power, American citizens are withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the Chinese Government, and placed under that of our public functionaries in that country. It is recommended that competent tribunals be established there to exercise jurisdiction in civil cases. Unless something of the kind is done, danger is apprehended from the known inclination of the Chinese to inflict summary justice when it cannot be obtained in a legal way.

The Message recommends that an appropriation be made, to be paid to the Spanish Government, for the purpose of distribution among the claimants in the Amistad case.

In regard to the finances of the country, the Message refers principally to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It states, however, that the expenses during the fiscal year ending June 30th last, were $59,441,177 65. It is estimated that the receipts for the next year, ending June 30, 1848, will be $42,886,545 80; while the expenditures for the same period, if the war continues, will amount to $58,615,660 07. The public debt on the 1st inst. was $45,659,659 40. Should the war continue, a loan of $18,500,000 will be required for the remainder of the present fiscal year; also a loan of $20,500,000 for the year ending June 30, 1849. As a means of increasing the revenue, and diminishing the amount of loans, the Message recommends a duty on tea and coffee, from which about three millions of dollars would be derived annually.

The establishment of a branch Mint of the United States at New York is again recommended.

The attention of Congress is invited to the condition of Oregon, where our citizens are still left without the protection of our laws. A territorial government is recommended; also the establishment of a Surveyor-General's office, with a view to having the lands surveyed and brought into market at an early period.

Pacific relations continue to exist with the various Indian tribes, and most of them manifest a strong friendship for the United States.

An arrangement has been made by which eighteen steamships, to be used in transporting the mail to various ports, are to be under the partial control of the Navy Department, and may at any time be taken for the exclusive use of the United States, upon making proper compensation to the contractors.

In relation to the Post Office Department, the Message states, that the revenue received for the year will be sufficient to defray all the expenses, and that no farther aid will be required from the treasury for that purpose.

The Message concludes by calling attention to the "immense value of our glorious Union of Confederate States," and exhorts the people to "avoid all agitating topics which may tend to distract and divide us into contending parties, separated by geographical lines, whereby it may be weakened or endangered."

☞ There was not much done in Congress last week, except to organize, and hear the Message and the Reports from the different Departments. The House adjourned over from Thursday to Monday, for the purpose of giving the Speaker time to select the Committees. The Senate adjourned over to the same time on account of the death of Senator Huntington of Connecticut.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Britannia arrived at Boston on the evening of the 8th, bringing foreign news to Nov. 19.

There had been quite a number of failures since the previous steamer; but commercial affairs generally had a more favorable appearance, rendering it probable that the crisis was past.

The Cotton market had been dull for a few days, but no decline. The market for Wheat and Indian Corn was firm and active, although prices had not advanced.

The noble packet ship Stephen Whitney was totally lost at 10 o'clock P. M., of the 10th of Nov., on her voyage from New York to Liverpool, under circumstances the most perfectly appalling that the imagination can possibly conceive. Mistaking the light upon Rock Island, near Cape Clear, on the south coast of Ireland, for the Old Head of Kinsale, she continued her course, intending to make Cork Harbor; but in less than a quarter of an hour, with a suddenness which defied all human efforts to avert her fate, she came broadside on a rock called the West Calf, about 4 miles inside the Cape, and in less than 10 minutes after striking she dashed to atoms, overwhelming no less than 92 of her helpless crew and passengers—18 only of 110 succeeded in clambering up the face of the rock, which forms a wretched island containing three fishermen's huts.

Hostilities have actually commenced in Switzerland, which have resulted unfavorably to the troops of the Sonderbond.

The state of Ireland is truly frightful. A system of agrarian resistance is every where manifested; landlords are daily falling before the vengeance of the people.

Count Bresson, French Ambassador at the Court of the Two Sicilies, committed suicide on the 2d ult.; and a short time previously, Count Mortier, also French Ambassador, attempted to murder both his children, and to cut his own throat, when laboring under a fit of insanity.

The vast valley of the Oder, in Prussian Silesia, has been inundated by the overflowing of the Oder. Incalculable damage has been done. The sown crops and the crops in barns have been destroyed. The Neisse and the Kamitzbatch have also overflown and submerged the neighboring fields, thereby depriving the inhabitants of all the crops for the ensuing year.

M. Felix Mendelsohu Bartholdy, the celebrated music composer, died at Leipzig on the 4th of November of an attack of apoplexy. He was thirty-eight years old, a grandson of the illustrious Philosopher Mendelsohu, and son of the celebrated archeologist, Jacques Solomon Bartholdy.

The Cork Examiner has a letter dated Oct. 24, showing that 55 heads of families, or 269 persons, were, that month, driven by force from the lands and homes they held as tenants in the barony of Duhollow. The lands are to be turned into sheep farms and cattle grazings. Many of the people must starve. They reside in huts in the ditches and roadsides opposite their old dwellings.

In Ireland, Maj. Dennis Mahon, a gentleman of large estate, has been shot dead on the public road, in Roscommon; and Michael Walsh, a steward to Charles O'Callaghan, Esq., put to death in Clare. Mr. Mahon was about to drive off his tenants. Major M. freighted off two of the vessels containing banished and dying creatures whose melancholy fate we stated last summer on their arrival in Canada. When the tidings reached Ireland he was shot.

Mr. Rydin, a dyer near Gottenburg, has invented a mode of dying cottons without indigo.

A HOGGISH CONVEYANCE.—A farmer near St. Albans, Vermont, recently made a grand entree into that place, mounted on a small car drawn by four large hogs. He entered the town at a brisk trot, amid the acclamations of hundreds who were soon drawn together to witness this uncommon spectacle. After making the tour of the market-place three or four times, he went into the wool-pack yard, had his swinish cattle unharnessed and taken into a stable together, where they were regaled with a trough full of beans and wash. They remained about two hours, while he dispatched his business as usual at the market, when they were put to and driven home again, multitudes cheering him. This man, it is said, has only had these animals under training six months. A gentleman on the spot offered him $240 for the concern as it stood, but it was indignantly refused.

SUMMARY.

Application will be made to the New-Jersey Legislature for a new Bank at Patterson, with $500,000 capital. The Somerville and Easton Railroad Company will apply for a supplement to their charter, authorizing them to purchase the Railroad from Somerville to Elizabethtown; also to authorize them to make a Branch Railroad to the City of New-Brunswick—also to authorize them to construct a Branch Railroad to Flemington, in the County of Hunterdon, and thence to the River Delaware, or to intersect the Camden and Amboy Railroad at or near Trenton.

The Thomaston (Me.) Recorder relates the particulars of a singular explosion which took place in that town recently, in the store of Mr. Timothy Gogg, by which the building was nearly shattered to pieces, the doors and windows, and nearly all of one end of the store, being burst out. A large amount of crockery and glass-ware, medicines, and other goods, were destroyed. There were three persons in the store at the time it took place, two of whom were uninjured, Mr. Gogg being the only one who received any serious injury, being burned severely in his arms and face. A can of powder was the cause of mischief.

There are about 23,000 Norwegian Emigrants lately settled in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin. There are 500 in the city of Chicago alone. They settle generally in communities by themselves—have frequently some little property, and are a sober, industrious and intelligent class of population. They are particularly desirous of having schools and religious instruction. The American Tract Society has colporteurs of their own nation at work among them, and is about to publish some books for them in their own language.

On Thursday of last week, Dr. Wainwright, of Crosby-st., received from a brother in Alabama, a present of a live rattlesnake. He let it out upon the floor, and in attempting to seize it to restore it to its box, was bitten in one of the fingers of the left hand, with such violence that the blood spirted from the wound several feet. The flesh was at once removed from the bitten place, but in vain. The arm swelled gradually from the hand to the shoulder, and finally at about half-past twelve the unfortunate man died. Several eminent physicians were in attendance, but their efforts were unavailing. The sufferer himself wished for the amputation of the arm above the swelling, but it was not thought advisable, as it was supposed that the poison proceeded by the blood-vessels and not by the absorbents.

A case is pending before the Washington County Court, Md., being an action brought by Hope H. Slatter, for damages sustained in the purchase of a negro (Bill Gross) convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to transportation. Wilson, as the Sheriff of the County, by the act of his deputy, sold the negro to Slatter without making him acquainted with the fact of his being a convict. The negro was forfeited in New-Orleans, where Slatter had taken him against the laws of the State of Louisiana. Slatter having lost the price of the negro, now seeks to recover damages for the deception practiced upon him by Wilson's deputy. The case had been given to the jury on Tuesday.

The Cholera has already disappeared from Moscow, but it appears to be spreading beyond that city in the direction of St. Petersburg. According to the latest intelligence from Moscow, the number of patients in that city on the morning of the 16th of October, amounted to 105. On the same day 37 others were attacked, of whom 23 have died. On the evening of the 17th of October, the number of patients was 135, which is considered an insignificant proportion for 300,000 inhabitants. There have been a few cases at Waldai and at Novogorod, a city not more than forty leagues from St. Petersburg.

Da Rocha and Da Costa, the two slaves who made so much stir in this city a few months since, have arrived out, we see by one of the papers, at Port-au-Prince, St. Domingo. Da Rocha, the elder of the two, takes care of himself. Da Costa has been taken into the service of Rev. Wm. L. Judd, and American Baptist Missionary, who intends to give him an English education and send him a missionary to his own country. He was born at Kashina, northern part of Soudan, Africa, and his native tongue is Arabic. His African name was Mahommah, which he prefers to his Brazillian given name.

Rev. Samuel Ripley, pastor of the Unitarian Church in Lincoln, Mass., died suddenly. He had gone to the depot in Concord, expecting some of his family to join him in the pleasures of Thanksgiving, and was found dead in his carriage, when it arrived at the railroad depot

In his Thanksgiving Proclamation, the Governor of Iowa says, that "no State in our Union has made more rapid strides in the advancement of Education, Commerce and Agriculture than Iowa."

The bill lately introduced in the New York Legislature to tax bachelors seven dollars a year for the support of orphans, thus defines a bachelor: "Every unmarried white male, unconvicted of crime, of good health, and fair physical proportions, and who is between the ages of 29 and 56 years, shall be deemed an old bachelor."

There is a great quarrel in the now wealthy Order of Odd Fellows. The Grand Lodge of the United States has overturned all the acts of the late session of the Grand Lodge of this State. The language of the Grand Sire is not to be commended as based upon the harsh report of the committee.

The good people of Tecumseh, Michigan, are congratulating themselves upon the discovery of native gold in the vicinity of their village. Several pieces of very pure gold ore have been obtained, and arrangements are being made to prosecute the work of mining with vigor.

When Isaiah Thomas, printer of the Farmer's Almanac, was called upon by a printer's devil to know what he should put against the 13th of July, Mr. T. replied, any thing, upon which the boy set rain, hail, and snow, at which the country was amazed, but it so happened that it did rain, hail, and snow on that day, and proved a profitable storm to the proprietor of the Almanac for future numbers.

The Louisville Examiner, speaking of a hemp brake, recently invented near that place by James Anderson, says that its success will "link in future the name of Anderson with that of Whitney. On its first trial ten pounds of hemp was thoroughly broken in one minute, or six hundred pounds per hour, and the belief is, that a larger quantity will be prepared in a shorter time, when the machine has been a little longer in operation."

Dr. Duncan Smith, of Caledonia, Livingston Co., is the owner of a hog which, for size and weight, cannot be easily surpassed. He measures 8 feet in length, and girts around 7 feet. He weighed on the 1st day of June last, 750 pounds—measured 7 feet in length, and 6 feet in girth. Since that time he has not been weighed, but his weight is now estimated at 1,000 pounds. He was 2 years old last August—is in lean condition, and constantly growing.

Agriculture, says Socrates, is an employment the most worthy the application of man, the most ancient and most suitable to his nature; it is the common nurse of all persons, in every age and condition of life; it is a source of health, strength, plenty, and riches, and of a thousand sober pleasures. It is the mistress and school of sobriety, temperance, justice, religion, and in short of all virtue, civil, and military.

The jury in the case of the St. Augustine Church vs. the County of Philadelphia, rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, assessing the damage at $47,433 87. This action, it will be recollected, arose from the destruction of the property of the plaintiff, during the disturbances between the foreign and native inhabitants of Philadelphia.

The total number of emigrants to Canada has been thus far, this season, 98,105, against 32,753 for the corresponding period last season. Of this large number 5,293 died on the passage, and 8,072 at the hospitals at Quebec. Add 7,000 more for deaths in and about Montreal, and you have the total loss by death at upward of 20,000.

A serious accident occurred to Rev. Mr. Stetson, of Medford, on Friday, 26th ultimo. In returning home from the funeral of Rev. Mr. Ripley, walking by the side of the road in the dark of the evening, he fell into a deep hole which had been dug for a drain. His right shoulder was broken close in the socket, rendering the chances of his ever recovering the perfect use of the arm precarious.

The Universalists held a Convention at South Woodstock, Vt., on the 18th ult., and adopted measures for establishing in Windsor County a Literary Institution of a high grade, to be under their own special control.

A bill is before the Legislature of South Carolina 'to prevent the marital rights of the Husband from attaching upon the estates of Married Women.' The South Carolinian says it has the good wishes of the whole State, and if so, it can hardly fail to become a law.

A boot-maker of London has invented a rotary heel to be applied to boots, so that when run down on one side by uneven treading, it can be easily twisted round, thus producing another even surface, and easier locomotion to the wearer.

Rev. Asa Turner, a Revolutionary hero, and for 33 years a minister of the gospel in Chautauque Co. died in Stockton, in that County, on the 27th ult., in the 83d year of his age. He joined the Continental army at the early age of 13 years.

Judge Childs, brother of Col. Childs, the gallant commander of the forces at Puebla, and who represented the Monroe Co., District in Congress for several years, died a few weeks ago, while on his way to a warmer climate for the benefit of his health.

The Archbishop of York died at the Palace near York, Nov. 5, after an illness of two days, in the 91st year of his age. He enjoyed the high dignity of his station, and performed its duties, for a period of 40 years, having been previously Bishop of Carlisle for 16 years.

Cassius M. Clay left New Orleans on the 30th of Nov. on his return to his home and family, after eighteen months of absence, the greater part of which time he has spent in captivity.

A Mr. Brown being out with a fishing party on Oneida Lake, was stabbed by T. T. Barton, so that he died a few days afterwards.

Isaac Bacon has obtained a verdict against the City of Boston for damages to the amount of $1,787 50; he having broken his ankle by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk left for the admission of light to a cellar.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, DEC. 13.

ASHES—Pots $5 56; Pearls 7 00.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 25; Oswego and Western 6 18. Meal 3 30 a 3 50. Rye Flour 5 56.

GRAIN—The market for Wheat is dull. Virginia brought 1 30, and Illinois 1 15. Corn 70 a 78c. Rye 83 a 85c. Barley 80c. Oats 46 a 49c.

PROVISIONS—Prime Pork 8 40; Mess 13 50. Beef 5 50 a 8 50. New Lard 9c. Butter, 11 a 13 for Ohio, 12 a 22 for the whole range of State. Cheese 6½ a 7c.

MARRIED,

At Independence, N. Y., on the 29th ult., by Eld. S. Rider, Mr. EPHRAIM D. STILLMAN and Miss LURANIA WOOD, all of Independence.

LETTERS.

S. S. Griswold, Geo. R. Wheeler, Thomas E. Babcock, J. P. Livermore, O. B. Cutter, H. P. Burdick, I. D. Titsworth, G. W. Hazelton, Sam'l Davison, Charles Potter, J. F. Randolph, C. M. Lewis, (Vernon, Vt.) Maxson Green, (the papers have been regularly sent—Eld. Hull's letter was immediately answered—the books and reports will be ready any time after one week)

RECEIPTS.

Lewis Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	$2 00	pays to vol. 4	No. 52
John Bowen, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
B S. Randolph, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Mariah Woodruff, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
John Bright, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
H. Glasspell, "	2 00	" 5	" 25
P. F. Randolph, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	" 4	" 52
R. W. Merritt, Newport, R. I.	1 00	" 4	" 52
J. B. Cottrell, Richbury,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Calvin Messenger, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Naboth Welch, "	1 00	" 5	" 20
B. W Millard, Alfred,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Orrin Vincent, "	2 00	" 4	" 40
Job Spencer, Adams,	2 00	" 4	" 52
A. M. Whitford, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Jason B. Wells, New York,	2 00	" 4	" 52

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.
CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, PROPRIETOR.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday, Aug. 25, and ending Dec. 1
Second " " Dec. 15, " March 22
Third " " April 5, " July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J. Agents.

FIRESIDE READING
For Christian Families,

Bound in uniform style, in Muslin, with fine Cuts and Engravings.

LIVES OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. By Rev. R. W. Cushman; with portraits from the old masters. "Who will ever tire of reading the Biographies of the disciples of our blessed Lord; especially when they are presented in so delightful a form as in the neat volume before us, and in a style of language so pure, unaffected, and every way fitted to its subjects?"—Albany Spectator.

A Pure Religion the World's Only Hope. By Rev R. W. Cushman. "We commend it to all who love religious freedom, as worth study and admiration."—N. Y. Evangelist

Facts for Boys: Selected and arranged by Joseph Belcher, D. D.—A world of philosophy often lies in a simple narrative, and lessons of wisdom may spring from a little fact, which whole tomes can never impart.

Facts for Girls: By the same Author

The London Apprentice: An authentic Narrative; with a Preface by W. H. Pearce, Missionary from Calcutta.—"I should be glad if my notice of this little work—'The Happy Transformation'—should induce numbers of young men to purchase and read it."—Rev. J. A. James.

Sketch of my Friend's Family. By Mrs. Marshall. Intended to suggest some practical hints on religion and domestic manners.

Every-Day Duty: or Sketches of Childish Character.—The Author, in this book, in plain and simple language, enters into the sports and incidents of childhood, and would show to children that they are always happiest when doing right.

The Way for a Child to be Saved. By Abbott.—This entertaining book, which has already had a wide circulation, can hardly fail of being a means of good to every child that reads it.

Charles Linn: or, How to Observe the Golden Rule. By Miss Emily Chubbuck (now Mrs. Judson.)—"The stories are most admirably adapted to the wants of the rising generation, by the wholesome morals which they inculcate." Christian Secretary.

Allen Lucas, the self-made Man. By the same author.—"Whatever Fanny Forrester writes bears the stamp of genius—nor this only. It also bears the stamp of moral excellence."—Charter Oak.

Wonders of the Deep. The design of this volume is to state, in a style which shall both instruct and amuse, the most remarkable facts connected with the natural history of the products of the sea.

The Guilty Tongue.—It is somewhat on the plan of Mrs. Opie's Illustrations of Lying.

My Station and its Duties. The design of this volume is to enforce fidelity in the various stations in which it has pleased God to place us.

The House of the Thief, or the Eighth Commandment Practically Illustrated.—This little volume illustrates its point by tracing the flagrant violation of the command "Thou shalt not steal," to the first departures from strict honesty in the ordinary commerce of life.

Visit to Nahant.—Designed to interest the minds of the young in the natural history of the shell and soft Fish, found on the coast of this celebrated promontory; and by an easy and felicitous method to lead them "through nature up to nature's God."

L. COLBY & CO., Publishers,
122 Nassau Street, New York.

THE NATIONAL ERA:
Washington City, District of Columbia.

G. BAILEY, Editor; JOHN G. WHITTIER, Cor. Editor.

L. P. NOBLE, Publisher.

The leading purpose of this journal is, the discussion of the question of Slavery, and the advocacy of the main principles of the Liberty Party. Due attention is given to Social and Political Questions of general importance; nor are the interests of a Pure Literature overlooked.

It aims to preserve a faithful record of important events: of inventions or discoveries affecting the progress of Society, of public documents of permanent value; and, during the sessions of Congress, to present such reports of its proceedings, as will convey a correct idea not only of its action, but of its spirit and policy. The debates on the exciting subjects of Slavery and the Mexican War, expected to arise in the next Congress, will occupy a large share of its columns.

Arrangements have been made for extending and enriching its already valuable Department of Home and Foreign Correspondence.

It is printed on a mammoth sheet, of the finest quality, in the best style, at $2 a year, payable in advance.

The generous spirit in which the Era has been welcomed by the Public Press, and the very liberal patronage it has received during this, the first year of its existence, encourages us to hope for large accessions to our subscription list.

It is desirable that subscriptions be forwarded without delay, so that they may be entered before the approaching Congress.

All communications addressed to L. P. NOBLE,
Publisher of the National Era, Washington, D. C.

Miscellaneous.

THE DIRTY BOY.

O! fie, little Freddy,
'Tis quite a disgrace,
To cry to be washed,
With so dirty a face.

And see, here are hands, too,
Not fit to be seen;
You cannot be healthy,
Unless you are clean.

Think, love, of those children,
Neglected and poor,
Whom you, Master Freddy,
Would pity, I'm sure;

Who've no one, their wants
Or their health to attend;
No father, no mother,
And scarcely a friend.

How glad would they be,
Had they parents, like you,
Whatever they wished
For their comfort, to do.

Sure, haughty and wicked
They then would appear
If they should like best
To be dirty, my dear.

There, that's a good boy,
Now you are blooming and nice;
I thought you'd be willing
To take good advice.

Those children, who fancy
They always know best,
Instead of a pleasure,
To all are a pest.

You now are so rosy,
I scarcely should know
The sweep, that you looked like,
Five minutes ago.

Go, run to your mother,
With eyes full of joy,
And ask a sweet kiss,
For her clean, little boy.

FROGS AND TOADS.

Many people think that the toad is poisonous. Believe me, when I tell you this is not the truth; on the contrary, it is perfectly harmless, may be rendered tame, and even taught to eat out of your hand. True, it is far from prepossessing in its appearance; but this is no excuse for destroying it. Were we, on the contrary, to encourage it in our gardens, and protect it, we should soon perceive its usefulness in the diminution of insects and worms which make such havoc among vegetation. You would be delighted to watch it before seizing upon its prey. For a moment or two it remains perfectly motionless and fixed as a stone, its eyes bent upon the insect, and its head thrown forward; when, the instant the object moves, it is struck by the tongue of the toad, and drawn into its mouth; and so rapid is the action, that it is scarcely the work of a moment; and unless your eye happens to alight upon it in the very tick of time, you would discover that the insect had gone, without seeing when or where. It is also very amusing to see it seize upon a large, long worm; especially if it happens to lay hold of it in the middle; the poor worm twists and turns all kinds of ways, on the outside of the jaws of the toad, and by its twining and struggling, endeavors to escape; but all in vain, for the toad makes use of its fore feet, first shoving one end of it into its mouth, and then the other, until the whole is devoured. Gilbert White, in his "History of Selborne," tells us of some ladies who took a fancy to a toad, which used to come out every evening from a hole under the garden steps, after supper, was always taken up and placed upon the table, where it was fed: so that, you see, there were a few people, even more than half a century ago, who were not afraid of being poisoned by it. Mr. Bell, in his "History of British Reptiles," makes mention of a very large one which he kept, which would sit on one of his hands while it ate from the other. I must also tell you that the toad, like the snake, casts its skin, and now and then comes out with a new coat on its back. As to its being found alive in the centre of a solid rock, or in the heart of a large tree, where it has been supposed to have lived for hundreds of years, without either a mouthful of food or a breath of air, why, I think it about as likely to be true as the tale of the horse, which its owner boasted he would teach to live upon nothing, and which, to nobody's astonishment but his own, died as soon as he began to reduce it to a straw a day. So has it turned out in every experiment which has been made to imprison toads, either in stone, plaster, or wood; and although they have lived much longer than might have been expected, they have generally been found dead at the end of a few months. One or two, I believe, have lived over a year in this state of imprisonment; but no animal requires less respiration, or, when not in motion, can live upon less food.

Those little dark-looking objects which all of you must have seen swimming about, by hundreds, in ponds and ditches, with their large, round heads and long tails, and something like fins projecting out from each side of the neck, and which you call tadpoles, are young frogs; and were it not that thousands upon thousands of them are devoured by small fishes, they would soon multiply to such an extent that, when fully grown, they would overrun the land. Few animals have more persecutors than the poor frogs; it can never grow too big for the jaws of the voracious pike; almost every kind of water-fowl feeds upon it; it is the favorite food of the snake; and as for weasels and polecats, they devour them by hundreds; and there is hardly a bird of prey that does not feed upon them. Surely, then, this poor reptile has plenty of enemies, without being pelted to death or destroyed by cruel boys. Like the toad, it is a great destroyer of insects, and you will never find many in a garden which is frequented by frogs; it takes its food in in the same manner, by throwing forward its tongue, which, in a state of repose, doubles back as you would fold a leaf; its tongue also possesses a kind of sticky matter, to which the prey adheres.

You have, no doubt, heard scores of them croaking when you have been walking out, on a beautiful calm evening, by the side of some long, straggling dyke; and to me it has ever seemed far from unpleasant noise; and during my rambles by the side of such places, I have always made a point of looking where I planted my foot, that I might avoid trampling any one of them to death. Like many other reptiles, it sleeps during the winter, burying itself in the mud at the bottom of the water, where they are often found in draining or digging out a water-course, huddled together by scores; and I have seen a large spadeful of them lifted out at once. When spring comes, they are all alive and kicking again. But the most wonderful thing in the structure of these harmless reptiles is, that they have the power of breathing through the skin. This has been proved by tying up the head tightly with a portion of bladder—in fact, literally hanging them—then placing them in a vessel under water. If you ever want to see how far a frog can leap, without doing it any injury, strike the gound smartly a few inches behind where it is squatted, with a stick, and away it will jump, an astonishing distance. Their motions in the water are beautiful, and I know no better tutor to teach you the art of swimming than a frog. Only watch narrowly its attitude, stretch yourself out as it does, with the head elevated, and strike out in the same way with the hands and feet, and, take my word for it, you will soon be able to swim. [Boy's Own Library.

THE EMPEROR NICHOLAS.

The United Service Journal, in a very interesting and laudatory article on the Emperor of Russia, gives the following, among other anecdotes, illustrative of his character and habits:—

He is frequently met on foot in the street absolutely alone, and the immediate contact in which he then comes with his subjects of every degree, is sometimes the occasion of drawing forth his affability and proving the kindness of his nature. The etiquette on meeting him, is for a man to uncover the head and women to courtesy. He returns all salutations, not excepting those of the meanest peasants.

It happened once, that when he was thus walking alone, he came up with a Frenchman, newly-arrived at St. Petersburg, who, ignorant of the reciprocal consideration there deemed due from man to man, was smoking a cigar. The Emperor, dressed as usual in his officer's cap and cloak, passed him, and, bowing, said,

'Sir, it is not permitted to smoke in the streets.'

'Why?' said the Frenchman.

'It is not considered polite to those who walk there also; and therefore is forbidden.'

'I respect authority; I obey.'

He threw away his cigar, and continued to walk by the side of the supposed officer, and, with French familiarity, entered into conversation, which turned chiefly upon the country and the government, the Emperor giving him much information.

He soon found that many persons saluted his companion.

'You appear, monsieur, to possess a large acquaintance,' said he.

'That is a fact,' said the Emperor.

They walked on, the Frenchman talking, and the Emperor replying.

More salutations, uncapped heads, and low reverences, raised the curiosity of the stranger.

'You appear, monsieur, to be a person of consequence here; I fear I have been most unceremoniously intruding upon your time and patience. Surely, you must be the Governor General.'

'I have been happy to afford information to a stranger; but you are mistaken in supposing me to be the Governor General.'

'Why, then, do all persons whom me meet, salute you.'

'Because I am their Emperor.'

The astonished foreigner, gratified with his adventure, paid his willing homage also.

SOMETHING NEW.

ELEVATED RAILWAY OVER BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

A correspondent of the National Intelligencer describes a plan which is now receiving the consideration of the principal men in New-York, and which is thought, if practicable, would relieve Broadway of those dangers now experienced from the frequent passing of omnibuses and stages, and which difficulty is increasing from year to year. The following is an extract:

"The omnibuses and other vehicles are now so numerous as to render it difficult, troublesome, and often hazardous to life, for foot people to cross the street. The conviction has long prevailed that something must be done ere long to relieve Broadway from this pressure. But how the thing is to be accomplished has been a difficult problem to solve. Laying rail tracks in Broadway, opening new parallel thoroughfares by widening other streets or opening new ones, and other projects, have been much discussed for two or three years past, but public opinion has yet settled down upon none of them. Some new, magnificent plans are now under consideration. One of the principal of these I have been examining a little while this morning.

"This plan is the invention of John Randall, jr., a civil engineer. He has been two years engaged in perfecting his model, and at an expense of about $4,000. He is now exhibiting to the citizens a complete model, thirty or forty feet in length, and ten or twelve in breadth, showing the whole plan of the road, and the movements of the cars. The rail tracks are proposed to be elevated fourteen feet above the curb stones of the sidewalks, to be supported by iron pillars along the curb stones, and iron cross pieces running across the street, the whole framework to be iron, and capable of sustaining seventy-five tons at any point. On this framework are to be laid four railroad tracks, from Bowling Green to Union Place, about three miles, and running round the Bowling Green and the Park at Union Place, thus forming an endless road. The two inner tracks are for the main cars, and the two outer tracks for what are called tenders. The cars are to be attached to and moved by an endless rope; the motive power to be one or more steam engines at some central point on the road. The main cars are to be in constant motion without any stoppages during the running hours of the day and evening, at a speed of perhaps six miles an hour.

"At the corner of every cross street, or every second cross street, will be stations where passengers ascend the stairway and step into one of the tenders, which for the time are stationary. But immediately one of the main cars comes up, and when abreast of the tender fastens to it by means of machinery, and takes it along to the next station, and so on. As soon as a tender is attached to a main car, so as to become as it were a main part of it, a door is opened by the conductor, and the passengers step from the tender into the main car, and those in the main car who wish to, step out into the tender. The door is then closed to prevent accidents, and the main car leaves its tender at the next corner.

"It is calculated to have sixty or seventy of the main cars, so that there may not be more than two or three minutes between them, and as many tenders as there are corners or stations. It is calculated also to have promenades by the side of these tracks, either half the width or the whole width of the sidewalk below; and, in order not to obstruct too much the light below, they will be covered by semi-transparent glass. Various other appendages are suggested to give more or less the conveniences of a street in this upper story of Broadway, but it is not necessary to describe these at present.

"The expense of erecting this railway and putting it in full operation, is estimated by the inventor, after careful calculations, at a million and a half or two millions of dollars. If the city council shall sanction the plan, then application will be made to the State Legislature to charter a company for its construction. The perfect operation of the model is a pretty strong argument in favor of the plan. It has already been visited by many of our citizens, and I believe, has generally made a favorable impression."

◆

Exhilerating Gas.—Cist's Advertiser relates a number of experiments lately given at a public exhibition in Cincinnati. One of them is peculiarly interesting. He says:—

'Lastly came a well-known philanthropist and abolitionist, whose secret thoughts, as brought out, well corresponded with his reputation for benevolence. He lifted his hand to his head, as if he was catching at an idea, walked a few steps, and returning to the lecturer, seized his hand, giving it a few cordial shakes—then drew him by one hand gently forward, and put the other on his back, which he pated as he would that of a dog. He then stopped, and opened his pocket-book, handed the lecturer a five dollar bank note—then, as if he had not done enough, thrust the pocket-book on him—then gave his purse, and finally felt his vest, pantaloons and coat pockets apparently for more. The countenance expressed supreme benevolence—tears even starting to the eyes. This was a superb exhibition, being a decided hit. He stood still a few moments, when coming to his senses, he observed the pocket-book, which he seized with much eagerness, evidently showing that his acquired prudence was more than a match for natural benevolence.'

◆

A Ghost with Horns.—Those who believe that ghosts are but the idle figments of a diseased brain, will find cause for faith in spiritual visitings, in the following undoubted case related by a correspondent of the N. Y. Observer:

"Near my father's residence was a wood in which a man was once killed. His ghost was regularly seen after dark. I never passed that wood without crossing myself, and saying Hail Mary. And I assure you I never saw the ghost. After dusk, in the spring of the year, I was sent on an errand to a neighbor's house, separated from ours by two or three fields. As I ran along I saw through the magnifying twilight what was obviously an evil spirit. I stopped suddenly, and the sweat commenced pouring. Naturally of a resolute spirit, I thus reasoned: If I run back he can catch me; if I go forward he can but catch me. So after saying my Hail Mary and crossing myself, I went forward with a trembling step. As I advanced, the horns of the fiend became perfectly obvious. Almost dead with fear, I rushed forward and caught hold of them. And marvelous to narrate, those fiendish horns were instantly turned into the handles of a plough!"

◆

American Tea.—James Buchanan, Secretary of State, has recently received a package of tea, grown in Brazil, from our consul at St. Catherine's. The leaf is something larger and darker than the Chinese tea; its flavor is strong and aromatic, and resembles the best specimens from China. When prepared, it strongly assimilates the mixture of black and green tea, so much, indeed almost exclusively drunk in England; after China the greatest tea-drinking country in the world. The tea plant was first introduced into Brazil by King John, of Portugal. It is stated that the successful cultivation of this plant in the United States may be looked upon as a matter of certainty, as a climate exists in the States of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, extending one degree south of the Rio Grande, precisely similar to the climate of the tea growing districts of China.

◆

Preparation of Coffee.—Coffee roasted only till it becomes slightly red, preserves the maximum of weight and aroma, but gives out less coloring matter. In this state, 100 lbs. are found to have lost 15, but have increased to the bulk of 130. Roasted to a chesnut color, as is common, the loss is 20 per cent., while the increase in volume is from 100 to 153. The swelling of the grain depends upon the property which the netrogeneous matter deposited within the issue has of puffing up remarkably when heated. If the heat is continued until a dark brown color is produced, and the grain is covered with a sort of glaze, the loss is 25 per cent., while the original quantity of nitrogent, 245 per cent., is reduced to 177, being a loss of one-fourth. [Silliman's Journal.

◆

Love of Children.—Tell me not of the trim, precisely-arranged homes where there are no children; "where," as the good German has it, "the fly-traps always hang straight on the wall;" tell me not of the never-disturbed nights and days; of tranquil, unanxious hearts, where children are not! I care not for these things. God sends children for another purpose than merely to keep up the race—to enlarge our hearts, to make us unselfish, and full of kindly sympathies and affections; to give our souls higher aims, and to call out all our faculties; to extended enterprise and exertion; to bring round our fireside bright faces and happy smiles, and loving, tender hearts. My soul blesses the Great Father every day, that he has gladdened the earth with little children.

VARIETY.

During the late war with Great Britain, Gen. Harrison's army had to be supplied with provisions from the interior of Ohio. These, of one time, were cut off, and the army was in great distress. A call was made for volunteers, who were to be charged with the responsibility of conducting through the fearful and uninhabited portions of Northern Ohio, wagons laden with supplies for the army. As may be supposed, few volunteers appeared for this hazardous and comparatively inglorious service, but among those who did appear, was, 'Tom Corwin,' then quite a lad. He drove his team through—and from that day to this, he has been known as 'Tom Corwin, the wagon boy.'

A person having lately visited Galena, where he remained for several weeks, was interrogated as to the society of that place. "Excellent, sir, excellent. On Sunday, you will hear the church bells pealing in every direction; and along the streets there are whole rows of groggeries with open doors, retailing liquors, and full of persons playing cards, while others are going to church; excellent society! the best I have ever seen—every body minds their own business. Card playing, gambling, drinking, church going, all going on freely; every one minds his own business at Galena."

The Turks differ from us even in their most trifling habits. The barber pushes his razor from him; the carpenter, on the contrary, draws his saw to him, for all the teeth are set in; ours pushes it out from him, for all the teeth are set out; the mason sits while he lays the stone, ours always stand; the scribe writes on his hand, from right to left; ours always on a desk, from left to right; but the most ridiculous difference consists in the manner of building a house; we begin at the bottom and finish at the top; the Turks begin at the top, and the upper rooms are finished and inhabited, while all below is like a lantern.

A very good deacon, of Vermont, was riding on the seat with the stage driver. On arriving at the usual stopping place, he inquired of him if he would not take a glass of wine or something stronger. "With all due respect," he replied to the good deacon, looking him full in the face, "I am obliged to you, sir; but I do not belong to that class of persons." This was a word "fitly spoken," and the deacon was made better by it, for on his return home he signed the pledge.

One of the newly-appointed inspectors of the Rhode Island State Prison made a visit, a few days since, to that institution, and, entering a cell of an individual who had recently been sentenced to three years' imprisonment, questioned him as to his situation, work, &c. The convict replied, that he liked very well, and should endeavor to do his work promptly and well; but that if at any time the inspectors were dissatisfied with his work, he should be ready to receive his discharge.

"I am going to fly," cried the gigantic Ostrich, and the whole assembly of birds gathered round in earnest expectation. "I am going to fly," he cried again, and, stretching out his immense pinions, he shot, like a ship with outspread sails, away over the ground, without, however, rising an inch above it. Thus it happens, when a notion of being poetical takes possession of unpoetical brains; in the opening of their monstrous odes they boast of their intention to soar over the clouds and stars, but nevertheless remain constant to the dust.'

The Newark (N. J.) Advertiser says that a gentleman of that city has raised a "Valparaiso Squash" this year, which weighs 132 pounds, and is one of three—the aggregate weight of which is 252 3-4 pounds—raised from a single seed, planted the first week in July. The whole growth was attained in just fifty-six days.

A country cotemporary compares some of his subscribers to cats! He says, "you may stroke the fur the right way for years—talk and write to please them, and hear nothing but purring; but accidentally tread on a tail—say something that comes in contact with their faith, prejudice, or interest, and what a scratching and clawing there will be!"

A poor fellow was recently brought before Justice Drinker, charged with the crime of being intoxicated. The Justice interrogated him: "Well, what do you get drunk and come here in this condition for?" "See, here," was the reply, uttered with the hiccough and accentuation of drunkenness, "what do you give licenses for?"

The Pittsburgh Post says that Judge Patton, of that city, recently decided, that where a master became a habitual drunkard, after receiving an apprentice, it was a sufficient cause for the apprentice to claim a discharge from his indentures. This was a righteous decision.

An animal having the appearance of once being a horse, but which then looked like a skeleton covered with a collapsed hide, was observed by a wag of a boy, who pasted a placard upon its side, on which was daubed in large letters, "Wanted—a peck of oats; inquire within."

How sweet a thing is love of home. It is not acquired—it is a feeling that has its origin elsewhere. It is born with us, brought from another world to carry us on with joy in this. It attaches to the humblest heart that has ever throbbed.

A smooth sea never made a skillful mariner; neither do uninterrupted prosperity and success qualify man for usefulness or happiness. The storms of adversity, like the storms of the ocean, rouse the faculties, and excite the invention, prudence, skill and fortitude of the voyager.

A farmer was asked why he did not take a newspaper. "Because," said he, "my father, when he died, left me a good many newspapers, and I have na' read them through yet."

An editor, away down east, who served four days on a jury, says he is so full of law that it's hard work for him to keep from cheating somebody.

Never chase a lie. Let it alone, and it will run itself to death. A man can work out a good character much faster than any one can lie him out of it.

Nearly half of the land in Scotland, in consequence of the law of entail, remains in its original uncultivated state, and is used for the hunting sports of the nobility.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. It speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the psess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7, consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT
NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to
George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 27. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 23, 1847. WHOLE NO. 183.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since. [Continued.

That the Israelites had made very little preparation for their departure previous to their actual exodus, is evident from the whole of the inspired narrative. This may perhaps have been partly occasioned by doubts as to their immediate deliverance, and partly by the distractions of such an awful and eventful time. The only appearance of preparation is in the earlier command to borrow (literally to ask) from the Egyptians jewels of silver, and jewels of gold, and raiment, (Ex. 11: 21;) and it is doubtful whether this command was obeyed, or was at all intended to be obeyed, till the very day of their departure. Ex. 12: 35.

We read, indeed, that they had not "prepared for themselves any victual;" but "took their dough before it was leavened;" and the reason for this was, "because they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry." Ex. 12: 34, 39. But their having remained over the fourteenth day, till the evening of the fifteenth, afforded them no opportunity of carrying with them leavened bread. This would have required their detention for a full week, at least. It is to be remembered, that they had just begun to observe the passover—during which time they were wholly forbidden to make, or have, leavened bread in their houses. (Ex. 12: 19.) The feast, which was of seven days, had but just begun, and whatever opportunities they might otherwise have enjoyed, they would not, at that season, under any circumstances, have leavened their bread for other six days,—and, accordingly, it was "unleavened cakes" which they did at length bake, "of the dough which they brought forth out of Egypt," (Ex. 12: 39.) The reason, therefore, of their taking the dough in its unleavened state, was not, as has sometimes been supposed, their not being permitted to remain a few hours longer in Egypt, but that in the haste of the Egyptians to send them forth, "they were thrust out of Egypt, and could not tarry" till the days of unleavened bread were over. It was yet but the fifteenth day of the month, and they could neither have nor eat leavened bread "until the one and twentieth day of the month, at even." Ex. 12: 18, 19.

But as different interpretations have been put upon the terms "at even" and "between the two evenings," expressions which occur in regard to the time of slaying the paschal lamb, and in other cases, we may also examine what light is cast upon the meaning of these terms by corresponding texts in which they occur. In the tabernacle of the congregation, Aaron "lighted the lamps at even," or, as in the margin, again, "between the two evens." Ex. 30: 8. And of this light, we elsewhere read, "Aaron and his sons shall order it from evening to morning, before the Lord." Ex. 27: 21. And farther, the evening sacrifice was to be when Aaron lighted the lamps before the altar. Ex. 30: 8. Now, in obedience to the law, (Deut. 19: 23,) which forbids the hanging all night on a tree, at eventide Joshua took down the carcase of the king of Ai. Josh. 8: 29. And this was "as soon as the sun was down," so that "eventide," or evening, began about sunset. The same thing is set before us in the account of the death of the five kings. "Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them on five trees; and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening. And it came to pass at the time of the going down of the sun, that Joshua commanded, and they took them down off the trees, and cast them into the cave wherein they had been hid." Joshua 10: 26, 27. These various texts plainly prove that even, evening, between the two evenings, and about the time of sunset, are altogether or nearly synonymous terms.

With such evidence we are surely entitled to conclude that those who interpret "between the two evenings" as referring to the hour of midnight in the case of the Israelites' departure from Egypt, are altogether wrong. Indeed this supposition is demonstrated to be a mistake by the very form of the institution of the Passover itself, and is perfectly set at rest by a consideration of the solemn circumstances of that eventful night. For while the lamb of Passover was only to be killed on the 14th, "between the two evenings," its blood was thereafter sprinkled in the manner enjoined—the lamb itself was prepared to be eaten; its flesh was not "sodden at all with water, but roasted with fire; his head with his legs and with the purtenances thereof"—and thereafter it was to be eaten with appointed ceremonies—and after all this, it was only "at midnight the Lord smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt,"—between which time and the evening, therefore, all the preceding circumstances were attended to;—and, even after midnight and the destruction of Egypt's first-born, it is still not yet called morning, but "Pharaoh rose up in the night, [of the 14th,] he and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry in Egypt, for there was not a house where there was not one dead." Ex. 12: 30.

If now we attend to what was commanded the Israelites concerning this memorable night, and what was done during it, and subsequently before their departure, we shall find that they could not leave Egypt so early as has been supposed; for, as many matters had to be attended to, whatever their haste, much time must have been consumed. It was not till midnight that the destroying angel executed his dread commission; and when afterwards Pharaoh rose up, he and all his servants, and all the Egyptians, some time would probably be consumed in unavailing regrets, and in consideration of what should now be done. When it had been resolved to send for Moses and Aaron, still, we must remember, they with the children of Israel were dwelling in a district appropriated peculiarly to them, at some distance from the palace, and on the opposite side of the Nile. And, however urgent the Egyptians might now be for their departure, the Israelites were absolutely prohibited from leaving their houses—a higher authority, and one which now, amid the terrors and the desolations of their enemies, they must have been more than ordinarily disposed to respect, had solemnly enjoined so recently as the night previous, "And none of you shall go out at the door of his house until the morning." (Ex. 12: 22.) They were farther commanded, that whatever of the paschal lamb remained uneaten "until the morning," was to be "burnt with fire;" (Ex. 12: 10,) and are we to suppose that Moses and Aaron, or even any of the children of Israel, on an occasion of such an awfully solemn nature, would disregard these injunctions? We cannot but believe that they were all strictly attended to, and that the whole community did remain every one in the house in which he partook of that feast, "until the morning;" and that, then, whatever of it was left was burnt with fire according to the divine command—so that midnight was long past, and the morning come, before a single movement could be made towards their departure. And, it is also to be observed, that the necessary preparations for their departure must have been still farther delayed, when we remember that where a family was insufficient for the eating of the lamb, they were to join with their neighbors, so that many must have remained till the morning in houses not their own, and afterwards have to attend to all that was necessary to be done, before finally departing from the land which hitherto had been the place of their abode.

Next, we must observe, they were to be led out "according to their armies," implying an organized and orderly arrangement, (Ex. 6: 26; 7: 4,) which also was carefully attended to; "and it came to pass, the self-same day, that the Lord did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, by their armies," (Ex. 12: 51,) or, as in the following chapter, "the children of Israel went up harnessed out of the land of Egypt," (in the margin, "went up by five in a rank.") Ex. 13: 18. So that, in addition to the time requisite to congregate an assemblage of at least fifteen hundred thousand, men, women, and children, with whatever they esteemed of greatest value, as well as their flocks and herds, "even very much cattle," besides "a mixed multitude" that went with them, (Ex. 12: 33,) all done after morning, there was farther a regularly organized arrangement to be made, with qualified and appointed officers, when brought together, after they had got themselves otherwise prepared, whatever the necessary preparation may have been, in leaving a land they were not to revisit. And we must here observe, that it is not likely that Pharaoh, so much enraged against them, would permit any open preparation previously, but might have fallen upon them with his army, had they attempted it. (Ex. 10: 28, 29.)

All these circumstances, then, must have taken up, at the very lowest estimate, several hours, and all after "morning," when the remains of the paschal lamb had been consumed with fire—till which time, as we have seen, not a movement was permitted to be made, not only after the night of the 14th, but after the following morning. When the Scriptures inform us that the exodus took place at night, it must, therefore, have been the night of the 15th, and not the night of the 14th of the month.*

We return to our author, hoping that it may now be seen more clearly into how many mistakes he has therefore fallen in his view of the Exodus, and consequent change of the Sabbath, when he affirms, "On the 14th day of the month, at even, the children of Israel eat the passover; on that same night the destroying angel killed all the first-born of the Egyptians. This fatal stroke caused the Egyptians to hurry away the Israelites in great haste on that very night, lest, said they, 'We be all dead men.' So they immediately began their march that very night; they being all in a state of readiness, as we learn from the manner in which they eat the passover. And so, setting out from Rameses in Egypt, they marched on to Succoth in the wilderness before they halted. This you observe must have been on the 15th day of the month, for it was on the 14th, at even, that they kept the passover, and were thrust out of Egypt after the death of the first-born. This was the ancient Sabbath, the first day of the week, 15th of the month. There was, therefore, as Moses had said, a convocation of the people on this day; but circumstances prevented it from being observed as a day of rest. Providence had ordered it otherwise, no doubt to wean them from observing that particular day; and, therefore, instead of resting on this Sabbath day according to the commandment they traveled from Rameses to Succoth, which could not be less than 30 miles," p. 146. A singular complication of errors to be contained within so small a space. The ancient Sabbath, we are thus urged to believe, is violated without divine injunction or permission—but if not observed as a day of rest, it still is because "Providence had ordered it otherwise;" and this, "no doubt, to wean them from observing that particular day; of the change of which, however, they knew nothing.

Surely had the God of Creation and Providence desired such a change, a better way of weaning them would have been found in the intimation of His will to that effect. Wayward and rebellious as the Israelites were, they had the more need of this to secure their obedience; and, if they did not obey, they would then have been more responsible than if left merely to an unexplained casualty, which if afterwards discovered would have justified, nay demanded, their immediate return to "the ancient Sabbath."

No inspired writer intimates or alludes to such a change, yet how confident is our author! "Israel," says he, "seeing their enemies dead upon the sea shore, and finding themselves safe, and their enemies destroyed, they spend this day, being their new Sabbath, in holy rest, praising God for His mercies, and for the seasonable deliverance He had wrought for them. For when Israel saw the great work which the Lord did upon the Egyptians, the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and His servant Moses. Then sang Moses and the children of Israel, the song recorded in the following chapter. From this time, therefore, the Israelites began to observe their new Sabbath on the seventh day of the week, instead of the first." Letters, p. 147. [To be continued.

NATURE'S TEACHINGS.

Falleth now from off a tree
A withered leaf;
This the lesson taught to me,
Life is brief;
Hear it say,
Mortal, soon thou'lt follow me
To decay!

Droppeth now from off my head,
A silver hair;
Plainer preacher never said,
For death prepare;
Filled with gloom,
We follow time with solemn tread
To the tomb.

Mounteth now on wings of air,
To the sky,
A little dew-drop, pure and clear,
Far up, on high.
Hear it say,
All above the earth is fair,
Watch and pray!
Nights of sorrow come not here;
'Tis perfect day.

From the People's Journal.

THE HOLY LAND.—BY HARRIET MARTINEAU.

THE JORDAN AND THE DEAD SEA.

This day, (April 6,) we were to visit the Jordan and the Dead Sea. In the morning, about five o'clock, I ascended a steep mound near our encampment, and saw a view as different from that of the preceding day as a change of lights could make it. The sun had not risen; but there was a hint of its approach in a gush of pale light behind the Moab Mountains. The strip of woodland in the middle of the plain looked black in contrast with the brightening yellow precipices of Quarantania on the west. Southwards, the Dead Sea stretched into the land, grey and clear. Below me, our tents and horses, and the moving figure of the Arabs, enlivened the shadowy banks of the stream.

We were off soon after six, and were to reach the banks of the Jordan in about two and a half hours. Our way lay through the same sort of forest land as we had encamped in. It was very wild; and almost the only tokens of habitation that we met with, were about Rihhah—by some supposed to be the exact site of the ancient Jericho. This is now as miserable a village as any in Palestine; and its inhabitants are as low in character as in wealth. No stranger thinks of going near it who is not well armed and guarded. Yet there is no need to resort to any means but honest and very moderate industry, to obtain a comfortable subsistence here—if it only were encouraged, and industry protected by a good social state. The fine fig trees that are scattered around, and the abundant promise of the few crops that are sown, show that the soil and climate are not to blame. At this place there is a square tower, conspicuous from afar, above the trees, which some suppose to be the sole remnant of the great city; but it can hardly be ancient enough to have belonged to the old Jericho.

On a hillock, in the midst of the brushwood, we saw a few birds of such a size that one of the party, in a moment of forgetfulness, cried out, "Ostriches!" There are no ostriches in this country; but these cranes looked very like them, while on their feet. One by one they rose, stretching out their long legs behind them—certainly the largest birds I ever saw fly—or probably shall ever see.

Though we had been told, and had read, that the river could not be seen till the traveler reached its very banks, we could not help looking for it. Three broad terraces have to be traversed; and then it is sunk in a deep bed, where it rushes hidden among the woodland. Its depth of water varys much at different seasons; though less now than formerly. The Scriptures speak so much of the overflow of Jordan, and of the lion coming up at the swelling of Jordan, that it is supposed that formerly the river was subject to inundations which may have formed the three terraces above-mentioned, and caused the extraordinary fertility of the plain in old times; and that the wild beasts which harbored in the brakes, came up to terrify the dwellers in the fields. However this may have been, it is not so now. The channel is no doubt deepened; and the river now, in the fullest season, only brims over its banks into the brakes, so as to stand among the canes, and never reaches the terraces.

Though we were all on the lookout, and though we reached the river at the spot which is cleared for the approach of the eastern pilgrims, we could not see the water till we could almost touch it. The first notice to me of where it was, was from some of the party dismounting on the Pilgrim's Beach. When I came up—O! how beautiful it was!—how much more beautiful than all pictures and all descriptions had led me to expect! The only drawback was, that the stream was turbid; not only whitish, from a sulphurous admixture, but muddy. But it swept nobly along, with a strong and rapid current, and many eddies, gushing through the thick woodland, and flowing in among the tall reeds, now smiting the white rocks of the opposite shore, and now winding away out of sight behind the poplars, and acacias, and tall reeds, which crowd its banks. It is not a broad river; but it is full of majesty from its force and loveliness. The vigorous, upspringing character of the wood along its margin struck me much; and we saw it now in its vivid spring green.

The pilgrims rush into the sacred stream in such numbers, and with so little precaution as to the strength of the current, that no year passes without some loss of life; and usually several perish. This year only one was drowned. Whatever superstition there might have been among our company, it was not of this wild sort; and we bathed in safety. The ladies went north; the gentlemen south. I made a way through the thicket with difficulty, till I found a little cove, which the current did not enter, and over which hung a sycamore, whose lower branches were washed by the ripple which the current sent in as it passed. On these branches the bather might stand or sit without touching the mud, which lay soft and deep below. The limestone precipice and wooded promontory opposite, made the river particularly beautiful here; and sorry I was to leave at last.

It is useless to attempt to make out where the baptism of Jesus took place, or where his disciples and John administered the rite. And on the spot one has no pressing wish to know. The whole of this river is so sacred and so sweet that it is enough to have saluted it in any part of its course.

The belt of woodland soon turned away eastwards, and we found ourselves exposed to extreme heat, on a desolate plain, crusted with salt and cracked with drouth. There had been a closeness and murkiness in the air, all the morning, which was very oppressive; and now it was, at our usual slow pace, almost intolerable. I put my horse to a fast canter, and crossed the plain as quickly as possible, finding this pace a relief to my horse as well as myself. The drift on the beach of the Sea looked dreary enough; ridges of broken canes and willow twigs washed up, and lying among the salt, and the little unwholesome swamps of the shore; but the waters looked bright and clear, and so tempting that our horses put their noses down repeatedly, always turning away again in disgust. I tasted the water—about two drops—and I almost thought I should never get the taste out of my mouth again. And this is the water that poor Costigan's coffee was made of!

Costigan was a young Irishman, whose mind was possessed with the idea of exploring the Dead Sea, and giving the world the benefit of his discoveries. It would have been a useful service; and he had zeal and devotedness for it. But he wanted either knowledge or prudence; and he lost his life in the adventure, without having left us any additional information whatever. He had had a small boat carried overland by camels; and in this he set forth, (in an open boat, in the month of July!) with only one attendant, a Maltese servant. They reached the southern end of the lake—not without hardship and difficulty; but the fatal struggle was in getting back again. The wind did not favor them, and once blew such a squall that they had to lighten the boat, when the servant stupidly threw overboard the only cask of fresh water that they had. They were now compelled to row for their lives, to reach the Jordan before they perished with thirst; but the sun scorched them from a cloudless sky, and the air was like a furnace. When Costigan could row no longer, his servant made some coffee from the water of the lake, and then they lay down in the boat to die. But the man once more roused himself, and by many efforts brought the boat to the head of the lake. They lay helpless for a whole day on the burning shore, unable to do more than throw the salt water over each other from time to time. The next morning the servant crawled away, in hopes of reaching Rihhah, which he did with extreme difficulty. He sent Costigan's horse down to the shore, with a supply of water. He was alive, and was carried to Jerusalem in the coolness of the night. He was taken care of in the Latin convent there; but he died in two days. Not a note relating to his enterprise was ever found; and during his illness he never spoke on the subject. Any knowledge that he might have gained has perished with him; and no reliable information could be obtained from his servant. Costigan's grave is in the American burying ground; and there I saw the stone which tells his melancholy story. He died in 1835.

There appears to be no satisfactory evidence as to whether any fish are to be found in the Dead Sea. Our guides said that some small black fish have been seen there; but others deny this. A dead fish has been found on the shore near the spot where the Jordan enters the lake; but this might have been cast up by the overflow of the river. It is said that small birds do not fly over this lake, on account of the deleterious nature of its atmosphere. About small birds I cannot speak; but I saw two or three vultures winging their way down it obliquely. The curious lights which hung over the surface struck me as showing an unusual state of the atmosphere—the purple murky light resting on one part, and the line of silvery refraction in another. Though the sky was clear after the morning clouds had passed away, the sunshine appeared dim; and the heat was very oppressive. The gentlemen of the party, who stayed behind to bathe, declared, on rejoining us at lunch time, that they had found the common report of the buoyancy of the water of this Sea not at all exaggerated, and that it was indeed an easy matter to float in it, and very difficult to sink. They also found their hair and skin powdered with salt when dry. But they could not admit the greasiness or stickiness which is said to adhere to the skin after bathing in the Dead Sea. They were very positive about this; and they certainly did observe the fact very carefully. Yet I have seen, since my return, a clergyman who bathed there, and who declared to me that his skin was so sticky, for some days after, that he could not get rid of it, even from his hands. And the trust-worthy Dr. Robinson, a late traveler there, says, "After coming out, I perceived nothing of the salt crust upon the body, of which many speak. There was a slight pricking sensation, especially where the skin had been chafed; and a sort of greasy feeling, as of oil, upon the skin, which lasted for several hours." The contrast of these testimonies, and the diversity which exists among the analyses of the waters which have been made by chemists, seem to show that the quality of the waters of the Dead Sea varies. And it appears reasonable that it should; for it must make a great difference whether fresh waters have been pouring into the basin of the lake, after the winter rains, or a great evaporation has been going on under the summer's sun. In following the margin of the sea, we had to cross a creek where my skirt was splashed. These splashes turned presently to thin crusts of salt; and the moisture and stickiness were as great a week afterwards as at the moment.

We wound among salt marshes and brakes, in and out, on the desolate shores of this sea; this sea which is not the less dead and dreary for being as clear and blue as a fresh mountain tarn. As we ascended the ranges of hills which lay between us and the convent where we were to rest, the Jordan valley opened northwards, and the Dead Sea southwards, till the extent traversed by the eye was really vast. How beautiful must it have been once, when the Jordan valley, whose verdure was now shrunk into a black line amidst the sands, was like an interminable garden; and when the cities of the plain stood bright and busy where the Dead Sea now lay blank and grey! As I took my last look back, from a great elevation, I thought that so mournful a landscape, for one having real beauty, I had never seen.

ONE CAUSE OF INSANITY.

The intelligent physician of the Mt. Hope Institution for the Insane, in Boston, in his late reports enunciates a sentiment which any thoughtful observer must have seen enough to convince him to be very near the truth. Without being so absurd as to deny all utility or excellence to works of fiction, or their harmlessness upon some minds, there is no question that their perusal by the young, particularly females, is hurtful and dangerous to a degree little dreamed of. Parents owe a stern and solemn duty to their children, to watch their reading, and to preserve their opening minds and hearts from the vitiating influences of much of what is called popular literature. The opinion below is worth pondering:

'Another fertile source of this species of derangement has appeared to be an undue indulgence in the perusal of the numerous works of fiction, with which the press is prolific of late years, and which are sown broadcast over the land, with the effect of vitiating the taste and corrupting the morals of the young. Parents can not too cautiously guard their daughters against this pernicious practice. We have had several cases of moral insanity, for which no other cause could be assigned than excessive novel reading. And nothing is more likely to induce this disease than the education which fosters sentiment instead of cherishing real feeling—such as results from the performance of active benevolence, and the sacred duties of ordinary life, and of religious obligations—which awakens and strengthens the imagination without warming the heart; and, to borrow the language of an eloquent divine, places the individual 'upon a romantic theatre—not upon the dust of moral life.'

TALLEYRAND'S DEATH-BED.

For nearly half a century, this veteran diplomatist acted a prominent part in the affairs of Europe. As the Prime Minister, or ambassador of the directory, the consulate, the empire, the restoration, and the monarchy of Louis Philippe, he negotiated the important treaties which determined the boundaries of empires and the fate of kingdoms, and formed plans which made Napoleon an Emperor, and the emperor an exile. Such a man's view of an eventful life of fourscore years, furnishes instructive lessons to men who are wasting the energies of being on political ambition or worldly aggrandizement. Just before his death, a paper was found on his table, on which he had written, by the light of the lamp, such lines as these:

"Behold eighty-three years passed away! What cares! What agitation! What anxieties! What ill-will! What sad complications! And all without other results, except great fatigue of mind and body, and a profound sentiment of discouragement with regard to the future, and disgust with regard to the past."

Contrast with this the exclamation of "Paul the aged," as he was about closing his earthly career: "I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." A death-bed is the triumphal chariot of the useful Christian, however humble; it is the executioner's cart of the worldly unbeliever, however exalted. [American Messenger.

PROPERTY.—"I do not know," says Dr. Paley, "whether our attachment to property be not something more than the mere dictate of reason, or even than the mere effect of association. Property communicates a charm to whatever is the object of it. It is the first of our abstract ideas; it cleaves to us the closest and the longest. It endears to the child its plaything, to the peasant his cottage, to the land-owner his estate. It supplies the place of prospect and scenery. Instead of coveting the beauty of distant situations, it teaches every man to find it in his own. It gives boldness and grandeur to plains and fens, tinge and coloring to clays and fallows."

---

* Besides other grounds on which the right determination of the time when Israel left the land of their bondage is of importance; we have judged the interest attached to it as a circumstance introduced in the objection we are considering, as sufficient to warrant our full investigation of the subject,—an inquiry the more necessary from the unsatisfactory manner in which it is generally treated by commentators.

In Molesworth's Sermon on the Passover, this subject is well treated. It contains farther proofs of the incorrectness of the ordinary theory in regard to the time of the Israelites leaving the land of Egypt.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 23, 1847.

CHRIST'S BIRTH-DAY AND RESURRECTION-DAY.

From a very early period in the history of the church, certain days have been set apart by Christians to commemorate important events connected with their Saviour, such as his conception, his birth, his circumcision, his death, his resurrection, and his ascension. But among them none seem to have been so generally esteemed as Christmas-day, kept in commemoration of Christ's birth, and the first day of the week called Lord's day, kept in commemoration of his resurrection. These were celebrated with great pomp at an early period, and were enjoined with much earnestness by good men for many centuries. Since the rise of the Puritans, however, for some reason or another, Christmas-day has fallen into comparative disgrace where their influence is felt, while double honor has been bestowed upon what is commonly termed the Lord's day. What good reason there may be for this, it is difficult to say, since some of the earliest and ablest treatises upon the subject represent Christmas-day as having "equal authority, equal antiquity, and equal right to be observed, as the Lord's day." Indeed, we believe that in the Roman Catholic Church, which can certainly claim as much authority on the score of age and numbers as any now in existence, it would be deemed about as great a sin to work upon one of these days as upon the other. And even in the English Episcopal Church, we think many persons can be found, who would as soon forego the observance of the "Lord's-day" as of Christmas-day. How happens it, then, that so many persons, who would tremble at the thought of desecrating the one of these days, will yet deliberately and recklessly trample upon the other? Let those answer to whom such inconsistency attaches. For our part, we love Christian liberty too well to come under bondage to either, unless a "thus saith the Lord" can be given for their observance. We are frank to confess, however, that if we felt bound to observe either one of them, we should feel equally bound to observe both, since we know not where to draw a line of distinction between observances which are of equal age and equal authority.

As this paper will fall into the hands of many of our readers on Christmas-day, perhaps they would like to know upon what authority the early advocates of that day grounded its observance. We have before us a copy of the fifth edition of a book published in 1644, to vindicate the Gospel Festivals of the English Church, which sets out with the position, "that the Feast of Christ's Nativity [Christmas] is grounded upon the Scriptures, was observed in the pure, ancient, apostolic times, and is approved by all Reformed Churches." The manner in which it establishes this position is really note-worthy. For the Scriptural argument, we are told that God promised this day when he said the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head; that Abraham rejoiced to see this day; that Jacob foretold it when he said the scepter should not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; that the prophet Isaiah marks out this as a special and wonderful day, when he says, "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel;" that this day the apostle calls the fullness of time, &c., &c. For the Apostolic argument, we are told that "Clement, a glorious martyr of Christ Jesus, whom St. Paul reckons among his fellow laborers in the Gospel, whose names are in the book of life, writes thus unto the Christian Churches: Brethren, keep diligently feast days, and truly in the first place the day of Christ's birth." For the argument from the Fathers, we are told that in the second century Theophilus, Bishop of Cesarea in Palestine, saith that we ought to celebrate the birth-day of our Lord, on what day soever the 25th day of December shall happen;" in the third century, Cyprian uses similar language; and in the fourth century, the day was extensively celebrated at Nicomedia in Bythinia. Basil the Great, St. Jerome, St. Chrysostom, and Maximus the Bishop of Tours, are also quoted as teaching the same thing. To this is added the testimony of various Reformed Churches, of which the Helvetian says: "We exceedingly approve those churches which do religiously celebrate the memory of our Lord's Nativity, Circumcision, Conception, Passion, Resurrection, Ascension into heaven, and the sending down of the Holy Ghost upon his disciples."

Such are specimens of the arguments upon which the observance of Christmas is grounded by its advocates. Who can fail to notice the resemblance between them and the arguments by which the observance of Lord's-day is sustained? They make the use of the word day with reference to the birth of Christ, to mean that the annual return of the day on which that event is supposed to have happened should be religiously observed! Yet this is done with just about as much reason as the advocates of the Lord's-day make the expression of the Psalmist, "This is the day which the Lord hath made," to mean that the first day, on which the Lord is supposed to have risen, should be observed—and not only observed, but observed weekly—and not only observed weekly, but observed with sabbatic strictness—and not only observed with sabbatic strictness, but observed in place of the Sabbath, and in conformity to the fourth commandment! An arbitrary and unnatural interpretation is put upon the language of Scripture, and a series of equally arbitrary and unnatural inferences drawn from it, in order to sustain the popular dogma. So with regard to the exhortations of the Fathers; the argument is, that because one man thought well of the observance of a certain day in one place, therefore it ought to be observed by all men in all places. To us there seems a striking resemblance between the arguments used to sustain the celebration of Christ's Birth-Day and his Resurrection-Day. If we observed the one, we should certainly feel bound to observe the other; and how those who cling to the one can still reject the other, is a mystery to us.

CHEAP NEWSPAPERS.

For several years past there has been a great rage for cheap newspapers, as well as other cheap publications. To gratify it a vast number of political "campaign papers," and perhaps an equally large number of papers filled with trash to kill time or excite merriment, have been printed and circulated throughout the country. In most cases these papers have been very poorly edited and worse printed, serving only to lower the already too low standard of newspaper excellence. But we are glad to see reason for believing that the rage for such publications is dying away. The number printed now is much smaller than it was a few years ago. Many of the religious and reformatory papers, which were led to reduce their prices in compliance with the existing taste, have either fallen through entirely, or become convinced that a return to old prices is the best policy for both publishers and subscribers. Among our exchanges we notice three or four which are intending to raise their prices at the commencement of the new year. The Boston Liberator was induced last year, by the urgency of friends, and in the faith that its list would thereby be much increased, to reduce the price from $2 50 to $2 00 per year. After trying the experiment to his satisfaction, the publisher has determined to commence the new volume by charging two dollars and fifty cents in advance, and three dollars after six months. We have on our list several religious papers which have within the last four years either reduced their prices, or enlarged their dimensions at the old price. In nearly every instance the character of such papers has suffered. By reducing their income, they have made it necessary to reduce their expenses; and as they cannot reduce the expense of printing, they have been obliged to reduce the expense of editing. The consequence has been, as before stated, that the character of such papers has suffered. They have become the mere echos of other papers, being made up of bad selections, miserably arranged, and serving no purpose.

CONGRESSIONAL CHAPLAIN.

The opening of Congress brought up, as usual, the knotty question who should be Chaplain. When the subject was first broached in the House of Representatives, Mr. Pettit, of Indiana, made his annual argument against the employment of Chaplains at the public expense. He contended, that as Congress had no power to legislate in matters of religion, so it had no power to appropriate the people's money to pay men for preaching or praying. He had no objection to addressing the Throne of Grace, provided it could be done without infringing upon the Constitution. In order to prevent such infringement, he thought it would be necessary to pay the Chaplain by voluntary contributions from the members, and for his part he should not hesitate to subscribe twenty-five dollars in liquidation of the Chaplain's account. He did not succeed, however, in arousing the liberality or constitutional scruples of his fellow Representatives sufficiently to carry his measure; and they consequently adopted the old custom of electing a Chaplain to be paid from the public treasury. The House spent nearly a whole day in considering the question, and finally succeeded in choosing Rev. Mr. Gurley, Presbyterian, as Chaplain. The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, in announcing this decision, says that such tedious, dilatory, and expensive proceedings, as usually attend upon the election of Chaplains, almost reconcile him to Mr. Pettit's view of the matter. "There are clergymen, and good ones too, in the House—could not they be induced to volunteer their services? If they have ambition, and are actuated by a sincere desire to save souls, where could they find a better field for their services?—where more need of their prayers?"

NINE-DAYS PRAYER-UNION.—A circular has reached this country from Scotland, proposing a prayer-union of Christians of all denominations, to be held about the close of the present year—a year the most eventful in the memory of this generation. The time suggested was the nine days beginning with Sunday, Dec. 19, and ending on Monday, the 27th. An hour at least, morning and evening, it was expected, would be set apart for private or social prayer, the great burden of which should be, that the influences of the Holy Spirit might be shed upon us from on high. The hour between eight and nine has heretofore been adopted when similar unions have been proposed; but each individual and each congregation must of course be left to judge for itself in this matter, according to circumstances.

"MYSTERIOUS AND PERPLEXING PROVIDENCE."—The New York Baptist Register says that after the Karen Dictionary has been about half completed by Mr. Wade, "his vision has become so much impared that he has been compelled to abandon it, and try what a voyage to his native land may do for him. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are greatly afflicted by the dealings of God with the mission at Tavoy. Sister Mason taken away, and her husband disabled by his excessive toils—and now Br. Wade and his wife compelled to give up and go home—cannot be otherwise than mysterious, and trying to their faith. Some, we find, among the professed friends of Christ in our own land, speaking of these things as perplexing providences, and almost seem to think them a frown on the missionary effort. As well might the afflictions of the primitive saints, the death of Stephen and others, have been deemed a frown on their evangelical labors. No, no! these things are for the trial both of the missionaries and those who sustain them, and the command to preach the gospel to every creature is not the least abated in its obligation on the disciples of Christ."

ROMAN CATHOLIC ESTABLISHMENTS IN FRANCE.—A correspondent of the Christian Reflector gives some interesting statistics of the religious institutions of the Roman Catholics in France. It seems, from an enumeration made a few years ago, that there exist, in France, 2,144 convents, (of which 611 have been authorized since 1830,) legally entitled to receive legacies and donations, and 880 which are not authorized. They contain, in all, about 30,000 inmates. Estimating, moreover, at 20,000 all the males who are members of tolerated communities and fraternities, the number of persons connected, under religious vows, with these various establishments, is swelled beyond 120,000. In April, 1838, there were four houses of Trappists, four of Carthusians, two of Benedictines, and one of Capuchins, without mentioning the Jesuits, at Paris, at Lyons, and elsewhere ostensibly dispersed, by order of their general.

SABBATH LECTURES IN NEW YORK.—Mr. Brown delivered his Introductory Lecture on Sunday evening last. His subject was the importance of a thorough investigation of the Sabbath question, which he presented in a very able manner. As we gave a full report of his lectures upon the same subject last winter, and as the present course will no doubt be somewhat similar, although not the same, we have thought not advisable to report them. We can assure those who wish to hear upon the subject, however—both those who attended last winter, and those who did not—that they will find abundant instruction and entertainment in attending these lectures. To be continued on each succeeding Sunday evening, at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-st., between Bowery and Third Avenue.

INDIAN MISSIONS.—Rev. Mr. Treat, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has left Boston on an official visit to the missions among the Choctaw and Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of investigating thoroughly the relations of those missions and their churches to the subject of slavery. He is accompanied by Rev. Timothy E. Ranney and wife, formerly of the mission among the Pawnees, who is now going to join the Cherokee mission; and by David Breed, jr., Mrs. Breed, Miss Caroline A. Fox, of Monegan, Conn., and Miss Jerusha Edwards, of Mass., who go as a reinforcement of the mission among the Choctaws.

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS IN ENGLAND.—The scarcity of religious newspapers in England has long been a subject of comment and lamentation. But a reason for it is found, no doubt, in their expensiveness. To meet the demands of the times, and to correct and instruct the minds of all classes of the community, especially the Non-conformists, a paper is to be started in London, by John Campbell, D. D., with an anticipated issue of 100,000 weekly. The first number will be issued on the first week of the New Year. It will be the largest paper allowed by law—to be stamped and sold at four pence a number (8c.,) and entitled The British Banner.

STATE SUPPORT OF RELIGION DECLINED.—The Christian Chronicle says that the government in Ceylon contributes to the support of the different religious sects. The Scotch and Dutch chaplains are paid in full, and the Missionaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, the Church Missionary Society, the Propagation Society, and the American Board, receive annual grants from the Colonial Treasurer. The Baptists decline receiving anything. It seems that they are convinced of the ability of the gospel to sustain itself without the aid of the State.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN INDIA.—The Daily News (England) says that in the Rajpootana States of India, slave-dealing has been abolished from the land, and the very name of slave is no more to be mentioned. Some short while since, suttee and infanticide were prohibited by the same chiefs; it is now declared a capital offence to aid or abet in these, or even to witness them. These things have been brought about by our political agents, which redown more to their honor than almost anything else they could have employed themselves in accomplishing. The chiefs of the Rajpootana States are going ahead more than any of the native princes of India.

IMPERIAL EDICT.

The following edict was issued by the Emperor immediately after he received news of the English invasion of Canton.

"AN IMPERIAL EDICT.—Keying has reported to us, by memorial, that on the 19th of the second month, (April 4th) the English merchants suddenly entered the river of Canton with troops. And the said Governor-General further states that on careful inquiry, the said merchants declared that they, having been insulted and abused, wished to go to Fuhsham to have a reckoning with the people there; and they also insisted on entrance to the city of Canton. As hitherto of late the said foreigners have been tranquil, and rather peaceful and quiet, their suddenly daring now to bring in troops is verily an affair which could not have been foreseen: we fear there must be something else (yet undisclosed.) Their strong wish to enter the city is not a matter of any great moment one way or other. The said Governor-General and his associates, in such an emergency, must not be at all alarmed, nor in the least degree inattentive or remiss, but with promptitude direct the civil and military officers; and in a safe manner restrain and suppress (the said foreigners,) and must not in any way allow them to trouble our people.

"Further, the said Governor-General requests that all the officers of the forts in which the guns were spiked may be taken and severely dealt with, and that he himself may be delivered over to the appropriate Board to be tried in like manner. Let him wait till the affair is settled, and then again report to us thereon by memorial. Let this edict for his information be dispatched post haste, at the rate of five hundred li per day. From the Emperor, (Without date)

Keyung has not 'lost face' by the late demonstration. On the contrary he has probably risen in the estimation of his august master; the abandonment of hostilities without even gaining access to the city, 'in itself a matter of small importance,' looking very like a defeat. This view is borne out by the expression, that they (the English) made a determined request to enter a portion of the provincial city. The 'determined request' was modified to an agreement that they should be permitted to do so in two years; and thus the 'matter of small importance' was quietly disposed of. The Honan grant is not mentioned. The Emperor doubtless looks upon it as another 'matter of small importance,' though it is to be feared that it will be the cause of much trouble.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS AND THE THEATRE.—We mentioned several weeks ago the attendance of J. Q. Adams upon the Park Theatre in this city; and expressed an anxiety to know what would be said of the circumstance by the papers which made so much ado about his presiding over the National Sabbath Convention. The following is the talk of one of them:—

"A strange man, this same John Q. Adams, after all. A man of extensive knowledge, who has been minister to some of the most prominent courts of Europe, who has seen the theatre in its pernicious and ruinous influences, both at home and abroad, who has been familiar with its history from its earliest period, and well knows that reproach has been stamped upon it by all the advocates of pure morals down to the present time—that it has been the ruin of thousands of both sexes, that its evils are almost countless, that licentiousness, intemperance, and vice in every form, are nourished under the very shadow of its walls, and that those who tread its boards are deemed unworthy the privileges of respectable society; that this eminent statesman, being well aware of all this, should appear as one of its patrons, is truly mortifying. But when it is remembered that he is a professor of religion too, at the age of 80, on the very brink of the grave, that he should give countenance to such a moral scourge by his presence, and by his personal approval, gives an example to the rising generation that should virtually nullify the testimony of the virtuous and pious of all previous years, and impair the influence of parental counsel and admonition against the entrance of this gateway to the pit of ruin, is perfectly astounding!"

DR. BAIRD'S OPINION OF THE POPE, &c.—The Hartford Charter Oak, in a report of a recent lecture by Dr. Baird, makes him use the following language in relation to the present Pope, the Queen of England, and several Princes:—

"The Pope is a man of fine talents, the best Pope Rome has had for many a day. He is enlightened and liberal in his views, and though strongly attached to the Roman Catholic faith, yet desirous that Italy should take a higher stand among the countries of Europe. The Queen of England is a proud woman. She does not possess great talents, but is smart—and every year is becoming a better Queen. In private character, the four worst monarchs in Europe, are the Kings of Hanover, Holland, Bavaria, and Naples. These Kings are notoriously vicious. The others are generally moral, many of them exemplary in private life."

ITALY AND THE POPE.—The people of Italy, says Dr. Baird, in his lectures, are active, ingenious, and laborious. The peasantry are very industrious. Even the lazzaroni of Naples, of whom so much is said, are not idle from choice. Of their ingenuity there can be no doubt. It was the testimony of a British manufacturer, who had hundreds, of different nations, in his employ, that the Italians are the most ingenious and skillful workmen in Europe, the Swiss next, and the Scotch next. He placed Englishmen last. If the Italians were not ground down by political and ecclesiastical despotism, and so governed that enterprise and industry are without avail, they would be one of the most energetic nations in Europe. The present Pope has made many improvements. He has enlarged the freedom of the press, and encouraged the publication of newspapers; he has encouraged trade, industry, and education—the construction of railroads and other internal improvements; reformed the administration of government, and organized a national guard. He has something like a legislature, and probably will soon have one in reality.

THE CATHOLICS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The Catholic Almanac for 1848, says that the Catholic population in this country is estimated at 1,190,700. Within the United States there are three Catholic Archbishops, 24 Bishops, 890 Priests, and 907 Churches. Twenty Priests died last year. There has been in the same period of time an accession of 76 to the number of Priests, and 95 additional Churches have been erected or dedicated.

TIME OF COMMENCING THE SABBATH.

Mr. Begg, in his essay on the proper time of commencing the Sabbath, has referred to Dr. Dwight. I think it may be well to give to the readers of the Recorder Dwight's whole section upon the subject. As the Doctor undertook to treat Sunday just as though it were the primitive Bible Sabbath, "made for man," it shows clearly enough, that could he have disabused his own mind of his Sunday prepossessions, he would have been a consistent Sabbath-keeper.

ADDENDA.

"The time at which the peculiar duties of the Sabbath are to commence is, in my opinion, the time when darkness commences on the evening of Saturday. For this opinion the following reasons may be alledged:

"First: The natural day commenced with darkness. After God had created the chaos, darkness rested upon it for a certain period. This darkness, and the light which succeeded it, are declared to have constituted the first day. In the same manner are reckoned the five succeeding days of the creation.

"Secondly: The Sabbath, at its original institution, was a natural day. This is clear, because we are told, that God rested the seventh day; and from the manner in which the six succeeding days were reckoned, we have the fullest proof, that He, who by his own choice reckoned them in this manner, reckoned the seventh day in the same manner.

"Thirdly: When the Sabbath was renewedly enjoined upon the Israelites, it was required to be kept as a natural day. This we know, because no alteration of the original institution is specified in the fourth command; and because, in Lev. 23: 32, God says to that people concerning the great day of atonement, From even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath.

"Fourthly: The Jewish Sabbath commenced with the darkness, or with the time which we denote by the word candlelighting. This is evident from Nehem. 13: 19—'And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath,' &c. It is there evident that the Sabbath had not commenced on Friday evening, when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark; or, in our customary language, when the dusk of the evening commenced in that city. The Sabbath, also, as a natural day, began originally at the same time; the first of the creation having commenced with absolute darkness. The time of darkness, to us, is the time when one can no longer see, so as to transact business by the light of the sun.

"Fifthly: The Christian Sabbath is the first day of the week, (?) and a natural day; because there is no hint given us, in the New Testament, of any alteration made or to be made in this respect. Dr. Macknight informs us that the ancient Christians began their Sabbath on the evening of Saturday. Some Christians have supposed, that the time when our Lord rose from the dead, is that, at which the present Sabbath ought to be begun. This is evidently an error; because THAT TIME IS NOT DECLARED IN THE NEW TESTAMENT, AND THEREFORE CANNOT BE KNOWN BY US. Accordingly these Christians begin the Sabbath at midnight—a time of human appointment merely. This seems to me unwarrantable."

COLPORTEURS ON THOROUGHFARES.

The ice is broken at last. After years of effort to secure well-qualified laborers for this difficult service, Providence seems to be raising up the men, and opening the door of access to the wayfaring population. The New Jersey Railroad and Transportation Company have generously given a free pass to one of this new class of laborers, whose station is on the Jersey City ferry-boats; an example of liberality which we trust will be followed by other steamboat and railroad companies. The colporteur meets the throngs entering or departing from the City, with his basket of books and tracts, and has succeeded thus far in his interesting mission. Passing up the North river on a night boat, with a supply of books, they were all sold on the boat before his return the next day. Though meeting with an occasional rebuff, he finds, in the main, that intelligent and Christian travelers appreciate his work and encourage him in it. The colporteurs of Satan have so long occupied this ground exclusively, to the grief and disgust of good men, that a religious colporteur is now welcomed and patronized. It is meeting the adversary on his own field.

Several other boat-colporteurs are preparing for the work. And the Lord is raising up friends for the movement. A venerable member of the Committee has given $50 for this enterprise, and other donations have been received. There will be occasion for others still, and we doubt not they will be forthcoming.

We would bespeak a kind word, at least, from those who may meet these boat-colporteurs; and would suggest that the friends of truth, residing in great thoroughfares, should start a similar movement in various parts of the country. There is a blessing in it. [Am. Mess.

☞ Is there not an opening for a few faithful colporteurs from the Sabbath Tract Societies? The public mind seems to be in some measure prepared to receive light upon topics hitherto unpalatable. It seems that as men get knowledge in the truths of religion, the appetite is increased for more. This thirst after knowledge should be excited by the circulation of scriptural views of the divine law. Who will occupy the station so favorably opened to the advocates of Sunday observance, and endeavor to counteract some of the evils inflicted upon the community by the occasional tares sown with the wheat by other hands? Who will engage in the work?

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In looking over the proceedings in Congress last week, we find but little done in which the public will feel particularly interested. The early part of the week was occupied in appointing chaplains and the various committees. Afterward several resolutions and bills were presented which will be noticed when acted upon. The subject of war with Mexico has been brought before both Houses in such a form as to encourage the hope that something will soon be done in the way of defining its object, at least.

In the SENATE, Mr. Calhoun offered resolutions to the effect that to conquer Mexico and hold it, either as a province or to incorporate it into the Union, is inconsistent with the avowed objects of the war and its prosecution, and a departure from the settled policy of the Government, in conflict with its character and genius, and in the end will subvert our free popular institutions; that no line of policy should be adopted for the future prosecution of the war, which way lead to consequences so disastrous. The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Mr. Holmes, of South Carolina, asked leave to introduce a resolution declaring substantially the inexpediency of extinguishing the nationality of Mexico, and declaring it expedient to secede all territory beyond the Rio Grande, on condition of free ingress and egress for our citizens into New Mexico and California, and our vessels into the ports of Mexico, reciprocal privileges in trade, and the privilege of constructing railroads to San Diego and any towns in New Mexico and California. Leave was not granted.

* * *

THE CAPITOL AT WASHINGTON ILLUMINATED.—The Capitol at Washington is now perhaps the best illuminated building in the world. The old sperm lights are abolished, and Mr. Crutchett has arranged and fitted up the gas lights in so tasteful and ingenious a manner that the Senate Chamber and House look like a scene in Aladdin's palace. Above the dome of the Rotunda, towers the great lantern filled with burners, and the chandeliers of both houses are superb. The one in the House of Representatives is ornamented with a beautiful scroll; that in the Senate by thirteen brilliant stars, representing the good old thirteen States, with their pendant prisms. These reflected from the mirrors above, appear like double stars, and multiplied to nearly double the number. Each chandelier furnishes light equal to 5000 spermaceti candles. The lighting of the chamber is complete, enabling any one to read with perfect ease on any part of the floor, and the light, though so powerful, is yet so soft that it is delightful to the eye.

* * *

A FEMALE FARMER.—The second premium for the best cultivated farm in Litchfield Co., Ct., was awarded the past season to Mrs. Vesta Hawkins, of Watertown. This farm contains 150 acres. It has been under Mrs. H.'s management for the last ten years. The committee of examination say:—"It is divided the present season into twenty-two acres of meadow, three and a half of corn, six of oats, one and a half of rye, two of buckwheat, a half acre of potatoes, seven acres of wood land, and the residue of pasture land. The produce of the farm for the present season is estimated as follows: fifty tons of hay, two hundred bushels of corn, one hundred and thirty-three shocks of oats, and one hundred and fifty bushels of potatoes. The stock kept on it this season consists of 26 head, including six calves raised this season, two horses and 56 sheep. The farm is conveniently laid out in small fields, and fences mostly of rails, all in good repair, and together with the buildings present a neat and tidy appearance. [Cultivator.

* * *

CURIOUS CASE.—A child about four years old, son of Mr. J. Sweet, of South Reading, Mass., swallowed a copper cent some two months since. Several physicians were called, and he was made to vomit at intervals, after the accident. Subsequently he was pretty well, with the exception of a difficulty of swallowing. Mr. Sweet, suspecting that the cent was still lodged in the throat, took the child to Dr. Wyman of Cambridge, who passed a probing instrument down the little sufferer's throat, and distinctly felt the cent. The doctor then made a double hook of common covered bonnet wire, which he passed into the throat, and on the first trial succeeded in hooking up the cent, which was lodged in the aesophagus, standing edgeways. The child is now very well.

* * *

FLOOD ON THE OHIO.—A telegraphic dispatch, dated at Cincinnati, Dec. 15, says that the waters of the Ohio have swelled to the highest point attained during the great flood of 1832, and the lower part of the city is entirely inundated. At least five thousand families have been rendered houseless by this disastrous flood, and great distress must ensue in consequence. A public meeting of the citizens has been called to provide the means for alleviating their destitute condition. The stores south of Pearl-street are flooded, and Broadway is overflowed. It is useless to calculate the damage, or to endeavor to give an idea of the distress existing among us. Business has been almost entirely suspended. Half the lumber in the city is afloat, and boats have been carried off the stocks in the ship yards.

* * *

The Court of Common Pleas for the County of Barnstable, Mass., held its annual session lately. The Judges took their seats; the chaplain prayed; the full complement of grand and petit jurors, a melodious crier, and a bar full of lawyers qualified to maintain either side of any cause—yet after all, not a single case criminal or civil was found for the jurors. In six months no two men could be got to go to law with each other, and nobody had committed a crime that required a verdict of guilty or not guilty. The county is one of the most populous in that State—but the principles planted by the pilgrims flourished there spontaneously.

SUMMARY.

The Scientific American says that the largest ship ever built in the United States, has been recently finished at Portsmouth, N. H., at a cost of 100,000 dollars, for Messrs. D. & A. Kingsland, of this city, and intended to run as a packet between here and Liverpool. She is a 3 decker, 1800 tons capacity, carpenter's measurement—that is about 300 tons more than any merchant vessel heretofore built in the United States. Her length on deck, is 186 feet, with 41 feet beam, and 34 feet 6 inches hold. The knees, between decks, are of white oak, and mould 32 inches in the throat, and 11 1-2 inches in the side. She is named the Columbus.

The corn crop of the United States this year is estimated at 600,000,000 bushels; in 1845, it was 417,800,000 bushels. The yearly exports from 1701 to 1819, several times arose above a million bushels, sometimes over two millions, but from 1819 to 1845, they did not in any one year amount to a million. In 1846, the exports were 1,826,086 bushels corn, and 298,786 bbls. corn meal. In 1847, the exports have arisen to the enormous quantity of 19,272,815 bushels of corn, and 945,040 bbls. meal.

In the Tyrol, and particularly at Voralberg, a regular business of breeding snails for sale is carried on. They are placed in large pieces of ground bare of shrubs and trees, and covered with grass, where they are fed with cabbage leaves. In winter they are covered with moss to protect them from the cold. The flesh is most delicate in autumn. They are sold on the spot at the rate of about two and a half to three florins the thousand.

The service of plate which some New York city gentlemen intended for the late Silas Wright, was presented to his widow pro forma, at the Stuyvesant Institute, by Senator Dix, who pronounced an eulogy on the deceased. The plate, manufactured by Gerardus Boyce, is highly wrought, and mostly beaten out of the solid bar; it is valued at about $18,029, and weighs fifty pounds, comprising one hundred and eighteen pieces. Gen. Dix is to present it in person to Mrs. Wright, at her private residence.

A few months since, one Sergeant Tagg, of the 20th Regiment at Halifax, made an attempt upon the life of Elizabeth Bourne with his sword in a fit of jealousy, because she would not return his affections. The trial came on at Halifax on Thursday, the 2d inst. The jury came in with a verdict of guilty, on hearing which the prisoner cut his throat with a penknife from ear to ear in the open court. Tagg is a young man not more than 21 years of age. His wound is supposed to be mortal.

Mr. Griswold (the efficient mail agent between New York and Philadelphia) left Washington with the Message, on a special engine, at a quarter past one precisely, arrived at Baltimore at half past two, Philadelphia at seven, New Brunswick at a little before nine, and Jersey City at fifteen minutes before ten—being altogether eight hours and a half, including all stoppages, between Washington and Jersey City—distance two hundred and twenty miles.

The old Indian house at Deerfield, Mass., an interesting relic of the Indian war, that survived the conflagration of the village of Deerfield, in 1704, has become so dilapidated that its present owner, Mr. Hoyt, has to remove it for the purpose of erecting a new house on its site. Inspired by a proper spirit, the citizens of the village have appointed a committee to take measures to secure the preservation of the relic, by purchasing it and removing it to a new location, and having it kept in repair.

The Athenæum states, that if no intelligence respecting the Arctic expedition, under command of Sir John Franklin, should arrive in the course of a few weeks, the admiralty will take measures to send in search of the missing voyagers, besides dispatching the expedition of which Sir John Richardson has undertaken the command.

Many persons do not clearly comprehend the term "Quarter," as applied to grain in England. It is this: A ton is 2,240 lbs., a quarter of that, is 560 lbs., and this is the weight of the British or Imperial quarter of wheat. The U. S. standard allows 60 lbs. to the bushel, the British 80, lbs. thus 8 x 60=560. A bushel of wheat in the United States is equal to 6-7ths of an English bushel, and a British quarter of wheat is equal to 9 1-2 U. S. bushels of 60 lbs. each.

The Peterboro, N. Y., Messenger says that Dr. Jewett has planned a good thing for blowing logs. It is a screw with a hole just large enough for the fire to communicate with the powder, through the middle. This being screwed into the hole after the powder is placed, confines it so closely that there is no escape. Every charge splits its log.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser remarks: "Twenty five thousand dollars are subscribed toward the Buffalo and Aurora plank road. We continue to notice, in exchange papers, many new projects of this kind, several of which refer to the neighborhood of Syracuse and Schenectady."

James McHenry Boyd, Esq., died at the U. S. Hotel, Philadelphia, from injuries received by the accidental discharge of a pistol he was uncapping. He was married in Baltimore in the morning, and had just reached Philadelphia on his way to New York, from whence he was expecting to sail with his lady for Europe, when the fatal accident occurred. The ball passed entirely through his body, rendering his case from the first hopeless.

The London Morning Advertiser of Oct. 16, draws attention to "the remarkable fact, that during the late scarcity of potatoes, which has been called a famine, the Irish actually exported more food than would have supplied any four countries in Europe. They had at the same time, completely within their reach, an abundance of fish which would be deemed luxuries in most of the European markets." The United States sent donations to Ireland, during the above period, to the extent of a million and a half of dollars.

A cotemporary says: We have seen no mention of life preservers in connection with the awful catastrophe of the Phœnix, on Lake Michigan, and we presume there was not one there. Yet the circumstances were such, that if every person had been furnished with a life preserver, we do not see why every life might not have been preserved.

Speaking of the weather one day last week, a New York paper says it was wet, warm, sultry, misty, melting, muddy, vapory, sloppy, disagreeable, thick, cloudy, moist, fickle, damp, foggy, dripping, drizzly, exhausting, unpleasant, intolerable, unhealthy, indescribable, and rainy. At noon the sky was clear and bright, but oh what showers we had at night!

A bill passed by the Legislature of New York allows the following compensation to officers:—To the Attorney General $2,500 and $800 for Clerk hire; State Engineer and Surveyor $2,500 and $700 for Clerk hire; State Prison Inspectors $1,500 each; Canal Commissioners $2,00—these salaries to be in lieu of all fees, traveling expenses, and other allowances. The Controller $2,500; Secretary of State $2,500; and the Treasurer $1,500; had been already fixed by law.

It is stated in the Chicago Journal, and the fact is vouched for by respectable citizens at Maintowoc, that the Propeller Delaware, on her way from Sheboygan to Maintowoc, after the destruction of the Phœnix, passed close by thirty or forty dead bodies floating in the Lake; but, though the weather was calm and the sea smooth, the Captain of the Delaware, resisting the earnest entreaties of his passengers, refused to lower his boats and pick those bodies up!

On Friday morning, about sunrise, two strangers went to the house of Robert Tete, in Hopewell, Cumberland Co., and took off his wife and child. Who they were, (says the Bridgeton Chronicle,) where they were from, or where they went to, we have not been able to learn. Robert was in town at work, but was soon informed of his loss.

It is said that one great English Railway contractor, has more than £7,000,000 of contracts incomplete at this moment; and though 20,000 workmen have recently been discharged from his employ, he yet pays $50,000 a week in wages alone.

Mr. Winthrop is the third Representative of Massachusetts, who has presided over the House of Representatives since the adoption of our Constitution, having been preceded by Theodore Sedgwick in the sixth Congress, and Joseph B. Varnum in the tenth and eleventh.

At Jamaica, L. I., on Wednesday last, two large hogs were guessed for—50 cent a guess. The fortunate guesser had his choice of the two, the next best guesser taking his leavings. This is a new item in Long Island sports.

The receipts on the Western Railroad, for the year ending Dec. 1st, exceeded those of the last year by $365,000—or $1,000 per diem throughout the whole period. The gross amount of receipts was $1,218,000.

Gen. Taylor will not, during his six months absence from camp, visit Washington, or attend any public meetings, nor, in any way, seek notoriety, but will employ himself exclusively in the management of his private affairs, which have suffered from long neglect.

The transmission of the President's Message over the telegraphic wires, to Louisville, Kentucky, and Vincennes, Indiana, was accomplished during Tuesday night, occupying about twelve hours' incessant labor on the part of the operators engaged in it.

It was currently reported at Sierra Leone, that there were 2,000 recaptured Africans in the liberated African department, and those rejected by the retaining officers as unfit for soldiers would be sent to the West Indies as emigrants.

Joseph E. West was convicted last week in the Burlington, N. J., Court, and sentenced to five years hard labor in the State Prison, for forging a deed. He is a man of education, and was, at one time, the most wealthy citizen of Atlantic County.

A letter mailed at West Poultney, Vt., postmarked June 12th, inclosing a bank draft, and very plainly directed to New York, reached its destination December 8, and a duplicate draft was remitted long ago, in September or August.

A correspondent of Cist's paper, the Cincinnati Advertiser, writes:—I notice a statement in the public journals, that the widow of Benjamin Rush, now 90 years of age, is still alive. She is therein stated to be the only survivor of the wives of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. This is a mistake. Mrs. Chase, the widow of Judge Chase, of Maryland, survives, in the 93d year of her age.

It appears from the reports of the Romish Society for the Propagation of the Faith, that while this country was contributing supplies to the starving Irish, the poor people of Ireland have contributed to that Society $28,000, to be spent in the spread of Romanism in this country.

During the present year sixteen coal-boats have been snagged on the same stump in one of the bends of the Mississippi river. Each boat was probably worth $1,000. Here, in a retail way, has a single snag cost the community $16,000 in one year.

Levi Lee, a colored man, died in Philadelphia on Thursday night, in consequence of injuries inflicted upon him by a colored woman in whose cellar he lived, and who had ordered him out into the storm because he was suspected to be ill of the fever which had prevailed among these people lately. He declined going, and she attacked and turned him out. His body when found was almost hidden by the snow which had fallen.

The Chicago Citizen says: "Land Warrants can now be bought in this city at $140 for 160 acres. These warrants are taken at par at the land offices for any land the Government has for sale. The flood of warrants offers an excellent opportunity to the people to get land cheap."

[Preëmptioners are not allowed to present Land Warrants in payment. They must still pay $200 in specie.]

The Pittsburgh Gazette notices the death in Alleghany city, on the 27th of Nov., of James Ross, Esq., who was one of the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States.

Fourteen thousand hogs have arrived by railroad in Baltimore within the fortnight. Twelve thousand more, says the Cumberland Civilian, are waiting a passage.

The editors of the Richmond (Va.) Times have received from the farm of Dr. Gwathmy, King William, a turnip weighing 10 1-2 lbs. when short of its tops.

Hon. Timothy Pitkin, an eminent citizen of Connecticut, who had been several times elected Speaker of the Connecticut House of Representatives, and served his State with distinguished ability as a member of Congress, from 1805 to 1819, died in New-Haven on the 18th, at the advanced age of 82.

A State Convention, for the purpose of organizing a State Educational Society in Indiana, has been held in the Capitol, Indiana. This is real republicanism. The class who are out of the circle of office-seekers, gamblers, purse-proud aristocrats, and able to reason, reflect, and act honestly and independently—these are a nation's strength.

The Quebec Gazette says, that in consequence of the failure of the cod and seal fisheries, and also of the potatoe crop, a famine will soon be experienced at the Magdalen Islands, unless prevented by relief from the government or some other source.

The health of Dr. Sylvester Graham, says the Worcester Journal, is on the decline. He is badly afflicted with nervous dyspepsia and disease of the lungs. By the advice of Dr. Ruggles and Dr. Woodward, he has been induced to adopt the use of animal food.

The Prairie Farmer says, that sheep slaughtering is being extensively carried on in Chicago this fall. One firm are engaged in slaughtering 3,000 head. The price for one flock, was $1 18 3-4 per head. The pelts and hams are properly cured for the market, and the balance of the carcase is steamed for the tallow.

A paper was read before the New York Historical Society on Monday, 6th inst., by Albert Gallatin, wherein he stated that E. B. Whitney, inventor of the Cotton Gin, had prolonged slavery in the United States.

Our countryman, Powers, has been fortunate in bringing to notice an old quarry of the richest marble in the world, which has lain obscured, a few miles from Leghorn, for 2,000 years.

A movement is in progress in Boston to establish a free public library for the citizens, and the Common Council have agreed to provide accommodations as soon as $30,000 is raised.

A railroad is to be constructed at Capetown, South Africa, for a distance of 7 miles. The expense is estimated to be 24,000 dollars per mile.

A four-wheeled carriage, with brown ornaments and iron wheels, has been recently discovered in a three story house dug out at Pompeii.

The bark Olga, Capt. John C. Bull, cleared from Boston for California, with a cargo valued at $26,400, of which $14,600 was of foreign products, and $11,800 domestic.

There is a project on foot in Pennsylvania to establish a free banking system on the basis of Pennsylvania stocks.

Boiled potatoes are said to cleanse the hands as well as common soap; they prevent chaps in the winter season, and keep the skin soft and healthy.

The bill to incorporate Syracuse as a city, passed both Houses on the 14th, so amended as to require a vote of the electors of Syracuse and Salina upon it.

One gentleman in Licking County, Ohio, it is stated, makes annually $100,000 worth of cheese.

The statue of Dr. Chalmers for the new college at Edinburgh will cost $1,500, of which $1,000 is already raised.

The capital already invested in railroads in in New-England States, is supposed to amount to $50,000,000.

An earthquake occurred in Chili and Peru on the 8th of October, which destroyed several towns.

Official documents state that there are at least 2,300 women attached to the American army cooking, washing, attending the sick, &c.

The value of provisions, breadstuffs and rice exported from Boston from 1796 to 1820, was $20,516,438, viz., provisions, $7,071,160; breadstuffs, $11,572,574; rice, $1,872,704.

* * *

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, DEC. 20.

ASHES—Pearls $7 00; Pots 5 50.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 37; Oswego, Troy, and Western, 6 19. Meal, Jersey, 3 47. Rye Flour 4 50. Buckwheat has risen, and sells for 3 50 per barrel.

GRAIN—Prime Genesee Wheat 1 40; Ohio Mixed 1 30. Corn from 72 to 81c. Rye 85c. Oats, Jersey, 43c; river and canal 45 a 50c.

PROVISIONS—Prime Pork 8 25; Mess 13 00. Beef 5 50 a 8 50. Lard 7 a 8c. Butter goes freely at 11 a 13c. for Ohio, and 14 a 22 for State. Cheese 6½ a 7c., with fair demand.

MARRIED,

At Hopewell, N. J., on the 10th inst., by Eld. D. Clawson, Mr. CHARLES C. SOCKWELL, to Miss SARAH S. DAVIS.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 27, by Eld. N. V. Hull, Mr. JACOB HENDRIX to Miss JUDITH A. COON, all of Alfred.

DIED,

In Scio, N. Y., Nov. 24, in the 78th year of her age, ANNA EMERSON. She was a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred.

In Alfred, N. Y., Nov. 30, Mrs. CHARLOTTE HARTWELL, wife of Franklin Hartwell, in the 27th year of her age.

LETTERS.

N. V. Hull, John Green, Christopher Chester, Isaac Clawson, John Whitford, George Crandall, Luke P. Babcock, Wm. Maxson, G. W. Hinkley, D. C. White, Franklin Cottrell.

RECEIPTS.

Varnum Hull, Scott,	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
R. G. Burdick, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
R. P. Babcock, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Jesse Burdick, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
G. M. Frisbie, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Barber, 3d, "	1 00	"	4	" 52
Thos. Dye, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
J. H. Kenyon, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
S. W. Davis, Berlin,	2 00	"	4	" 26
Polly Randall, Petersburg,	2 00	"	4	" 52
D. L. Wells, "	2 00	"	4	" 52
Christopher Chester, Verona,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Amy Hazard, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
Lucinda Rogers, Leonardsville,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Barney Crandall, Whitesville,	2 00	"	5	" 26
P. Mosher, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
Abel Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Green, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	"	3	" 52
F. Cottrell, "	1 00	"	4	" 26
C. S. Rogers, Waterford, Ct.	2 00	"	5	" 20
A. Lester, "	2 00	"	5	" 20
John Batty, Mystic, Ct.	2 00	"	4	" 52
J. Manwaring, East Lyme, Ct.	2 00	"	4	" 52

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.

CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, PROPRIETOR.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

☞ Since the first publication of the above notice, it has been found necessary to increase the price of books in morocco. Persons ordering them in future, will please note the fact, and act accordingly.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847-8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second " "	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third " "	April 5,	"	July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties ot their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!

Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. To be issued semi-monthly, in 16 numbers, at 25 cents each, double column letter-press; with upwards of THREE HUNDRED ELEGANT ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

The publication of the American edition, commencing with December, will be continued, two numbers each month, until the whole work is completed. Persons remitting Four Dollars, can receive the whole work promptly by mail, or otherwise, as soon as published. Booksellers and Agents supplied on the most liberal terms.

☞ The publishers of any respectable paper or periodical, who will give this notice THREE INSERTIONS and send us the papers containing it, shall be entitled to the work complete. The numbers will be forwarded per mail, unless otherwise directed, as they are issued from the press.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

LETTER FROM A GERMAN TO HIS FATHERLAND.

A Milwaukie (Wisconsin) paper publishes a translation of a letter in the Schnell Post from a German in that Territory to his friends in Germany. It shows how much our privileges are prized by those who never previously enjoyed the like:—

"Dear Friends:—We arrived at America in good health. We reached Milwaukie on the 10th of July, and hope that this letter will find you in good health. We have all been sea-sick, but nobody died. The 3d of July we took the steamboat to Albany, and there took the railroad for Milwaukie. We then bought land of the State. I, John ——, bought me eighty acres, (that is, in German, 120 morgen.) Then we went by wagon to a place thirty-six miles from Milwaukie, where we could feast our eyes on trees. There I built me a house of trees, 28 feet long and 18 feet wide, and have bought a stove for $13, upon which we can cook and bake bread too. We have bought a cow with a calf for $15, which could not be bought in Germany for $40.

"They think, in Germany, it is all wild in America;—no, the wild part is in Germany. The cities are prettier here than there, and we have all kinds of trees, which they have not got in Germany. I have on my land many trees, oak, beech, linden, sugar cane, (maple) and citron (cedar) trees. We are two miles from church. We have mass every month. After New-Year we have it every Sunday. Here we live Catholic—here we can nightly pray. The very poorest is as good as the richest. One can every day and year go to the highest officers. We need not touch our hats; we can keep our pipe in our mouth. We can thank God a thousand times, that he has brought us out of the land of bondage into the promised land; for we have here a fine land, and liberty.

"I pay every year $2 taxes for 120 morgen; it is fixed by the United States of America. There is everything enough in America. Flour costs $3 a barrel, and there is everything cheap here.

"Trade is free to all here. I wish you would all come to me. You need not be ashamed to come, for people come here who have no more money than John W——, of Borg. Who is once in the Kingdom, (United States,) he never goes back to Prussia. The very poorest in America is more than the very richest in the Grand Dutchy of Luxemburgh. A day laborer earns every day a dollar, and he need not give any drunken lawyer's clerk anything of it. All lads and lasses I bid come. Here we are happy. He who serves a year can earn or buy 80 acres of land, and none of it goes to the officers as in Germany. Come all from the slave land—from the slave land to the free land—for we have a free land here, and we thank God a thousand times that he has brought us out of the slave land to the free land. Brothers and sisters, come all to me—to us. I write to you the truth—the whole pure truth—so as God may help me, and His Holy Gospel. Believe the letter which I write to you. You would thank God if you were here, for I think how much a free land is better than a slave land. Here is no war, and nothing to fear: here everything is plenty.

"There are now twenty-nine United States. The money that they coin has on it a star for each. This signifies that the United States are as free as the stars of Heaven. One State is larger than France. Shall we not rejoice that we are in this land. Yes, we thank God one thousand times, and one thousand times one thousand, that he has brought us out of the slave land to the promised land. It is calculated that five hundred come every day. You must not think that America is all wild—for there are railroads, steamships, and manufactories, as in Europe. I hope from my heart that this letter will find you in good health; and write me back how it is in Germany—for I have heard that the hail has done much harm, and that the taxes have become much heavier.

"We have all thought of you much, but we do not want to be with you; and if Peter W——, of Berg, would give me his whole property, if I would carry back my wife and children, I would say no! I wish yet that we could all see each other in America, but we shall never see each other till the last day. I salute you all. Amen."

ANECDOTES OF THE HORSE.

INSTANCES OF REVENGE AND OBSTINACY.

Though Providence seems to have implanted in the horse a benevolent disposition, with at the same time a certain awe at the human race, yet there are instances on record of his recollecting injuries, and fearfully revenging them. A person near Boston was in the habit, whenever he wished to catch his horse in the field, of taking a quantity of corn in a measure by the way of bait. On calling to him, the horse would come up and eat the corn while the bridle was put over his head. But the owner having deceived the animal several times, by calling him when he had no corn in the measure, the horse at length began to suspect the design; and coming up one day as usual, on being called, looked into the measure, and seeing it empty, turned round, reared on his hind legs, and killed his master on the spot.

* * * * *

It is told of a horse belonging to an Irish nobleman, that he always became restive and furious whenever a certain individual came into his presence. One day this poor fellow happened to pass within reach, when the animal seized him with his teeth and broke his arm;—it threw him down and lay upon him—every effort to get it off proving unavailing, till the bystanders were compelled to shoot it. The reason assigned for this ferocity was, that the man had performed some cruel operation on the animal some time before, and which seems to have been revengefully remembered.

Occasionally, the horse displays unparalleled obstinacy, suffering himself to be lashed and bruised in the severest manner rather than yield to the wishes of his master. In most instances there is some discoverable cause for such perversity, though in some there appears to be no other impulse save that of a stubborn and willful disposition. We have witnessed a draught-horse, working lustily and cheerfully, all at once stand still in coming to a certain spot; and no coaxing that could be offered, or punishment that could be inflicted, would cause him to move one step, until he was blindfolded, and then he would push forward as if nothing had happened. On one occasion, we chanced to see a carter's horse take one of these obstinate fits, when issuing from a quarry with a load of stones. The most shameful tortures were had recourse to by the carter and quarrymen, but all to no purpose. We believe the animal would have suffered himself to be cut to pieces rather than stir one foot. At last the carter in desperation threw an iron chain around the neck of the animal, and yoked another horse to the chain; but no sooner did the obstinate brute perceive the intention of this application, than he rushed forward; and from that day the simple jingling of a chain was quite sufficient to put him out of the sulks.

For the most part, however, there is some apparent cause for these intractable fits, such as the remembrance of a fright, of a severe punishment, or of some other injury. Thus we have known a riding-horse pass within a few feet of the wands of a windmill when in motion; and yet no force or persuasion would induce him to pass them when they were at rest. This seemed curious to his master, till told that one day, when the animal was grazing immediately under the wands, they were suddenly set in motion, which so frightened him that in haste to escape he came down, and was stunned by the fall. The recollection of this had never forsaken him; and though he had courage to pass a moving wand, he could never so much as face the one that had a chance of being suddenly set in motion. Akin to this is the following, related to us by a correspondent:—In traveling by coach some years ago, we stopped at a country stage to change horses. While this process was going on, we remarked a peculiar interest to attach to the left wheel-horse, a strong-built, though rather hard-favored and sinister-looking animal. After usual preparations had been made, and amid the leers and jibes of a bevy of ostlers and post-boys, who stood by, armed with whips and staves, the order was given to start. The other horses bounded forward, but the left-wheeler instantly squatted down on the ground, and there he lay, notwithstanding the shower of blows with which he was forthwith assailed by the bystanders. It was in vain that they beat, coaxed and threatened him—there he lay, sullen and unmoved, till at last they were obliged to unyoke him, and supply his place with another. This had not been his first trick of the kind; yet we were told that the same horse submitted quietly to be yoked to a gig, and always proved to be a ready roadster. Some antipathy had rendered the coach abhorent to him, though he did not pretend to exempt himself from other kinds of labor. [Home Magazine.

WHERE THEY COME FROM.

Horace Greely, in speaking of the progress often made by a judicious course of mental self-culture, says: 'A single fact now occurs to me, which I have never seen recorded. I have often worshiped in a Baptist meeting house in Vermont, whereon, at its construction, some thirty years since, a studious and exemplary young man was for some time employed as a carpenter, who afterwards qualified himself, and entered upon the responsibilities of the Christian ministry. The young man was Jared Sparks, editor of the North American Review, of Washington's voluminous Writings, &c., and now recognized as one of the foremost scholars, historians, and critics in America.'

We have been reminded by this of another professor at Cambridge, who commenced his career in boyhood by carrying a foot stove to church on Sundays, and performing other domestic chores, for the lady of one of the dignitaries of that institution. The D. D. detected the boy's smartness, took a fancy to him, and sent him to school; and finding he made good progress in his studies, he gave him a college education. The result is, though yet a comparatively young man, he holds an important professorship in Cambridge, and, we believe, fills it with honor and success. Boys, try—try—TRY—TRY!

THE LAUGHING HYENA.

A late writer observes: The laugh of the hyena greatly resembles that of a maniac, and has a startling effect as it steals through the still night even under our windows, which it approaches in search of food. The power of imitation given to these animals is very extraordinary; for they not only cry like the quadruped whom they wish to lure within their reach, but they even seem to utter human sounds. The commandant of a fortress on the western coast of Africa assured a lady that for several evenings he had been disturbed at his dinner hour by the laughter and screaming of the native women, who passed under the walls in search of water. He sent his sergeant to them, who desired that they might take some other path, and they promised to obey. The next evening, however, the noise was heard again, which highly irritated the commandant, and he desired the sergeant to lie in ambush on the third evening and rush suddenly out on them, with a few soldiers, secure the women, and bring them to him in the fortress. The men took their stations as ordered, the laughing recommenced, and out they sallied, when, to their great astonishment, they only saw three hyenas standing in the path which had been frequented by the women, and so well counterfeiting their voices, that they could not have been detected but by sight. These hyenas are not very formidable, and will, at any time, rather fly from than attack a human being.

This species of the hyena are very common in American menageries, but they are so subdued and powerless, from constant confinement, and so fearfully watchful of the keeper's eye, that they never manifest, as prisoners, any of the peculiar imitative sounds which characterize them in their native regions.

Quirks.—The 2thake may be perfectly cured without pain, by the French Specific. [Mer.

We wonder if the specific is hard 2take; if not, we will try it 4thwith. [Ex. paper

If it cure it will be a 1der indeed. [Trans.

10derly, gentlemen; 'tis a sore subject. [Led.

Yes, and one requiring 40tude. [Sat. Cour.

This is carrying the matter quite as far as 80quette will bear. [Mail.

TO A CHILD EMBRACING ITS MOTHER.

BY THOMAS HOOD.

Love thy mother, little one!
  Kiss and clasp her neck again;
Hereafter she may have a son
  Will kiss and clasp her neck in vain,—
Love thy mother, little one!

Press her lips the while they glow
  With love that they have often told;
Hereafter thou may'st press in wo,
  And kiss them till thine own are cold,—
Press her lips the while they glow!

O, revere her raven hair,
  Although it be not silvery gray,
Too early, death, led on by care,
  May snatch, save one dear lock away,—
O, revere her raven hair!

Pray for her, at eve and morn,
  That heaven may long the stroke defer,
For thou may'st live the hour forlorn
  When thou wilt ask to die with her,—
Pray for her, at eve and morn!

The Duke after the Battle of Waterloo.—It was late, it was midnight, when the Duke of Wellington lay down. He had not found time so much as to wash his face or hands; but, overcome with fatigue, threw himself, after finishing his dispatches, on his bed. He had seen Dr. Hume, and desired him to come punctually at seven in the morning with his report; and the latter, who took no rest, but spent the night beside the wounded, came at the hour appointed. He knocked at the Duke's door, but received no answer; he lifted the latch, and looked in, and seeing him in a sound sleep, could not find in his heart to awake him; by and by, however, reflecting on the importance of time to a man in the Duke's high situation, and being well aware that it formed no article in his grace's code to prefer personal indulgence, of any sort, to public duty, he proceeded to the bedside and roused the sleeper. The Duke sat up in his bed; his face, unshaven, and covered with the dust and smoke of yesterday's battle, presented a rather strange appearance; yet his senses were collected, and in a moment he desired Hume to make his statement. The latter produced his list, and began to read; but when, as he proceeded, name after name came out—this as of one dead, the other as of one dying—his voice failed him; and looking up, he saw that the Duke was in an agony of grief; the tears chased one another from his grace's eyes, making deep visible furrows in the soldier's blackened cheeks, and at last he threw himself back upon his pillow, and groaned aloud. "It has been my good fortune never to lose a battle; yet all this glory can by no means compensate for so great a loss of friends," he cried, "what victory is not too dearly purchased at such a cost?" [Poynder's Literary Extracts.

To Make Good Butter in Winter.—We often hear the complaint that butter made in winter is poor. Ours was so for several seasons. It was very slow in coming and frothy, white and sometimes bitter; while butter made from the same kind of milk in the warm season was good. I devised many plans for improvement—such as throwing in salt, warm milk, scalding cream, &c.,—but to no purpose. At length I scalded my milk when brought from the cow, afterwards setting it in either a cold or warm place, as most convenient. I mean I communicated sufficient heat to my milk to destroy the effect which frosty feed in autumn or dry feed in winter had upon it. Since which time we have made, with fifteen minutes churning, purer, sweeter, and more yellow butter, than we ever made in summer—and sometimes from the frozen cream gradually warmed. And were it not that the increase of manufactures, the pursuit of fashion, and other causes combined, render helping hands in a dairy-room now-a-days very scarce, I should be at the trouble of scalding my milk before setting it during the summer, as well as in winter; for surely, butter made in this way possesses a delicious richness and dryness which cannot be found in any other. [Cultivator.

Singular.—The Utica Herald says:—A person was observed by some of the passengers on the eastern train, sitting on the platform, with his feet projecting over the steps, moving as though he designed to jump off. He was seized by some of the passengers, and made a violent resistance. Notwithstanding the force which was used to keep him back, he succeeded in thrusting the main part of his body so far over the side of the platform, as to have inevitably caused the destruction of his life by contact with a bridge, which the train, going at the rate of 20 miles an hour, was approaching. His captors perceiving that they could not retain him in their grasp, and fearing the consequences of passing the bridge in that position, gave him a violent push just before the bridge was reached, and he was precipitated on the side of the track. The train was immediately stopped and backed to the place where he fell. The man was found walking east, apparently unhurt, but upon being taken up, his head was found to be considerably bruised, and he was conveyed by the train to Little Falls and left there. His name and residence were unknown, and he is supposed to be insane.

Indian Summer.—When the English first settled in America, it was remarked by the Indian Chiefs, that the Summer was their favorite season. Every thing they were required to do, was to be performed in Summer. Summer appeared to be their season for peculiar pleasure and festivity. They worked briskly through the day, and the evening was consumed in mirth and conviviality, and in music and the dance.

The favorite period of the Indians was that time when the leaves fall rustling from the trees, the sun shines dimly through a hazy atmosphere, when the nights are free from frost, and the days moderately warm. This period, whenever it occurred in Autumn, either in October or November, or indeed in wintry December, was hailed with every feeling of delight by the Indians: fire was set to the dry leaves of the forest, which rapidly spread and drove the deer to the laurel groves for protection, where the Indians were concealed prepared for their destruction. The Indian hunter would say to the European, "The white man's Summer is past and gone, but the Indian's Summer is come;" hence the origin of Indian Summer.

VARIETY.

I once heard that a gentleman's servant of the name of Simon, who was considered silly, was found bowing and scraping to his master's wardrobe. His master asked him how he could be such a fool as to act in so silly a manner. "For the matter of that," replied Simon, "I am not a greater fool than my neighbors, for they will bow to a handsome suit of clothes, and turn up their noses at a suit that is threadbare. If you doubt this, master, let me put on your clothes and you put on mine, and we will go and seek our fortunes together, and see who will have the most respect paid him." The gentleman by no means relished this proposal, and was often heard to say, afterwards, that silly Simon was one of the shrewdest men he had about his premises.

Though any man can put his pony or his roadster to the canter, few are able, in general, to explain the word by which they designate the animal's pace. The term canter is a corruption, or rather an abbreviation of a Canterbury gallop, which signifies the hand-gallop of an ambling horse. The origin of the phrase is as old as the days of Canterbury pilgrimages, when votaries came at certain seasons to the shrine of Thomas-a-Becket, in that city, from all parts of the nation. Mail-coaches and railroads being then unknown, the pilgrims traveled on horseback, and, from their using generally easy ambling nags, the pace at which they got over the ground came to be called a "Canterbury gallop," and afterwards "a Canter."

Justice forbids that men should purchase that for which they cannot pay; and that rule of justice observed through life will always work out competence and comfort. There is but one secret in the successful pursuit of life; whatever be your income—spend less. Whatever be your circumstances—pay when you purchase. One hundred dollars in a community acting upon this principle, will go farther and do more than five hundred in a community where every body is debtor or creditor—where every sixpence has to be chased till it costs more than it is worth—and the labor of getting, exceeds the labor of earning.

It is said the great British reviewer, Jeffries, once remarked, that it was his firm belief that if a premium of a thousand dollars was offered for the best translation of the Greek Bible, it would be taken by a Yankee, who, till the offer was made, had never seen a word of Greek in his life. He would commence learning the language immediately to qualify himself for the great undertaking, and would finish the whole work quicker than any other person, and bear off the premium.

Some men of the greatest talents have taken great delight in composing, or endeavoring to untavel, riddles. Dean Swift is a case in point. Sir William Smyth, the learned Irish Baron of the exchequer, at one time spent two days in considering the answer to this conundrum—"Why is an egg undone like an egg overdone?" He would not suffer any one to give the answer, which he at last discovered. It is a tolerable pun enough—"Because they are hardly done."

The Detroit Advertiser says that the manufacturing of mint oil is becoming an important branch in the products and exports of Michigan. In several places in the State, mint is cultivated largely, and we understand profitably, for the manufacture of mint oil. In St. Joseph County, it is carried on largely by Ex. Gov. Barry. The value of oil shipped from there this fall, of his make, amounts to nearly $25,000.

George II. being informed that an impudent printer was to be punished for having published a spurious king's speech, he replied that he hoped the punishment would be of the mildest sort, because he had read both, and as far as he understood either of them, he liked the spurious speech better than his own.

The editor of the Claremont Eagle having been "warned to appear armed and equipped as the law directs," gives the following cogent reasons for not complying with this command:—1st. We never did train; 2d. We don't know how to train; 3d. We don't want to train; 4th. We won't train.

An almost instant cure for bloody flux, dis-entery, cholera-morbus, and all ailments of that class, will be found by taking a large spoonful of common table salt, and two tea-spoonfuls of vinegar. Put into half a pint of hot water and drink as warm as possible. Although unpleasant to drink, you will find relief as soon as the nauseousness of the draught has passed.

The following paragraph from the Wisconsin Republican, is a proof of how much greater importance is attached at the west to domestic than to public duties. That paper says:—"As we are about going to housekeeping, and have many necessary arrangements to complete, no paper will be issued next week, and possibly, for a fortnight to come."

John Randolph once avowed himself decidedly in favor of fall elections. He said he wished the voters to appear at the polls when they could "feel their independence." "In the spring," said he, "the people have corn to buy—in the fall they have it to sell; and they always feel more independent when they have corn to sell than when they have it to buy!"

Some are so censorious as to advance, that those who have discovered a thorough knowledge of all the depravities of the human heart, must be themselves depraved; but this is about as wise as to affirm, that every physician who understands a disease must be himself diseased.

Quite pleasant was a Thanksgiving party at Quincy. Thirty-two persons went out from the city to the old homestead, which number included all the children and grand-children living. A good time they must have had of it, and the day is a blessing to produce such scenes.

It appears that some of the clergy in Maine on Thanksgiving Day read the proclamation of the Governor of Massachusetts in preference to that of their own State.

It must be rather a humbling thought to those that are fond of dress, to consider that the respect they obtain is not paid to them, but to their clothes.

Gen. Taylor and suite were received at New-Orleans by a splendid procession on Tuesday the 2d inst.

The Lewistown Bank, at Lewistown, Penn., failed Dec. 6.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the psess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus.

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 28. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, DECEMBER 30, 1847. WHOLE NO. 184.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since. [Continued.

From the time of their passing the Red Sea, according to this author, the Sabbath was changed from the first day to the seventh, and that so indubitably as to be without question. Not less confident is Mede of a change from the first to the seventh day; but, according to him, this change did not take place "till the raining of the manna." In their zeal for the sanctification of the first day of the week, these authors thus gave us two entirely different times of the change of the Sabbath before its promulgation from Sinai. Mede fixes on the 22d day of the second month after the Israelites left the land of Egypt, as that on which his change was effected; while this later author, with the same object in view, fixes his change to the time of their passing the Red Sea. And let me not be supposed as here condemning either for a mere typographical error or verbal mistake. From the quotations made, it may be seen that I refer not only to the deliberate statements, but to the arguments of both—Mede resting simply, but decidedly, on the time at which the manna was given; the other, with yet greater minuteness and frequency, asserting that the day on which the Egyptians were drowned, was the Israelitish "new Sabbath," more than a month earlier, therefore, of necessity.

Now all this is not more destitute of proof, than it is inconsistent with truth,—and, to us, it seems not a little remarkable that in the work from which we have quoted most fully there is neither the shadow of proof, nor the least attempt at producing it. He does not even agree with Mede as to the period at which this new Sabbath begun. It is indeed affirmed by both, that the Israelites had been led to take a long and wearisome journey on the Sabbath—which journey marked the imagined change. But they do not agree as to the particular Sabbath on which the change was effected. Mede supposes that it was not immediately on their passing through the Red Sea, but after they had left Elim. "Certain I am," says he of the seventh day, "the Jews kept not that day for a Sabbath till the raining of the manna." He confesses that we have in the Scriptural account of the time of Israel's journeying to the wilderness of Sin, the sole evidence on which he rests his notion of a change of the Sabbath at this time. And if, as he says, "otherwise it could not have been known" it is the more imperative that we give close consideration whether it is to be found there,—whether it be at all implied, as it is manifestly not declared.

That we may do the fullest justice to the objectors, we revert to the supposed evidence Mede adduces of the Israelites having so traveled a long journey on the first Sabbath after they left their Elim station—that alledged profanation of the day being the sole evidence for the imagined change. We are informed by the inspired historian, that "all the congregation of the children of Israel came into the wilderness of Sin, which is between Elim and Sinai, on the fifteenth day of the second month after their departing out of the land of Egypt." Ex. 16: 1. And again, that on "the sixth day" they gathered twice as much manna as on other days, because that on the morrow was the Sabbath, ver. 22. A calculation is then made by which it is sought to shew that reckoning forward seven days from the fifteenth day of the month, on which the supply of manna begun, the seventh of these days being a Sabbath, the first ought to have been so also, which the long journey proves it not to have been. If, in short, we add six days, on which manna was supplied, to the fifteen previously elapsed of the month, we are brought to the twenty-first, and that if the following day was a Sabbath, then so also would have been the fifteenth, which yet was spent by the Israelites in journeying. And then it is presumed, that the divine purpose in so leading them to journey on this special occasion on the Sabbath—seeing that every movement of the camp was under divine direction, and that it was only when the symbols of Jehovah's presence were taken up from over the tabernacle that the children of Israel went onward in all their journies,—was that they might be weaned from their former practice of sanctifying it.

If there were any force at all in such reasoning, what it seems to prove would be, not that the Sabbath was now changed from the first day to the seventh, but changed to the seventh from some day unknown. For although it were admitted that the Israelites' journeying on the fifteenth proved that it was not the Sabbath, this surely does not demonstrate that either the day before the fifteenth or yet the day after it was, which Mede's reasoning seems to require for the establishment of his conclusion. But all this argument is evidently founded upon a mistake, in not distinguishing sufficiently between the days of the week and the days of the month. The writer has assumed that the sixth day mentioned in Ex. 16: 22, refers to the number of days which had elapsed since the Israelites had come into the wilderness, or since the manna begun to fall—not observing that this number refers simply to the enumeration of the days of the week,—the sixth day, by name, as immediately preceding the seventh, or day of rest. On reading the chapter, it is plain that this is not a reckoning of the number of days from the time the manna began to fall; but that God here intimates the law, by which at this time and afterwards, the supply of manna would be regulated; that the seventh day being the Sabbath, there should regularly be a double supply upon the sixth, to serve for both, whatever the day of the week may have been on which it was first given. "And it came to pass that on the sixth day, they gathered twice as much bread," because "to-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord." It intimates neither on which day of the week the manna began to fall, nor how many days supply of manna there may have been previously to the sixth day, but contains instructions concerning the provision made for the seventh, and their duty in regard to the collection and preparation of it. It is not that now for the first time to-morrow will be a Sabbath—but "to-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath." Just as in the ordinary management of a religious household, the head of the house, with a desire to the sanctification of the Sabbath, might enjoin the servant to see that preparation be made for it, by the purchase of a double supply of bread on the preceding day, assigning the reason, in the way of remembrance, that to-morrow is the Sabbath, when we may not make purchases. The term "sixth day" is used here merely as a proper name, in exact accordance with the manner in which "the seventh day" is named in the same chapter. "Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none. And it came to pass that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws? See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore He giveth you, on the sixth day, the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day." Ver. 26—30.

And had God designed to win the Israelites from the observance of the Sabbath they had formerly enjoyed, it certainly would seem not a little strange that they should not have been told something of the fact, at least, of the change—of which, however, not one word is uttered by the inspired historian, either for their information or for ours. And the wonder would have been increased, were it really so, that the discovery should have been one only of modern Christianity—that not a word of such a thing should ever afterwards have been referred to by any of the inspired writers of the Old Testament, nor even by any of the apostles, (to say nothing of those of subsequent ages,*) had they meant to return, as our author would have us believe, to a Sabbath which existed by divine command before the exodus, and from which the Israelites had passed so quietly away, that not even a murmur of apprehension, not a word of doubt, escaped the lips of Moses or Aaron, or any of that vast multitude, people, priests, or leaders.

Mede says, and his whole argument is grounded upon this, that, beginning on the sixteenth of the month, it rained manna "six days together;" that on the twenty-second day of the month it rained no manna—and that the Israelites were commanded to keep this twenty-second day as their Sabbath. Each and all of these, however, are gratuitous assumptions; not one of them is contained in the text. We neither are told how many days of the first week it rained manna before the Sabbath, nor whether the twenty-second day was a Sabbath; nor, consequently, whether upon that day the manna fell.

Now it is observable, how in all the chapter to which he thus refers, the Sabbath is regularly alluded to as "the seventh day," without the least reason for its being supposed to be any other than the old original Sabbath, or that the first day had ever previously been observed, as asserted, from the time of the institution of the Sabbath in Paradise. The "seventh day" is here called by God and his servant Moses, "the Sabbath," without the least appearance of its being the intimation of a novelty. We read nothing of a new Sabbath on a different day; the seventh, just as before, here still "is the Sabbath," "the holy Sabbath"—not that beginning from this time, it should henceforth be so reckoned—not that it shall be, but that it "is the Sabbath," as formerly declared, and already known, and for the full sanctification of which provision is made. It is not, as Mede would have us believe, that the sacredness of a new day is marked out for the first time by this arrangement; but the daily supply of the manna is interrupted, because of the sacredness of the day which from the beginning had been sanctified and blessed.

No one questions that the day marked out as the Sabbath by the ceasing of the manna was the same Sabbath which God shortly after proclaimed from Sinai. Yet so far from our there finding any evidence for a change having recently been effected, the fallacy of such a notion is farther proved by the divine declarations on that solemn occasion. We there find the Sabbath still declared to be the seventh, day as it had previously been at creation. That this does not mean just any day of the seven, provided only that it be called a seventh by men, is proved by the continuation of the reason assigned by God for its sanctification at creation. Now this reason, as we have before shown, refers only to the day of God's own rest, and would have been wholly inapplicable had any change taken place. The reason by which the observance of the very seventh day on which no manna fell is at Sinai enforced, is, "for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Ex. 20: 11. Would this reason have been assigned at Sinai for the observance of the seventh day—the same day on which the manna was withheld—if the day on which God really rested had been the first day? Had it been changed, we cannot believe a reason afterwards to have been assigned which would be applicable only to a different day. Whatever other reason might have been given for the sanctification of a NEW Sabbath, we may not believe that a reason true only as regarded another day would have been given. And with all this varied evidence upon the subject, we are left to marvel that Mede, or any other man, should have been led to adopt the notion we have been called to combat.

BURIAL OF THE SEED.

TRANSLATED FROM THE GERMAN.

Now, my seed, thy grave is made;
In thy silent chamber laid,
  Thou mayest slumber lightly;
May the sun his radiance lend,
And the dews of heaven descend
  On thy pillow nightly.

Could'st thou, gentle one,
Could'st thou feel what I have done,
  Thou would'st whisper, weeping,
Ah, green earth, and bright blue skies,
Never more may greet my eyes,
  All in darkness sleeping.

Yet sleep on thou seedling dear;
Sweetly sleep, nor dream of fear,
  Soon from slumber waking,
Once more again shalt thou behold
Morning sunlight, bright as gold,
  O'er the green earth breaking.

I at last must sink like thee,
Hands of love shall bury me,
  Heaping cold earth o'er me;
But when God from yonder skies,
Bids the slumbering dead arise,
  May I awake to glory!

"WHAT CAN YOU SAY, SIR?"

When Thomas Hoopoo, a native of the South Sea Islands, had been about two years in the Cornwall Mission-school, he took a journey with a friend, and spent an evening in a select company, who were much entertained by questions proposed to him by an irreligious lawyer, and his amusing answers. At length Thomas said in substance:

"I am a poor heathen boy. It is not strange that my blunders in English should amuse you. But soon there will be a larger meeting than this. We shall all be there. They will ask us all one question, viz., 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' Now, sir, I think I can say, Yes—What will you say, sir?"

He ceased; a death-like stillness pervaded the room. At length it was broken by a proposition of the lawyer, that, as the evening was far spent, they should have a season of devotion, in which Thomas should lead. It was acceded to; and Thomas, in his accustomed meek and affectionate manner, addressed the throne of grace. Soon he prayed for the lawyer in person, alluding to his learning and talent, and besought that he might not be ignorant of salvation through Christ. As he proceeded thus, the emotion of the lawyer rose above restraint. He sobbed aloud. The whole company were affected, and sobs drowned the speaker's voice.

Soon they separated, and retired to their respective rooms. But there was no rest for the lawyer—"What will you say, sir?" He paced his room in anguish. The Spirit of God had touched his conscience. He found no rest until he could answer the question proposed by that "heathen boy," with an affectionate trust in his Redeemer.

SATAN A FISHERMAN.

I was some time since walking upon the wharf where a fishing boat lay, and as I was passing and repassing, the master was uttering the most tremendous oaths. At length I turned to him, and standing beside his boat, said:

"Sir, I am unacquainted with your business. What kind of fish are these?"

He replied, "They are cod-fish."

"How long are you usually out in order to obtain your load?"

"Two or three weeks," was the answer.

"At what price do you sell them?"

He informed me.

"Well, have you not hard work to obtain a living in this way?"

"Yes, hard work," said he.

I inquired, "With what do you bait these fish?"

"With clams."

"Did you ever catch mackerel?"

"Yes."

"And I suppose you bait them with clams, too?"

"Oh no," said he, "they will not bite at clams."

"Then you must have different kinds of bait for different sorts of fish?"

"Yes."

"Well, now, did you ever catch a fish without a bait?"

"Yes," said he, "I was out last year, and one day, when I was fixing my line, my hook fell into the water, and the fool took hold of it, and I drew him in."

"Now, sir," said I, "I have often thought that satan was very much like a fisherman. He always baits his hook with that kind of bait which different sorts of sinners like best; but when he would catch a profane swearer, he does not take the trouble to put on any bait at all, for the fool will always bite at the bare hook."

He was silent. His countenance was solemn, and after a moment's pause, as I turned to go away, I heard him say to one standing by him, "I guess that's a minister." [Ch. Mirror.

A MOTHER PRAYING A SON HOME.

What thoughts crowd around the heart at the mention of these words? Years may pass away; mountains, rivers and oceans may intervene between us and the spot where first we heard a mother's prayers, yet they cannot be lost to memory. Sickness, sorrow and neglect may be suffered, and even the heart may seemingly become callous to all good impressions, yet at the sound of a mother's—a praying mother's name—a cord is touched which thrills through the soul, and rarely fails to awaken better feelings. Does danger threaten? We hope, and, perhaps, fondly anticipate, that a mother's prayers, which have been offered in our behalf, may be answered.

Never did I see this more forcibly illustrated than in the case of a weather-beaten sailor, who resided in one of our coast towns. I had the narrative from the lips of the mother. In making his homeward passage, as he "doubled the stormy Cape," a dreadful storm arose. The mother had heard of his arrival "outside the Cape," and was awaiting, with anxiety a mother alone can know, to see her son. But now a storm had arisen, and as she had expected, when the ship was in the most dangerous place. Fearing that each blast, as it swept the raging deep, might howl the requiem of her son, with faith strong in God, she commenced praying for his safety. At this moment news came that the vessel was lost! The father, an unconverted man, had, till this time, preserved a sullen silence, but now he wept aloud. The mother observed:

"It is in the hands of Him that does all things well;" and again, in a subdued and softened spirit, bowed and commended her son and her partner, in an audible voice, broken only by the burstings of a full heart, to God.

Darkness had now spread her mantle abroad, and they retired, but not to rest, and anxiously waited for morning, hoping, at least, that some relic of their lost one might be found.

The morning came. The winds were hushed, and the ocean lay comparatively calm, as though its fury had subsided since its victim was no more. At this moment, the little gate in front of their dwelling turned on its hinges. The door opened, and their son, their lost, their loved son, stood before them! The vessel had been driven into one of the many harbors on the coast, and he was safe. The father rushed to meet him. His mother, already on his neck, earnestly exclaimed:

"My child, how came you here?"

"Mother," said he, while tears coursed down his sunburnt face, "I knew you'd pray me home!"

What a spectacle! a wild, reckless youth acknowledging the efficacy of prayer. It seems that he was aware of his perilous situation, and that he labored with the thought—

"My mother prays: Christian prayers are answered, and I may be saved."

This reflection, when almost exhausted with fatigue, and ready to give up in despair, gave him fresh courage, and with renewed effort he labored, till the harbor was gained.

Christian mother, go thou and do likewise. Pray over that son who is likely to be wrecked on the stream of life, and his prospects blasted forever. He may be saved. [Children's Friend.

"PRAY THAT SERMON."

A young licentiate, after throwing off a highly wrought, and, as he thought, eloquent gospel sermon, in the pulpit and presence of a venerable pastor, solicited of his experienced friend the benefit of his criticisms upon the performance. "I have but just one remark to make," was his reply, "and that is to request you to pray that sermon." "What do you mean, sir?" "I mean literally just what I say, pray it, if you can, and you will find the attempt a better criticism than any I can make upon it." The request still puzzled the young man, beyond measure; the idea of praying a sermon was a thing he never conceived of; and the singularity of the suggestion wrought powerfully on his imagination and feelings He resolved to attempt the task. He laid his manuscript before him, and on his knees before God undertook to make it into prayer. But it wouldn't pray; the spirit of prayer was not in it, and that, for the very good reason, as he then clearly saw for the first time, that the spirit of prayer and piety did not compose it. For the first time, he saw that his heart was not right with God; and this conviction left him no peace until he had "Christ formed in him the hope of glory." With a renewed heart, he applied himself anew to the work of composing sermons for the pulpit; preached again in the presence of the pious pastor who had given such timely advice; and again solicited the benefit of his critical remarks. "I have no remarks to make," was his complacent reply, "you can pray that sermon."

LITERATURE AND LEARNING IN CHINA.

The Chinese are a reading people, and the number of their published works is very considerable. In the departments of morals, history, biography, the drama, poetry, and romance, there are no lack of writings, such as they are. The Chinese Materia Medica comprises forty octavo volumes; of statistical works the number is very large. Their novels are said to be excellent pictures of the national manners. China is full of books; new authors are continually springing up; the press is active, and the traffic in books is a lucrative and most honorable branch of trade. When examinations take place in the capital or the palace, the most clever students are chosen to fill the office of bookmakers. There are, however, but few really new works, and all that appear are compilations and quotations; the author never venturing an idea of his own; and in this consists true learning, according to Chinese notions. There is one work in the Royal Library, on the topography of China, which is said to consist of 5,000 volumes; some of the best translators that have had access to some extracts from this giant, were sadly disappointed, as it appears to be a mass of confusion, without any attempt at order or arrangement. There are numerous small treatises, similar to our tracts, gratuitously distributed by private individuals, inculcating morality and virtue. Printing is evidently cheaper in China than in Europe, when ten volumes, each containing 100 pages, can be purchased for less than a dollar. Every peasant and the poorest fisherman can read and write. Private and public schools are numerous in every province, and entirely independent of government. Occasionally an examiner visits all the schools to ascertain the qualifications of teachers.

EARLY RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Some persons contend that the young mind should be left to grow untaught in religious truth, until it is sufficiently matured to judge for itself. Coleridge and his friends were once talking upon this very subject, one of whom maintained that religion should not be instilled into the youthful mind, and Coleridge contending that it should. His friend observed that the mind should be left to itself upon that subject, and in mature years, it would of itself assume the right direction. After dinner, he walked into his garden, and showed him a spot full of nothing but mustard plants. "There, (said C.,) is a fine flower garden." "Flower garden!" said his astonished friend, "why they are all mustard plants." "I know that, (said Coleridge,) but after a while, some how or other, the mustard will all be rooted out, and we shall have a splendid variety of cultivated flowers! True religion never produces fanaticism or bigotry. The greatest fanatics I ever knew were infidels, the greatest bigots were Deists. They are the only men who will give you no liberty to think for yourself, while they strenuously claim that liberty for themselves. They remind me of the man who declared to one who disputed with him, that this was not a free country; he could not do as he pleased. 'How so,' said his companion; 'can't you do as you please?' 'Why, yes, pretty much, but I can't make you do as I please.'"

EARLY PIETY.

There was a young man, well known to the writer, who had very great talents. He could speak on almost every subject but one. He read many books, knew many languages, and thought a great deal on all he heard and saw. Yet, strange to say, he never or seldom spoke of God. He never loved nor sought him. He had finished his education, he had traveled to distant lands, and had gathered great stores of learning, when consumption came. It pleased God, in his mercy, to grant him a long period of illness, and in the early stage of his disease, God taught him the uselessness of all the learning which he had spent his life in gaining, compared with the knowledge revealed in Scripture, the knowledge of the one true God, and of Jesus Christ, his Son, the only Saviour of sinners. Now, his high intellect and proud heart were subdued. He bowed humbly before God, and, in the meek disposition of a little child, prayed for the teaching of God's spirit, and God heard and answered his prayers. One day, just before his death, a friend was reading to him the twenty-third Psalm. The dying young man listened as he read these words,—"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and staff they comfort me." "Stay," said the invalid, "stay; yes, God is with me, but, I think, the valley would not have been so dark had I sought him earlier!"

A PIOUS DAUGHTER.

Children, says the Rev. William Gray, have conveyed religion to those from whom they ought to have derived it. 'Well,' said a mother, one day, weeping, her daughter being about to make a public profession of religion, 'I will resist no longer. How can I bear to see my dear child love and read the Scriptures, while I never look into the Bible; to see her retire and seek God, while I never pray; to see her going to the Lord's table, while his death is nothing to me?'

'Ah!' said she, to the minister who called to inform her of her daughter's intention, wiping her eyes, 'Yes, sir, I know she is right and I am wrong. I have seen her firm under reproach, and patient under provocation, and cheerful in all her sufferings. When, in her late illness, she was looking for dissolution, heaven stood in her face. O that I was fit to die! I ought to have taught her, but I am sure she has taught me. How can I bear to see her joining the church of God, and leaving me behind, perhaps, forever?'

From that hour she prayed in earnest that the God of her child would be her God, and was soon seen walking with her child in the way everlasting. Is it suppositious? More than one eye, in reading this allusion, will drop a testimony to the truth of it. 'We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen.' May God bless us and make us blessings.

Anecdote of Patrick Henry.—When the celebrated Patrick Henry, of Virginia, was near the close of his life, and in feeble health, he laid his hand on the Bible, and addressed a friend who was with him, "Here is a book worth more than all others printed; yet it is my misfortune never to have read it with proper attention until lately." About the same time he wrote to his daughter, "I have heard it said that Deists have claimed me! The thought pained me more than the appellation of Tory; for I consider religion of infinitely higher importance than politics; and I find much cause to reproach myself, that I have lived so long and given no decided public proof of my being a Christian."

---

* It is, indeed, not a little remarkable, that the ingenuity of several of the early Gentile Fathers, (as Augustine, and Origen in Ex. Hom. 7; Leo, Patres in Synod 6, cap. 8, quoted in White on the Sabbath, p. 210,) was displayed in inventing and maintaining a different reason, equally unauthorized, for the sanctification of Sunday,—a reason the very opposite of that which here we have been called to disprove. They asserted that in the wilderness, Sunday, the first day, was more honored of God, in that He did rain manna UPON IT, while he rained none UPON THE SABBATH, or seventh day! True, indeed, God did rain manna on the first day, but we have to add, what these Fathers seem not to have observed, or what at least they forbore to mention as unsuited to their purpose, that God rained the manna not only on the Sunday, but on all the other days of the week, except the Sabbath. Are then all these six days on which the manna fell, to be sabbatized, in order that a reason may be found why the real Sabbath should be secularized? To what absurdities will Christians have recourse rather than allow themselves to be persuaded of the duty of returning to the observance of the divine command, which has been so long transgressed!

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 30, 1847.

CHARITY FOR PROTESTANTS.

In discussing the subject of the Sabbath, those who maintain the claims of the seventh day are often brought into severe conflict with their Protestant brethren, and compelled to use very plain language in relation to their opinions and practices. For doing so they occasionally subject themselves to friendly admonition as lacking, or seeming to lack, what is usually denominated Christian charity. No doubt there have been instances in which unnecessarily severe language has been used in such discussions as we have referred to. It is our deliberate opinion, however, that if the facts in the case were fully examined, such instances would be found comparatively rare.

When a Sabbath-keeper enters into debate with an enlightened Protestant, the discussion assumes a very different character from what it does between a Sabbath-keeper and a Roman Catholic or a man of the world. In the latter case, there is no common ground upon which they can stand. The man of the world thinks one day of the week answers for a Sabbath as well as another; and as he finds the mass of men observing the first day, he feels perfectly justified in adopting the general practice. The Roman Catholic believes that his church has a perfect right to ordain what day of the week shall be kept as a Sabbath; hence he observes the day which his church observes, without questioning the propriety of doing so. But with Protestants the case is very different. They maintain that the Bible is the only and sufficient rule of faith, and that whatsoever doctrine or practice cannot be drawn therefrom ought not to be enjoined upon any man. Here, then, the intelligent Protestant and the Sabbath-keeper stand upon common ground. The Bible is the creed of both, and both confess that what it enjoins, and that only, is obligatory. Now let them enter upon a discussion of the claims of the seventh day and the first day to be observed as the Sabbath. The Sabbath-keeper asserts, that the seventh day was set apart for the Sabbath in Paradise, reënjoined in the fourth commandment, observed by prophets and apostles, and nowhere in the Bible plainly abrogated. The Protestant confesses the truth of these positions, yet refuses to keep the seventh day, and endeavors to substitute for it the first day, which he now observes. True, he cannot point to a scriptural warrant for refusing to keep the seventh day, nor to a scriptural command to keep the first day. He thinks, however, that there are texts of Scripture from which he may justly INFER that the first day was religiously observed by the apostles. Having taken one inferential step, he thinks he may safely take more; and so, after inferring the religious observance of the first day by the apostles, he next infers that it ought to be religiously observed by all Christians; and then he infers that it ought be observed as the Sabbath; and finally he infers that the seventh day is no longer binding;—all of which inferences, he thinks, are confirmed by the practices and writings of the early Fathers. And this after having confessed that the Bible is the only rule of faith, and that whatsoever it does not contain ought not to be required of any man!

Now we ask, how is it possible to characterize such a course of reasoning, or, rather, such a piece of sophistry, without using severe language? If a man at one moment asserts his belief in the Protestant principle that the Scriptures are a sufficient rule of faith, and in the very next moment attempts to justify his neglect of a day plainly commanded in Scripture on the ground that he infers its abrogation, or that its abrogation is taught by the Fathers—what is this but belieing his own principles? True, it seems like severity to use such language in relation to one of whom we would gladly hope better things. Nevertheless there may be cases, although we think they are few, in which it is necessary thus to "rebuke them sharply." When such cases do occur, and such rebukes are administered, under a conviction that they are both just and needful, we question whether they really imply a want of Christian charity. Although charity suffereth long and is kind, it yet it "rejoiceth in the truth"—a feeling which seems to us inconsistent with applying smooth words to unjustifiable and injurious actions. The man who would help forward any reform, should not regard nor treat the persons to be reformed as enemies. But at the same time he is not at liberty to heal the hurt of the daughter of Zion slightly. And if at any time he should have to choose between probing the wound to the quick or breaking friendships, we should say that to deal faithfully, being a duty to both God and man, deserved the first attention, while the cultivation of friendships was a secondary consideration, which, however desirable, could yet be dispensed with.

◆

Recommendation for a Minister.—The Alabama Baptist publishes a notice of a revival during which Rev. T. G. Freeman did most of the preaching. The account of Mr. Freeman's labors closes thus:—"Without any pretentions to the highest graces of oratory, his delivery is fluent, chaste and pleasing. We have seldom heard a series of fifteen or twenty discourses more instructive, or giving more general satisfaction to an intelligent community. If brother F.'s services should be desired in any of our churches, we may be pardoned for adding that, unless we and all others here are greatly deceived, his lady is a most admirable wife for a pastor—sensible, intelligent and accomplished, and devotedly pious."

◆

PROVISION FOR THE POOR.

We have recently received, and read with deep interest, the Fourth Annual Report of the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. The Association was established for the purpose of elevating the moral and physical condition of the poor, and relieving their necessities so far as compatible with this object. Previous to its organization, there was a vast amount of street-begging in New York, and a proportional amount of indiscriminate alms-giving. But it was found that simply to relieve the wants of the famishing, without making any effort to induce them to provide for themselves in future, was only to do half the work of Christian charity. The most clamorous, though least deserving, were most likely to be provided for, while the more retiring and deserving were left to suffer. Something like a guardianship over the poor, with faithful efforts for their moral and physical improvement, was needed. The Poor Association endeavors to supply this. It first divides the city into eighteen Districts, corresponding to the Wards, over each of which is appointed an Advisory Committee, consisting of five persons, to whose careful supervision and control the diversified labors pertaining to their respective divisions are intrusted. These Districts are then divided into two hundred and ninety-eight Sections, for each of which a Visitor is appointed, whose duty it is to visit those who apply for aid, inquire into their circumstances, give them such advice as may be needed, and also furnish them with orders on grocers for such articles of food as he may judge advisable. Should a poor person apply to a member of the Society for relief, the member has only to inquire his residence, examine a Directory which he carries in his pocket for the name of the Visitor in the District to which the poor person belongs, and give a ticket requesting the Visitor to call and examine into the case. If the applicant is not an impostor, he will take the ticket to the Visitor, whose proximity to his residence enables him, by personal visitation and inquiry, to extend, withhold, or modify relief, on well-defined principles, according to the deserts and necessities of the case. Thus vagrancy is discouraged and imposition prevented.

But the attention of the Association is not confined to simply supplying food for the needy. Stoves are loaned to them in certain cases, and clothing is occasionally distributed. Arrangements are also made for furnishing medical advice to the sick, and tracts are distributed upon the importance of industry and the right management of household affairs. The subject of improving the tenements of the laboring classes has been under consideration for some time past, and such steps have been taken as will, there is reason to hope, result in efficient action at no distant day.

The receipts of the Association for the year closing Nov. 3, 1847, were $24,659 35, and the expenses during the same time $24,040 00.

◆

SPORTS AND SUNDAYS IN NEW ORLEANS.

Our readers have occasionally heard about the cruel sports and desecrated Sundays witnessed in New Orleans. For the sake of giving them a clear and just idea of how things are done there, we publish the following advertisements, sent us by a friend now in New Orleans:

Bull Fight.

ON SUNDAY, Dec. 12th, 1847, on WASHINGTON SQUARE, Third Municipality. The proprietor respectfully begs to inform the public that a splendid BULL FIGHT will take place, as above. Four of the fiercest and largest Attakapas Bulls, will be brought into the Ring, two of which will be slain by the Matadores, and the other two Teased by the Banderilleros and Capeadores.

☞ The Company is composed of the following persons: GREGORIO CAMARENAS, Chief and First Sword; JUAN GONZALES, Picador, (Lancer;) MONDRAGON, CAMERENA, and JACOME, Banderilleros, or Arrow Men; M. ROCHA, P. GOMES and A. BLANCAS, Capeadores, or Teasers.

☞ Admittance to any part of the Ring, is reduced to 50 CENTS. Performance to commence at 4 o'clock, P. M., precisely.

☞ Police Officers will be in attendance to prevent disorder or any thing being thrown in the Circle.

FRANCISCO LOPEZ, Manager.

Louisiana Ball-Room.

CORNER OF ESPLANADE AND VICTORY STREETS.

THE Proprietors of this splendid Ball-Room respectfully inform their friends and the public, that the opening of this establishment for the season will take place on Wednesday, the 10th inst., by a Grand Dress and Masked Ball; after which the arrangement will be—SUNDAY, TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY—White; MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY—Quarteroon Balls.

Nothing has been neglected to make it one of the most brilliant and agreeable resorts of the kind in this city. A superior Orchestra has been engaged for the season. The public may be assured of the most strict order, as there will be in attendance at all times an efficient police. The Restaurant and Bar attached to this establishment, will be furnished at all times with the best the market affords, and the choicest of liquors. Admittance—For Gentlemen, $1; Ladies, gratis. SMITHI SARD, For Proprietors.

Races—Metairie Course.

FALL Meeting, 1847. The Fall Meeting of the METAIRIE JOCKEY CLUB will commence on THURSDAY, December 23, and continue Four Days.

FIRST DAY—Thursday, December 23—Purse $300—two mile heats.

SECOND DAY—Friday, December 24—Purse $500—three mile heats.

THIRD DAY—Saturday, December 25—Purse $800—four mile heats.

LAST DAY—Sunday, December 26—Purse $250—mile heats, best three in five.

☞ Entrance money 10 per cent. added to purses.

☞ From the unusual number of horses now here, amongst which may be named Peytona, Fanny King, Revenue, Orator, Brown Kitty, Bundle and Go, Verifier, Perfection, Buena Vista, Alaire, Sleeping Maggie, &c., &c., a brilliant meeting may be expected.

T. B. POINDEXTER, Proprietor.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

STOP AND THINK.

Youthful reader, hast thou yet paused and thought seriously upon human life and its realities? Hast thou understandingly inquired about, and satisfied thyself of, life's true objects? It were well if every sentient being, in the coolness of reason, and the prudence of wisdom, had thought and reflected upon these subjects. But it is almost inexplicable, certainly astonishing, to observe the number of intelligent beings who get through their probationary existence—and how, they know not—who seem as if they had never thought of life as a "fairy tale," and act as though it was all of life to eat and drink, and to participate in whatever circumstances may present them with. Reader, I appeal to you, and ask if you have given these subjects the attention which their importance demands, and have in your mind a belief concerning them, and a belief which shall furnish you with principles upon which to act in the drama of life, which shall prove more powerful than the force of circumstances. Stop and think. The admonitions, "Man is mortal—Life is uncertain—The old must die, and the young may die," have been so often repeated to thee that thou hearest them as things that must needs be. Hear them once again, and think upon them. And not from hearing these admonitions alone should you learn wisdom; observation and experience may and should teach many sanative lessons. Thou beholdest almost daily the aged of our race taking their exit from earth. But their departure is often viewed as is the falling of the autumn leaf, as the result of efficient natural causes. More than this, thou beholdest the young, who started with thee buoyant on life's journey, who were cheered onward by bright hopes, appearing light in all the vivacity which youthful anticipations tend to inspire, doomed to lie low in the grave. Just as they had stepped upon life's stage, and were engaged in its drama, accident, or potent disease, overpowered the forces of life, and that goodly machine, man's physical constitution, and they are gone. Fellow youth, drink not at the Lethean fount, but stop and think, and see that man lives for high and noble objects, and that these objects are not visible unless efforts are made to view them. See that dependent man, by the purchase of a Saviour's blood, should aspire to dwell in the presence of the great I AM. In view of the evanescent nature of human life and earthly things, sacrifice not upon earthly shrines, for they are not worthy man's affections. Be ye always ready, that when the messenger comes you may go, not reluctantly, but, as Bryant says, go "as one that wraps the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

ALPHA.

◆

A HINT TO TOBACCO-CHEWERS.

At the recent meeting of the Free-Will Baptist Triennial Convention, during the session of their Foreign Mission Society, after several warm and stirring addresses had awakened a deep interest in behalf of the perishing heathen, an animated scene followed in taking up donations and pledges for the Society. A large amount had been pledged, when some one proposed to make Dr. Burns, the delegate from the General Baptists of England, and whose thrilling eloquence had added much to the interest of the occasion, a life-member by one dollar pledges.

Mr. Burns said: "I have seen much to admire and love in America. But I have seen some things that I could not admire. In many things you are in advance of us, and I shall want to learn all I can to carry back with me. And I want America, on the other hand, should conform to all that is good in England. Now I never saw in England, in all my life, a minister that was in the habit of chewing tobacco. Smoking is bad enough; and we have that; but chewing is infinitely worse. Now I will agree to pay into your missionary society a dollar a head to buy up smokers and chewers, to the amount of $10." [Applause.]

D. B. Lewis said: "I have felt convicted in reference to using tobacco a great many times; and I now give it up. But instead of accepting the offer of brother Burns, I think I can afford to pay a dollar towards making him a life-member of this society."

The ten dollars were now made up, and Dr. Burns was declared a life-member of the Free-Will Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

◆

"Pious and Patriotic."—A strange combination of virtues is sometimes developed by the discipline of the camp. Yet it is a rare thing to find the qualities of a good fighter and pious preacher combined in one man. It seems, however, that there is a man connected with our army in Mexico, who can claim excellence in both these respects. Some account of him is given by Kendall, of the New Orleans Picayune, as follows:—

"I can not avoid noticing the personal gallantry of Chaplain McCarty, the only chaplain, I believe, who has followed the army, and whose conduct at Churubusco, in particular, was noticed by all. Ever foremost, and where the balls were flying thickest, he was not only ready to give consolation to the dying, but spur on the living to fresh deeds. He not only sought the best places for crossing the ditches with which the ground was cut up, but helped our advancing soldiers across as well; and as some of the voltiguers were wading a ditch more than waist deep, where their flasks were touching the water, the worthy parson pointed out the circumstance, and told them to be careful and keep their powder dry! Such a chaplain is worth having in a small army like ours. On Sundays he gives us a sound and sensible Episcopalian sermon, and his praise is in every mouth."

An Indian Missionary Murdered.—The Western Christian Journal tells of a barbarous murder which was perpetrated by a party of Indians. A party composed of the Santee and Sioux tribes, passed the head waters of St. Peters, and when they reached the north fork of Platte, they fell upon a Pawnee village, and in the most cruel manner murdered a missionary preacher who was stationed there, and a number of Indians. About the same time, a war party of Ottoes, at Council Bluff, started off and went to Benlock, in the Sioux country, and murdered a dozen Indians of the Sioux tribe. The Ottoes were prompted to this dreadful deed of violence out of revenge for a murder of a like number of their own tribe by the Sioux last spring.

◆

What Temperance Societies have Done.—There are now, says the Albany Spectator, more than 1,500,000 people in the United States who abstain from the use of ardent spirits, and from furnishing it to others; more than 5,000 Temperance Societies, embracing more than 600,000 members. More than 2,000 distilleries have been stopped; more than 5,000 merchants have ceased from the traffic. It is estimated that 30,000 persons are now sober, who had it not been for Temperance Societies, would have been sots; and that at least 20,000 families are now in ease and comfort, who would otherwise have been in poverty and disgraced by drunken inmates.

◆

Free Synod of Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Herald contains an account of the proceedings of a Presbyterian Synod, who exclude from membership slaveholders and their advocates, are opposed to affiliated secret societies, whether for temperance or otherwise, but most friendly to temperance associations. Offensive war they consider as opposed to christianity, and their second resolution reads thus:

"That we consider the war now waged by our Government against Mexico as clearly aggressive in its character, and avowedly originated and is prosecuted by the slave power for the purpose of securing a portion of her territory in order to extend and perpetuate the curse of slavery and the domestic slave trade."

◆

The Largest Church in the United States.—The first African Church, (Baptist,) Richmond, is the largest body of communicants, in connection with a single congregation, in the Union, being two thousand four hundred and seventy. The other churches of the same denomination in that city, report in addition two hundred and sixty-eight colored members. Total number, 2,728.

◆

Baptist Statistics.—There are 564 Baptist ministerial associations in the United States, 9,888 churches, 5,657 ordained ministers, 1,199 licentiates, 731,966 church members. Number of baptisms in one year 36,509. In the entire world, there is said to be 13,804 Baptist churches; 8,469 ordained ministers; and 1,031,836 church members; and the number of baptisms in one year is set down at 57,605.

◆

A Synod of Reformers.—The Louisville Presbyterian Herald says that on the 4th of November, the Presbytery of Ripley, the Free Presbytery of Hillisborough, and the Free Presbytery of Mahoning, united in constituting the "Free Synod of Cincinnati," in the town of Ripley, Ohio. There were twenty-two members present, and one absent; viz: eleven Ministers and eleven Elders. The Synod addressed a Pastoral Letter to the churches under its care, and also an address to the public, setting forth reasons for its organization, and also bearing testimony against slavery, the Mexican war, secret societies, &c. They say that they are much encouraged by the prospect of speedy and substantial accessions to their number; and firmly believe that, at no distant day, the "Free Synod of Cincinnati" will stand high among the Synods of the West, in point of numbers, talents, and moral worth. They adopted the Westminster Confession of Faith, and invited all who agree with them to unite with them, with the following provision: "No person holding slaves, or advocating the rightfulness of slave-holding, can be a member of this body. No Church, Presbytery, or Synod, tolerating slave-holding in its communion, can be a constituent part of this body."

◆

The Gospel among the Indians.—At a meeting of the Indian Mission Society, according to a correspondent of the Christian Messenger, the following statement was made of events which transpired at an Indian mission station:—

"About four years since an old negro man from one of the Southern States came there. He could not read, yet he conversed on religious subjects; the Indians listened to him, and Mr. Islands, among others, was convicted. He saw himself a sinner—he prayed; soon he rejoiced in the pardon of his sins. Then he could not refrain from talking to his countrymen. They met the old negro—talked, and prayed; Mr. Islands also would talk. About this time Rev. S. Dyer, a Baptist Missionary, came among them, was convinced they were Christians, heard their Christian experience, and baptized twenty of them. A church was formed; Mr. Islands was licensed to preach. Mr. Dyer returned soon and baptized 40 more. The chiefs opposed their meeting, and determined to punish those that met; but those who came to report the Christians at the meeting remained to be prayed for. Oh how powerful is the gospel, to change the savage into a lamb! In 1847 Mr. Islands was ordained. Now their church numbers 160. He too has worn himself down, his constitution is impaired, and he asked for help, and the Board at their last meeting concluded to send him help."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Congress was in session only three days last week, having adjourned over from Wednesday to Monday. There will not probably be much done until the holidays are past. After that, the various plans for continuing or terminating the war, of which some half-a-dozen have been presented, will no doubt be taken up. The following summary embraces the principal things done.

In the Senate—A bill has been introduced to establish a Territorial Government in Oregon. Any number of petitions have been presented in relation to providing for the widows and orphans of officers and men killed in the Mexican war. The resolutions from the Legislatures of New Hampshire and Connecticut, adverse to slavery and its extension by the acquisition of territory, have been presented. Mr. Calhoun's resolutions in relation to the war were called up, and, after some debate, laid over until Tuesday, January 4. Mr. Hale presented two anti-slavery petitions, and made strenuous efforts to induce the Senate to depart from its settled practice of not receiving petitions of that import. The question of non-reception being put, Mr. Berrian moved to lay that question on the table, which was decided in the affirmative.

In the House of Representatives—A resolution has been introduced, inquiring into the expediency of substituting American for foreign coin. A joint resolution has been introduced, which lies over, declaring the expediency of opening diplomatic relations with the Papal States, and requesting the President to transmit a copy of the resolution to Pope Pious IX. A resolution has also been offered, inquiring as to the expediency of authorizing postmasters to receive subscriptions and transmit moneys for newspapers free of postage.

◆

A JEW'S OPINION OF THE SAVIOUR.

Mr. Noah, of New York, himself a Jew by profession, has expressed the following opinion of Jesus, the true Messiah, which will be new to many of our readers, and contains some sentiments not unworthy of an avowed professor of the Christian religion:—

"It has been said, and with some commendations of what was called my liberality, that I did not in this discourse term Jesus of Nazareth an imposter. I have never considered him as such. The imposter generally aims at a temporal power,—attempts to subsidize the rich and weak believer, and draw around him followers of influence, whom he can control. Jesus was free from fanaticism; his was a quiet, subdued, retiring faith; he mingled with the poor, communed with the wretched, avoided the rich, and rebuked the vain-glorious. In the calm of evening he sought shelter in the secluded groves of Olivet, or wandered pensively on the shores of Galilee. He sincerely believed in his mission. He courted no one, flattered no one; in his political denunciations he was pointed and severe—in his religion calm and subdued. These are not characteristics of an imposter; but, admitting that we give a different interpretation to his mission, when one hundred and fifty millions believe in his divinity, and we see around us abundant evidences of the happiness, good faith, mild government and liberal feelings which sprang from his religion, what right has any one to call him an imposter? That religion which is calculated to make mankind great and happy, cannot be a false one."

◆

A Man's Title-Deeds to Himself.—An English publication, entitled "Monthly Illustrations of American Slavery," with a view to show how they manage things in the model Republic, prints the Deed of Manumission by which Frederick Douglass, once a chattel, was put in possession of himself. Our readers will no doubt be interested in perusing it. In order that it may be understood, it is only necessary to say, that the "divers good causes and considerations" alluded to as moving his former master to manumit him, were the receipt of seven hundred and eleven dollars and ninety-six cents, from the agent of Douglass' friends, in England, who saw fit to contribute that sum for the object. Here is the Deed:—

"To all whom it may concern: Be it known, that I, Hugh Auld, of the city of Baltimore, in Baltimore county, in the State of Maryland, for divers good causes and considerations, me thereunto moving, have released from Slavery, liberated, manumitted, and set free, and by these presents do hereby release from Slavery, liberate, manumit, and set free, MY NEGRO MAN, named FREDERICK BAILY, otherwise called FREDERICK DOUGLASS, being of the age of twenty-eight years, or thereabouts, and able to work and gain a sufficient livelihood and maintenance; and him, the said negro man, named FREDERICK BAILY, otherwise called FREDERICK DOUGLASS, I do declare to be henceforth free, manumitted, and discharged from all manner of servitude to me, my executors or administrators forever.

"In witness thereof, I, the said Hugh Auld, have hereunto set my hand and seal, the fifth of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and forty-six. HUGH AULD."

◆

The Wife.—It is astonishing to see how well a man may live on a small income, who has a handy and industrious wife. Some men live and make a far better appearance on six or eight dollars a week than others do on fifteen or eighteen dollars. The man does his part well; but the wife is good for nothing. She will even upbraid her husband for not living in as good style as her neighbor; while the fault is entirely her own. His neighbor has a neat, capable, and industrious wife, and that makes the difference. His wife, on the other hand, is a whirlpool into which a great many silver cups might be thrown, and the appearance of the waters remain unchanged. No Nicholas, the driver, is there to restore the wasted treasure. It is only an insult for such a woman to talk to her husband about her love and devotion.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Hibernia arrived at Boston on Saturday morning last, with foreign dates to Dec. 4. She brings intelligence of several heavy failures, and the continued depression of the money market. Flour has receded from 10 to 20 cents per barrel since the previous steamer, and corn meal has suffered equally. Cotton has also declined.

The British Parliament was opened on the 23d of Nov., when the Queen's Speech was read. The subject of trade and the financial condition of the country, was under discussion up to the time of the steamer's departure.

The civil war in Switzerland has been virtually terminated, when scarcely commenced, by the complete prostration of the Catholic or Conservative party.

The affairs of Italy are in a fair way for adjustment. The Pope has opened the new Council of State at the Vatican, and his speech elicited unmixed approbation.

Wretched Ireland seems as hopelessly wretched as ever—a land given over to famine, despair, and the horrible vengence of the desperate. The Clare Journal gives the following affecting details, which may be taken as a specimen: "There are 700 paupers in the Scariff workhouse, and hundreds daily—nay, hourly, seeking admission; with their countenances emaciated and fully depicted with the destitution that is hourly augmenting in that locality. Parents are deserting their children there and leaving. One child was brought into the workhouse, four years of age, and could not tell its name. Last week, three or four hundred persons, men, women, and children, from the parish of Killard, entered an extensive turnip field belonging to Mr. James Shannon, of Craganock, and tore away and eat on the spot the greater part of the turnips growing thereon, to stay for the moment the cravings of hunger."

A great storm ravaged the coast of Mayo, Ireland, on the 8th ult., when over thirty poor creatures lost their lives. Nine persons, natives of Innisturk, were drowned in an endeavor to reach home with some provisions for their starving children. Nineteen fishermen were drowned in the Sound of Achill, and five others off Achill Head the same day.

The Auckland, steamer, has been on a visit to the Laccadive Islands, and supplying the islanders, whose land has been entirely washed over by the sea during the hurricane of the 18th of April; no fewer than 1,800 are said to have perished—the survivors had been left famishing and destitute from April to September.

The Manchester Examiner, and other British papers, anticipate another visit of the Asiatic cholera, and advise that attention be paid to cleanliness and ventilation, as the best means to lessen its dreadful attacks. Of 100,000 attacked in Russia, less than 20,000 died.

The Premier of England, in the Commons, has announced his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill to remove the civil disabilities affecting the members of the Jewish persuasion.

The University of Oxford was to have met on the 14th inst. to petition Parliament not to admit Baron Rothschild, or any other Jew, to a seat in Parliament.

A preacher, under the name of Rev. Mr. Bertram, has been apprehended in Edinburg as a deserter from the 71st regiment. He was a very agreeable speaker.

A party of gentlemen, on Nov. 20, started from Paris and reached London in 12 hours 50 minutes.

Eight lobster fishers were drowned off Caithness on the 22d of November, leaving six widows.

The Asiatic cholera is stated to have advanced to the Prussian frontier.

Hon. Joseph Cunard, of Miramichi, the celebrated royal mail contractor, has been compelled to yield to the pressure of the times, he having stopped payment.

LATE FROM CAMPEACHY.—By the arrival of the Yucatan schr. Rafæle, we have intelligence from that section of the Mexican territory up to the 29th ult.

A battle had been fought on the 16th of Nov., between Col. Zetina's revolutionary forces, 1,800 strong, and Rozado's, 1,000 strong; in which the latter gained a complete victory, and took four pieces of artillery from the former.

Zetina made the attack on the City of Valladolid, and the action lasted three hours. He lost 70 men killed, among whom were three officers. He and his defeated troops retreated in disorder, and took the road to Espita and Tizimin.

The Governor of Yucatan (Mendez) was, on the 29th, on his way to Maxcanu, in company with Barbachano (the person whom the insurgents wanted for their Governor,) to check the revolution of the Indians against the whites. This revolution having a more alarming aspect since the pronunciamento of Zetina, as the whites are fighting among themselves.

These Indians, numbering upward of 5,000, under the command of a renowned chief by the name of Pratt, made an attack on the 27th ult., on the town of Tijosuco, whose inhabitants united with those of the neighborhood, made a stand against the Indians, and fired upon them during 26 hours; after which time, having no ammunition, they were compelled to retreat, with their women and children, and took a position on the road to Tecas. The population of Tijosuco amounts to about 6,000, and that town was entirely left in the possession of the Indians.

Since this successful affair for the Indians, eight towns have united to them, raising their number, it is said, to 15,000

THE ARREST OF GENS. PILLOW AND WORTH.—A correspondent of the New-Orleans Delta, writing from Vera Cruz, gives the following account of the difficulties between Gens. Worth, Pillow and Scott:

A lamentable feeling pervades the army at Mexico, owing to jealousies and heart-burnings, envy and malice, and political prejudices. Gen. Scott has arrested Pillow and Worth. The circumstances which led to this step are believed to be these: Two letters, emanating from the American camp, published in the United States, have been read by Gen. Scott. In an order published to the army he prematurely decides who wrote them, and most bunglingly impeached the honor, patrotism and services of the two Generals, who are eulogized in those letters. One of the Generals (Pillow) denies, in a card published in Mexico, the authorship of the letter attributed to his pen by Gen. Scott. The other General (Worth) prefers charges against Scott, and Scott arrests him for contempt. Gen. Pillow was arrested because he appealed from an opinion of Scott, requesting the latter to transmit the appeal to the Secretary of War. Scott refused in a hasty manner; whereupon the former remarked, "I will do it, sir." "Then I arrest you, sir," was Scott's reply. So matters stand at the last dates.

LIFE IN MEXICO.—A letter from a young soldier, in the Philadelphia Inquirer, dated at Perote, last month, thus notices the comforts of privates in the army:

"Oh, the misery of this Hospital life, who would believe it! Bad treatment from officers and Doctors! Falling into the hands of the Mexicans would be little worse. I am sick of it. I have lost all energy, all ambition—many, very many have died here, to be buried in the sand like so many dogs—taken out, piled in a cart, a dozen at a time, some with nothing but a shirt on, and some sewed up in blankets, if they are fortunate enough to have one left unstolen when dying, pitched into a hole just deep enough to let the Mexican dogs and hogs root them out for food! A coffin only for officers! The climate is very trying. What do you think of snow in July, and the next day so hot you could scarcely stand it! We have the lofty peaks of three snow mountains in view, and are 1,900 feet above the level of the sea."

SUMMARY.

A dispatch to the N. Y. Tribune says that a serious affray occurred at New Haven, on the evening of Dec. 23d, between two tutors of Yale College, named Emerson and Goodrich, and a couple of students named Towar and Ewen, which it is feared will prove fatal to one of the parties. During the fray one of the tutors was stabbed with a sword cane and the other was knocked down with a bar of iron. It is feared the latter will not survive his injury. Goodrich is a son of Prof. Goodrich of Yale College. Towar is from Philadelphia, and Ewen is from Tennessee. The students have been held to bail in the sum of $4,000 each.

A slip from the office of the Norfolk Herald, dated Dec. 23, 1 P. M., contains the following extract of a letter from Major Hunter, one of the Commissioners of wrecks in Princess Anne, to a house in Norfolk: "I am sorry to have to inform you, that the new schr Sea Witch, of New-York, came ashore on the beach six miles south of Cape Henry, in the snow storm of Thursday, and all on board have perished. Both masts are gone, or at least are floating alongside. We have had her boarded this morning, and it is thought she was in ballast. Three men have been found along shore."

A letter to the Tribune, dated Philadelphia, Dec. 22, says: An elephant at the Zoological Institute in this city this afternoon became greatly enraged, when he attacked and nearly killed his keeper, named William Kelly. He next broke open several of the cages containing wild beasts, and set them at liberty. He then proceeded to kill several monkeys, whom he dispatched in a hurry. There was great excitement and alarm among the people. After considerable trouble he was finally mastered and secured.

A dispatch to the Tribune, dated Boston, Dec. 20, says that the brig Falconer, of Belfast, Capt. R. Sidney, master, bound for Boston, was wrecked on Ipswich beach, two miles from the light-house, in the gale on Friday night last. Of about 50 persons on board, the Captain, his wife, 2 children, 15 passengers, and some of the crew, perished before assistance could be rendered. Eighteen of the bodies were picked up on Saturday and carried to the town of Ipswich.

The papers from the West contain full accounts of the great flood in the Ohio and its tributaries. Many lives were lost, and a vast amount of property destroyed. Two or three large pork houses at Maysville, Ky., have been washed away by the flood, by which very heavy losses have been sustained. A large brick house occupied by a company of Socialists (very new lights—some call them Somnambulists) on the Ohio River in Claremont Co., fell down, crushing seventeen persons to death, and severely wounding several others. Water to the depth of 10 feet surrounded the building.

The Newburyport Herald says that in the midst of the great ledge on the Northern (New Hampshire) Railway, which is chiseled 30 or 40 feet deep out of solid rock, for more than a quarter of a mile, a body of peat is found, so wet and spongy that it was found necessary to dyke it with large timbers to keep it from the track. How this dripping peat muck found its way to this summit—the highest between the Merrimack and the Connecticut—is a marvel. But here it is, and as full of water as any muck on our low meadows.

Dr. Lee, of Hartford, Conn., who has practiced extensively at the South, states that he has treated five cases of rattlesnake bite, and all them successfully. His remedy is alcoholic liquor—either rum, brandy or gin—given in large doses. A half pint in every fifteen minutes, making a quart in an hour, is not too much, to be given as soon as possible after the bite. This remedy has been used at the South to a great extent, and has never been known to fail of a cure. The liquor absorbs or deadens the fatal virus, and never intoxicates the subject so long as the virus of the reptile is in the system.

The tolls on the Welland Canal have netted $120,000 this year—a great increase. Many new vessels have been added to the lake trade, of 200 to 400 tons burden. The canal was free of ice on the 10th inst. Now that the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals are in a fit state to pass vessels of 400 tons from Lakes Michigan, Huron, Erie, or Superior, to the ocean, the trade will increase greatly.

At the City Hall, in New York, says the editor of the Courier, we met a soldier who served as a private in the battles before the Capital. At Churubusco, while crossing the corn-field, and within ten or fifteen rods of the enemy, just as he was biting the end from a cartridge to load his musket, a ball struck his temple, passed behind one eye, under the bridge of his nose, behind the other eye, and out at the other temple! Being exposed to a cross fire from our troops, he thinks the ball came from them. It did not knock him down, nor has he suffered any other result from it than the loss of sight, which is almost total. He can distinguish light from darkness, but nothing more. His eyeballs have fallen in, and the lids are closed; but his general health has not suffered at all.

A letter dated Washington, Dec. 25, says:—The sudden decease of Senator Fairfield, of Maine, has thrown a deep gloom over the city. By the event, the insecure grasp by which we hold on to life is made more manifest to every one—the abrupt termination of his career shows the common, urgent danger of all mankind. He died—as I learn—from the effects of a surgical operation. His affection was dropsy in the knee. This caused him pain, and qualified his usefulness. In the double hope of giving more comfort to himself, and more time to the Republic, he submitted to an experiment which has proved fatal.

The N. O. Picayune of Dec. 14 says that the Arco Iris of the 7th records a tragic affair which took place in the village of Medelin on the evening of the 4th inst. A detachment of American soldiers was quartered there for the night. About 11 o'clock some of them started for a ball in the village, but with perfectly peaceable intentions. Some of the party at the ball took alarm, however, and one of them, a black fellow, and a guerrillero, went to the door and discharged a pistol at the advancing Americans. The Americans immediately returned the fire, killing six persons and wounding ten, one of whom died shortly afterward. One of the wounded was a woman.

A correspondent at Angelica, Allegany Co., writes as follows, on the 20th inst.: "A horrible accident happened in this town on Sunday, the 19th inst. A team with four persons was crossing the Genesee River, near the residence of P. Church, Esq. The bridge fell, precipitating two young ladies, Miss Smith and Miss E. King, into the river, who were instantly drowned. The body of Miss King has been recovered; that of Miss Smith has not. About eleven rods of the bridge fell at a hight of about twenty feet. The horses, owned by Mr. Burrell, of Philipsburgh, were both drowned. Miss Burrell and Mr. Mathews escaped unhurt."

A daughter of Gov. Morton, (as we learn by the Springfield Republican,) who was visiting at the house of W. Thompson, Esq., of that village, was awakened by a strange man, who entered her bedroom at 2 o'clock last Friday morning, thoroughly searched the drawers, closet, &c., taking out such articles as he chose. Miss Morton at length asked him what he wanted, when he threateningly shook what glittered like a knife at her. She instantly called loudly on Mr. Thompson for help, and the thief fled.

It is said that Hon. J. R. Poinsett, formerly Secretary of War, and afterward Minister to Mexico, has recently written to Washington that the attempt to sustain our army by contributions derived from the external or internal commerce of Mexico, will prove ridiculous and futile. Mr. Poinsett has resided a long time in Mexico, and understands thoroughly the character of her people.

New Orleans and Philadelphia, as legatees of Stephen Girard, claimed 200,000 acres of land, situated in Louisiana—part of the Ouchita region, given to Count Bastrof in '96. A jury at New Orleans, in the U. S. Court, have declared the claim valid, and the decision affects the titles of many persons in New Orleans favorably.

Mr. S. B. Horton, of Nantick, was killed on the Worcester Railroad in that town on Saturday. He was thirty years old, and leaves a wife and two children. He was standing on one track, looking at the freight train, and knocked down by the train from this city. A man was also killed on the Old Colony Railroad at Middleboro'.

A bill is before the Ohio Legislature "to secure to every family a Homestead exempt from execution," and it provides that the articles of furniture, &c., at present exempted, as also a home owned by any person having a family, and not worth over $500, shall be exempt from seizure or sale for debt.

The Standard, at Salem, N. J., states that a noble bald eagle, measuring six feet five inches from tip to tip, and with beak, talons, etc. proportionably large, was shot by Mr. David Bassett, in Mannington Meadows, a few days since.

Vermont has decreed, that if any peddler carry and offer for sale any plated or gilded ware, jewelry, watches, or any patent medicine, the composition of which is kept secret from the public, he must pay $60 for a yearly license.

The editor of the New York Tribune heard, on Thanksgiving day, a preacher who said, "Some think that this matter of the war ought not to be touched in the pulpit. I do not agree with them. I think that the question of wars and fighting was a question of Chistian morality some time previous to its becoming a question of American politics. My right to it is prior to that of the politician, and I shall not waive my right."

It was a saying among the ancients, says R. Boyle, that even Jupiter could not please all. But we find now that the true God himself is not free from the imputation of his audacious creatures, who impiously presume to quarrel with his revelations as well as his providence, and express no more reverence to what he hath dictated than to what he doth.

The Emancipator says that in two only of the slave states are the slaves numerically equal to the whites. These are South Carolina and Mississippi. In the former the slaves are 145 to every 100 whites—in the latter 109 to 100. In Florida the slaves are eight per cent. less than the whites, and in Missouri, eighty-two per cent. less. Leaving Delaware out of view, and the Southern States that have the smallest per centage of slaves, are Kentucky, Tennesee, Maryland, Arkansas, and Missouri.

Theron Rudd, of the State of New York, died at St. Louis on the 2d inst., at the advanced age of 80 years. He leaves a widow and a daughter in a strange city to mourn his loss. The Organ says that the great benefit derived to the community from the publication of the money market, is attributable to this gentleman, who was the first to originate it.

The New York Tribune says that Gen. Taylor was detained in New Orleans until Sunday morning, when he left in the steamer Missouri, en route to his plantation at Baton Rouge. He would pass a few days in quiet with his family, and then visit his country seat in Mississippi, so that if needed in Mexico he can return immediately.

We think it was 58,000 persons (besides the slaves) who were reported in the census of 1840, as being unable to read or write, though over 20 years of age, in North Carolina. That State expended on the education of all classes last year, $105,978. Too little by far!

The Jefferson Inquirer states that Rev. Mr. Boone, of the Metropolitan, is not only Clerk of the Supreme Court, with numerous fees, and State Printer, with many jobs, but that he is Chaplain of the Missouri Penitentiary, and as such receives $150 per annum for his religious services.

The Halifax Courier says, that Abraham Tagg, the unhappy young soldier who was tried last week for a violent assault on the woman he loved, has breathed his last. After being conveyed to the Hospital, he tore open the yet unhealed wound in his neck.

It is stated in an English paper, that a jealous wife recently tied her husband in bed while he slept, and then poured boiling water over him. When arraigned for trial, which resulted in transportation for life, she boldly confessed the crime.

Dr. John Sappington, of Saline, (Mo.) proposes to give $10,000 towards establishing a Manual Labor School, whenever $28,000 more shall have been raised by subscription for the same purpose.

A horse is on exhibition at Cincinnati, whose body is covered with a thick coat of fine wool, in the place of hair. His color is between that of a mouse and dun color. He was brought from the Rocky Mountains.

An Anti-Chewing-Tobacco-Society was recently organized at Union Hall, Boston. Among those who signed the pledge were several hard chewers.

In the columns of the Barre Patriot, says the Pathfinder, W. A. Bryant, the Secretary, calls upon the members of 'The Barre Thorough Going Thief and Rogue Detecting Society,' to meet for transaction of business.

During the year ending 1st Nov. last, fifty-six steamboats were built in Pittsburg, their aggregate tonnage being 9,554. Tonnage owned in Pittsburg 1st Sept. last, 27,018, viz: Steam 24,472 tons; other kinds, 2,546.

'There are two things,' says a noble historian, 'which are generally popular in their beginning; the first is war, and the second peace.'

Population of Chicago, by the census just taken, 16,841. Of Norfolk, Va., 15,000, an increase of 4,000 within seven years.

The Rev. Dr. Chapin, of Rocky Hill, has resigned his pastoral relation with the Congregational Church in that town. Dr. C. has officiated as pastor of that church fifty-four years.

The Ellicottville (N. J.) Whig says that as Rev. S. Cowley of that village was writing in his study last week, a rifle ball grazed his head, which was fired from a rifle by a young man of that village who was shooting some fowl.

The New Haven Palladium says that the very rare phenomenon of a rainbow in the north at noonday was seen there on Thursday last, with unusual distinctness. The prismatic colors were well exhibited, and the circle was unbroken.

It is said that $200,000 have been expended "by an old and respectable citizen" of Cincinnati in the purchase of marble in Italy for the entire front of a house he is erecting in that city.

The ex-editor of the Madisonian has started a little paper in Philadelphia, called "The Compact," in aid of Slavery.

Commander Wilkes, U. S. N., states that the depth of the ocean has never been ascertained. Capt. Ross, at 37,000 feet, found no bottom.

The editor of the Lebanon Courier says that Thomas M. Myers, who recently married a Mexican Senorita worth $300,000, is a printer, and a graduate of the Record office at West Chester, Pa.

Of U. S. soldiers, 503 have died in the general hospital, Perote Castle—nearly all of them victims to the climate.

Eggs wholly embedded in salt, the small end downwards, will keep from one to three years perfectly fresh.

Queen Victoria has consigned to the British Museum a tortoise-shell bonnet, sent to her from the Navigator's Islands.

LETTERS.

Wm. M. Fahnestock, Geo. H. Perry, S. P. Stillman, Jos. L. Bliven, Geo. Crandall, Wm. T. Morgan, Albert Utter, Ephraim Maxson (please send us the law.)

RECEIPTS.

G. G. Crandall,	Westerly, R.I.	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Bathsheba Lanphear,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Joseph H. Potter,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Luke Crandall,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Martha Burdick,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
John T. Thurston,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Amos Stillman,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Sam'l Merritt,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Weeden Clarke,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Daniel Saunders,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Joseph Chapman,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Peleg Babcock,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Geo. A. Babcock,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Franklin Barber,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
W. B. Babcock,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
C. C. Stillman,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
John Hiscox,	"	2 00	"	5	" 13
Joseph L. Bliven,	"	4 00	"	4	" 52
John Clarke,	Petersburg,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Aaron Coon,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Sophrona Fisher,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Thos. A Kenyon,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
N. Burch,	West Edmeston,	2 00	"	4	" 52
Kenyon Crandall,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
S. B. Crandall,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Abram Coon,	"	1 00	"	2	" 52
Benj. F. Burdick,	Brookfield,	2 00	"	4	" 52

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.
CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.
26tf. E. H. WILCOX, PROPRIETOR.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

☞ Since the first publication of the above notice, it has been found necessary to increase the price of books in morocco. Persons ordering them in future, will please note the fact, and act accordingly.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!
CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.
Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing Wednesday, Aug. 25,	and ending Dec. 1
Second	" " Dec. 15,	" March 22
Third	" " April 5,	" July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!
Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.
CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. To be issued semi-monthly, in 16 numbers, at 25 cents each, double column letter-press; with upwards of THREE HUNDRED ELEGANT ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

The publication of the American edition, commencing with December, will be continued, two numbers each month, until the whole work is completed. Persons remitting Four Dollars, can receive the whole work promptly by mail, or otherwise, as soon as published. Booksellers and Agents supplied on the most liberal terms.

☞ The publishers of any respectable paper or periodical, who will give this notice THREE INSERTIONS and send us the papers containing it, shall be entitled to the work complete. The numbers will be forwarded per mail, unless otherwise directed, as they are issued from the press.
GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem —David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

GIE ME THY BLESSING, MITHER.

BY GRETA.

"Gie me thy blessing, mither,
For I must now away,
To meet my bonnie Agnes, mither,
Upon her bridal day.
I've luved her lang and weel, mither,
And thou my luve hast known;
Then lay thy hand upon me, mither,
And bless thy kneeling son."

"Ah! Willie, how my heart o'erflows
When thus I hear thee speak;
My tears are glistening on thy hair,
And dropping on thy cheek.
And oh! how memory calls up now
The days of auld lang syne,
When I, a winsome bride, first called
Thy sainted father mine.

"Ye look sae like him, Willie dear,
Ye look sae like him now;
Ye hae the same dark, tender een,
The same broad, noble brow.
And sic a smile was on his face
When he that morning came,
To bring awa, as ye maun do,
A lassie to his hame.

"Puir child, her heart is beating now,
As it never beat before;
Puir child, I ken her hazel een
Wi' tears are running o'er.
She luves thee, Willie; but she feels
To wed's a solemn thing—
I weel remember how I felt,
When looking on the ring.

"I weel remember, too, the hour
When, wi' a heavy sigh,
I turned, a wife sae young and sad,
To bid them a' good bye.
The tears were gushing then, I know,
For I luved my kindred weel,
And though my ain was by my side,
I could na' help but feel.

"But then, how kind he took my hand,
And gently whispered—'Come,
The same soft star shines o'er my cot
That shines above thy home.'
And, Willie, aften, since he's dead,
I've watched that distant star,
And thought I saw his gentle face
Smile in it from afar.

"We luved ilk ither weel, Willie,
We luved ilk ither lang;
Ah me! how happy was the heart
That thrilled the even sang.
We luved ilk ither, Willie, right;
And may God grant it so
That ye maun luve as we twa luved,
In days lang, lang ago.

"Oh! fondly cherish her, Willie,
She is sae young and fair;
She has not known a single cloud,
Or felt a single care.
Then, if a cauld world's storm should come,
Thy way to overcast—
Oh! ever stand (thou art a man)
Between her and the blast.

"When first I knew a mither's pride,
'Twas when I gazed on thee;
And when my ither flowers died,
Thy smile was left to me.
And I can scarce believe it true,
So late thy life began,
The playful bairn I fondled then
Stands by me now a Man.

"Then tell thy bonnie bride, Willie,
She has my first-born son;
I tak' the darling from my arms,
And gie him to her own.
Oh! she will cherish thee, Willie;
For when I maun depart,
She, only she, will then be left
To fill thy lonely heart.

"I dinna fear to die, Willie—
I ever wished to gang;
The soft green mound in yon kirk-yard
Has lanely been too lang.
And I would lay me there, Willie,
And a' Death's terrors brave,
Beside the heart sae lael and true,
If 'tis within the grave.

"Then gang awa', my blessed bairn,
And bring thy gentle dove,
And dinna frown if a' should greet
To part wi' her they luve,
But if a tear fills up her ee,
Then whisper, as they part,
'There's room for thee at mither's hearth—
There's room in mither's Heart.'

"And may the God that reigns above,
And sees ye a' the while,
Look down upon your plighted troth,
And bless ye wi' His smile.
And may'st thou ne'er forget, Willie,
In a' thy future life,
To serve the Power that gave to thee
Thy kind and guileless Wife."

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF DISTINGUISHED MEN.

Samuel Adams was of common size, of muscular form, light blue eyes, light complexion, and erect in person. He wore a tie wig, cocked hat, and red cloak. His manner was very serious. At the close of his life, and probably from early times, he had a tremulous motion of the head, which probably added to the solemnity of his eloquence, and this was in some measure associated with his voice. He was one of the most ardent of the patriots before and during the Revolution. He was Governor of Massachusetts from 1794 to 1797, and died in 1803, at the age of 81.

Fisher Ames was above middle stature, and well formed. His features were not strongly marked. His forehead was neither high nor expansive. His eyes blue, and of middling size; his mouth handsome; his hair black and short on the forehead, and in his latter years unpowdered. He was very erect, and when speaking he raised his head, or rather his chin, which was the most prominent part of his face. His air, manner and countenance, were those of an honest and sincere man. He died at Dedham, July 4, 1808, at the age of 50.

James Bowdoin was tall and dignified in appearance. His usual dress, as Governor, was a gray wig, cocked hat, white broadcloth coat and waistcoat, red small clothes, and black silk stockings. His face was without color, his features small for his size, his air and manner quietly grave. He was Governor in 1785 and '6, during the period of Shay's rebellion, and died in 1790, at the age of 63.

John Brooks was of middle stature, well formed, and of soldierly dignity of manner. He was Governor from 1816 to 1823, and died in 1825, at the age of 73.

George Cabot was a tall man, well formed, of courteous and elegant manners, and refined aspect; his complexion light, his eyes blue. He was born in Salem in 1752, was several years Senator in Congress, President of the Hartford Convention, and died in 1823, aged 71.

Samuel Dexter was nearly six feet in stature, of well proportioned, muscular frame. His hair was black, loose, unpowdered, and worn rather long; it came lightly over his high, expansive forehead. His face was long, his complexion dark, his eyes large and light blue. He was Secretary of War and of the Treasury under John Adams, and served in both Houses of Congress, and died in 1816, aged 55.

Christopher Gore was rather tall, and in middle age of full person and erect, but began to bend forward at an earlier age than common. He was bald on the whole upper surface of the head, at an unusually early period. His hair was tied behind and dressed with powder. His face was round and florid, his eyes black, his manners courteous and amiable. He was Governor in 1809, and Senator in Congress for three years from 1814. He died in 1827, aged 69.

CURIOSITIES OF ART.

It is singular how many men have directed their energies of mind to perfecting toys, which, although displaying wonderful inventive powers, yet have never conferred any benefit on mankind, nor ever been even used for any other purpose than as a piece of amusement—the childish exhibition of masculine mind, the fame of foolery, the foolery of fame.

Thus, Jerome Faba, an Italian priest, and a native of Calabria, exercised himself in a species of industry, wonderful from its difficulty. He finished a work of box-wood, which represented all the mysteries of the Passion, and which might be put into the shell of a walnut. To him was attributed a coach the size of a grain of wheat, within which there were to be seen a man and a woman, a coachman who drove it, and horses that drew it. These were presented to Francis I. and Charles V.

In China, the tomb of Confucius has been made in small miniature, no larger than a nut, but wonderfully composed of precious metals, and adorned with a profusion of gems, but its value consists of the labor expended on its execution. Its landscapes, dragons, angels, animals, and human figures, would require several pages of description, which would, after all, without a view of the model, prove tedious and unintelligible.

Charles V., of Spain, had a watch which was confined in the jewel of his ring, and a watchmaker in London presented George III. with one set in the same manner. Its size was something less than a silver two-pence, and it contained one hundred and twenty-five different parts, and weighed altogether no more than five pennyweights and seven grains.

The tomb of Raphael, executed by an Italian named Raccavalva, is indeed a wonder. It is only twelve inches in height, and from an inch to four inches in diameter. It is adorned with various architectural ornaments in the richest style of Gothic, and also figures of the Virgin and child. The work is said to be of unrivaled merit and beauty. The model is contained in a case of wrought gold, and is itself of box-wood. The general design may be regarded as architectural, embellished with several compartments of sculpture or of carving, consisting of various groups of figures. These display different events in the life of Christ. Some of the figures are less than a quarter of an inch in height, but though thus minute, are all finished with the greatest precision and skill; and what renders this execution still more curious and admirable is, the delicacy and beauty with which the back and distant figures are executed. [Sc. Am.

LEARNING TO BACK.

If you would have your cattle learn this art, put them to an empty cart and let them back it down hill. Never pound their noses, for this gives them pain and wens, and makes them hold their heads down to avoid your blows. In such a position of the head the ox has no power over the yoke, for his throat is brought to bear on the lower part of the bow, and he can not do much if he would.

By all means keep his head up, and then the yoke itself will bear against the upper side of the neck—the tough side—and against the horns. If you use a stick or whip, touch the fore legs with it; keep your stick under, and your steers will not put their heads down to come in the way of it. At first they will refuse to walk backwards, and will straddle away from the cart tongue in order to go sideways and see where they are to step.

But while the cart is drawing them back, it will be your principal business to keep the steers in a line, that they may track after the cart. Be patient now, the cart is helping you, and the steers will soon choose to go backwards after the cart, rather than to stand still and hold it. In a short time your steers will learn to step backwards and keep their bodies close to the tongue, with their heads up. Soon you will teach them to run an empty cart back, on level ground; and eventually your cattle will run back any decent load, with nearly as much ease as they will draw it forward.

Mr. Jonathan Rice, of Marlborough, recently told us that he taught his steers to back by hitching them to a rock in front of them, and then inviting them to back away from the rock, making them haul it after them and endeavor to avoid it as it comes along. He says they will hold up their heads and pull stoutly to get away from their load in front. We have no doubt this is a good mode of using cattle to run a load back. [Mass. Ploughman.

FASCINATION OF THE RATTLE-SNAKE.

'When I was a boy, about fourteen years old,' says Mr. Willard, 'my father sent me into the fields to mow briers. I had not been long employed, when I discovered a large rattle-snake, and looked for something to kill him; but not readily discovering a weapon, my curiosity led me to view him. He lay coiled up with his tail erect; and making the usual singing noise with his rattles. I had viewed him but a short time, when the most vivid and lively colors that imagination can paint, and far beyond the powers of the pencil to imitate, among which yellow was the predominant, and the whole drawn into a bewitching variety of gay and pleasing forms, were presented to my eyes; at the same time my ears were enchanted by the most rapturous strains of music, wild, lively, complicated and harmonious, in the highest degree melodious, captivating and enchanting, far beyond anything I ever heard before or since, and indeed far exceeding what my imagination in any other situation could have conceived. I felt myself irresistibly drawn towards the hated reptile; and as I had been often used to seeing and killing rattle-snakes, and my senses were so absorbed by the gay vision and rapturous music, I was not for sometime apprehensive of much danger; but suddenly recollecting what I had heard the Indians relate (but had never before believed) of the fascinating power of these serpents, I turned with horror from the dangerous scene: but it was not without the most violent effort that I was able to extricate myself. All the exertions I could make with my whole strength were hardly sufficient to carry me from the scene of horrid yet pleasing enchantments; and while I forcibly dragged off my body, my head seemed to be irresistibly drawn to the enchanter by an invisible power. And I fully believe that in a few moments longer it would have been wholly out of my power to make an exertion sufficient to get away.

DRESS OF THE NEW-ENGLANDERS.

The boots and shoes worn by the earlier settlers of New England, were coarse, clumped, square-toed, and adorned with enormous buckles. If any boots made their appearance, prodigious was the thumping as they passed up the aisles of the church; for a pair of boots was expected to last a man's life. The tops were short, but very wide; formed, one might suppose, with a special adaption to rainy weather; collecting the water as it fell, and holding an ample bath for the feet and aukles!

The women, old and young, wore flannel gowns in winter. The young women wore, in the summer, wrappers or shepherddress; and about their ordinary business, did not wear stockings and shoes. They were usually contented with one calico gown; but they generally had a calimanco gown, another of camlet, and some had them made of poplin. The sleeves were short, and did not come below the elbow. On holidays, they wore one, two, or three ruffles on each arm—the deepest of which were sometimes nine to ten inches. They wore long gloves coming up to the elbow. Round gowns had not then come in fashion; so they wore aprons. The shoes were either of thick or thin leather, broadcloth, or worsted stuff, all with heels an inch and a half high, with peaked toes turned up in a point. They generally had small, very small muffs, and some wore masks. [Book of the Feet.

Mummy Cloths for Paper.—The latest idea of the Pacha of Egypt for a new source of revenue is the conversion of the cloths which cover the bodies of the dead into paper, to be sold to add to the treasury. It is estimated that from the year 2097 B. C. to the year 1 of our era, four hundred and twenty millions of Egyptians have died in the "Valley of the Nile." All these millions were embalmed, and all wrapped more or less fully in linen, furnishing 8,400,000 metrical quintals of cloth, which may be used for the manufacture of paper. This calculation does not include the land of Ethiopia, nor the three centuries that elapsed before Egypt began to bury its dead with spices, &c. And, as to the value of the resuscitated wrappings, the estimate is as follows:—

The cloth which encloses the mummies is all of the finest linen; and every body knows how superior the paper manufactured from yarn is to that made from other substances. The rags that serve for the preparation of paper are now sold in France at the rate of £70 per metrical quintal. Subtracting from the sum 100 piastres for expenses, there will nevertheless remain a total of 420,000,000 piastres, or 21,000,000 dollars, (about £4,000,000 sterling.) Only admitting the half of this result, viz., 10,500,000 dollars, every one will agree that this industrial resource, reduced to its very lowest proportions, would, nevertheless, yield an immense profit to the government of his Highness, the Pacha of Egypt.

Female Dress of the Present Day.—We are inclined to think that the female attire of the present day is, upon the whole, in as favorable a state as the most vehement advocates for what is called nature and simplicity could desire. It is a costume in which they can dress quickly, walk nimbly, eat plentifully, stoop easily, loll gracefully, and, in short, perform all the duties of life without let or hindrance. The head is left to its natural size, the skin to its native purity, the waist at its proper region, the heels at their real level. The dress is calculated to bring out the natural beauties of the person, and each of them has, as far as we see, fair play. Flounces are a nice question. We like them when they wave and flow, as in a very light material—muslin or gauze or berege—when a lady has no outline and no mass, but looks like a receding angel or a dissolving view; but we do not like them in a rich material, where they flop, or in a stiff one, where they bristle; and where they break the flowing lines of the petticoat, and throw light where you do not expect it. In short, we like the gown that can do without flounces, as Josephine liked a face that could do without whiskers, but in either case it must be a good one. [Quart. Rev.

Cameos.—Cameo breast-pins are made of conch-shells. The art was confined to Rome for near half a century, and to Italy until the last twenty years. The first cameo made out of Italy was by an Italian in Paris, and now about two hundred are employed in making cameos in that city. The number of shells used annually thirty years ago, was about three hundred, the whole of which were sent to England, the value of each in Rome being about seven dollars. The number used in France last year was 1,000,500, in vulue (shells) $44,800. The average value of large cameos made in Paris is about one dollar twelve and a half cents each. The whole value of cameos made in Paris last year was about $200,000. In England not more than six persons are engaged in the trade. In America about the same number; but Yankee genius has entered the field of cameo art, and soon we shall be provided with republican gems, carved with republican hands.

Chinese Kites.—In our evening walk on the wall we saw a curious specimen of the kites they use. Looking at it from the front, it had precisely the appearance of an enormous worm, twenty or thirty feet in length, with long tentacula stretching out on each side. It was black on the back, and white underneath, and the whole representation was horribly natural. To see it wriggling about in the air, its tail floating aloft, and its enormous head moving about as if in search of its prey, and apparently just ready to drop upon you, might call forth an involuntary shudder from one of ordinary strength of mind. It was composed of elliptic pieces of stiff paper, attached, at short intervals, to a string; with light strips of bamboo passed through them, to constitute the feelers. A common form of the kite is that which is so cut as to resemble a large bird on the wing. The delusion is so perfect that it requires some scrutiny to distinguish the kite from the bird when seen together. The wings are sometimes constructed of light silk, and so attached as, with a little management, to flap like a bird flying. To lend a greater interest to this sport, it is common to attach an Æolian harp, which gives forth a loud musical sound, so that we are sometimes entertained for days with the music of three or four kites.

Crib-Biting.—Horses sometimes contract the habit of biting their mangers, or whatever hard substance they can lay hold of. The habit results in considerable injury to the animal, in consequence, as is commonly supposed, of his sucking or drawing in air. Mr. Youatt says the crib-biting horse is notoriously more subject to the cholic than other horses. He says also, that this is one of those tricks which are very contagious and difficult to cure. The habit is so inveterate that when horses addicted to it have been turned to pasture for the purpose of curing it, they have been known, according to Mr. Youatt, to gallop across a field for the mere purpose of having a gripe at a rail. Mr. Y. suggests that a strap buckled tightly round the neck, by compressing the wind-pipe, will prevent the horse from "cribbing."

Wells Lathrop, Esq., of South Hadley, Mass., had a very valuable horse which had this habit for some time; but by the use of a small strap, fastened round the neck just so tight as to bear on the wind pipe, he is effectually prevented from biting, and the horse is not in the least injured. [Albany Cultivator.

Butter Consumed in London.—Butter was unknown to the ancient Greek and Romans in cooking. The ancient medical writers do not mention it as an article of food, though they, as well as writers on agriculture, have given us particular notices of milk, oil and cheese. It is very little used in Spain, Portugal, and the isouth of France, but in England its consumption s very great, both for food and culinary purposes. It is believed that in London, the yearly consumption, for each individual, is no less than 26 pounds; and supposing the metropolis to contain 1,450,000 inhabitants the total consumption would be 16,830 tons. Add to this 4,000 tons for victualling ships, and we arrive at otal of 21,000 tons, which, at ten pence per pound, would be worth $8,002,400.

It is estimated that a good cow will produce in a year 168 pounds of butter, on which calculation, 280,000 cows would be a requisite for the supply of London market, alone, in this one article of food and luxury.

VARIETY.

A distinguished physician, in a work on physiology, says:—"The transmission of food through the gullet should be gradual; and when persons eat rapidly, the food does not pass immediately into the stomach, but is retained in the gullet, which thus becomes distended, causing pressure upon the arterial trunk, which lies close at its back. This impediment to the flow of blood in one of its chief canals, in persons predisposed to such calamity, causes ther upture of one of the vessels of the brain, an effusion of blood takes place, and death from apoplexy is the result."

An exchange notices a new method of paving, which is said to have been substituted for the old mode. The stones are now placed two or three inches asunder, and the intervals are choked with small gravel, through which aspalte is poured so as to render the whole impenetrable to water from above, and afford a firm footing for horses.

A stranger passing through one of the mountainous towns of New England, inquired, "What can you raise here?" The answer was, "Our land is rough and poor; we can raise but little produce, and so we build school-houses and churches, and raise MEN."

At a late sale of books in England, the auctioneer put up "Drew's Essay on Souls," which was knocked down to a shoemaker; who very innocently, but to the great amusement of the crowded room, asked the auctioneer "if he had any more works on shoemaking to sell."

"Once," said a Quaker, in a dispute concerning the propriety of titles, "I had the honor of being in company with an Excellency and a Highness. His Excellency was the most ignorant and brutal man I ever saw, and his Highness measured four feet eight inches."

He who forgets the fountain from which he drank, and the tree under whose shade he gamboled in the days of his youth, is a stranger to the sweetest impressions of the human heart.

Have a place for every thing, and when you have done using it, return it to its place. This will save much time in hunting after articles which are thrown carelessly aside, and lie you know not where.

"I have been talking some time to D——s," said an artist to Northcoat, "and I find there is nothing in him." "You have been lucky," was the reply, "for I have found the man full of himself."

Beware of the man who finds every thing to be well; of him who meets with every thing wrong; and, still more, of the man who is indifferent to every thing.

On the 19th ult., H. & H. Freeman, of New-Haven, (says the Courant,) mailed $700 to Bultrick & Cobb, Boston. It never reached them. and $690 of the money has been paid into the Suffolk Bank.

Wm. Paulin and a companion, of Salem, West Jersey, bought a quart of rum on Sunday morning, and started on a spree. Next day Paulin's body was found in a neighboring meadow, dead. He left a wife and two children.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the psess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, }
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT
NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to
George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 29. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JANUARY 6, 1848. WHOLE NO. 185.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since. [Continued.

As we have seen, God says that he rested on the seventh day, and therefore blessed it; the erring creature of His hand, (in the quotation reviewed,) says, the first day of the week was and is the Sabbath, having had "its original institution at the creation of the world." (Letters.) Yet although according to this same author the first day of the week "was on that account, as a moral law, BINDING on ALL men," its alledged rejection by the Israelites, and substitution by them of a different day, is justified on the ground of their peculiarity as a people. Very peculiar indeed they must have been, to be exempted on this ground from "a moral law" declared by himself to have been "binding on all men."

I has however been argued in support of the alledged change of the Sabbath in the wilderness, that a similar change was made to the Israelites in regard to the year. It is indeed true that, in commemoration of their deliverance from Egypt, the commencement of the year was to be computed from the month Abib, instead of Tizra, as had previously been done, (Ex. 12: 2,) but the fact that they were so commanded forms no ground for argument of a change of the Sabbath in the wilderness. It is on the contrary all against that view. For the very fact of such a memorial of the exodus having actually been instituted by divine authority, rendered another the less necessary. Neither had there been a previous commemoration of any event in connection with the commencement of the year, which could be affected by the change as respects the Sabbath as commemorative of creation.

Besides, the illustration actually tells most forcibly against those by whom it is adduced. For there is express revelation of the divine authority under which the commencement of the year was to be thenceforward computed. This was their warrant. The law was given them; and was by them obeyed. To establish an analogy between this case and that of a changed Sabbath, it would be necessary that we should find an equally authoritative injunction by the Supreme. No such injunction is shown; none such was ever dreamed of by those for whom the change is alledged to have been made. If in regard to a change of the Sabbath we had the authority which we have for the change of the first month of the year, argument in the matter would have been superfluous; obedience to the command would have been duty, and we should then have urged as strenuously the sanctification of the authorized day as we now denounce the attempt to discredit the divinely-appointed Sabbath by the folly of fanciful men. The very fact that when a change of the beginning of the year was intended, intimation of the change was made, is the evidence that if a change of the Sabbath had been designed, equally explicit authority would have testified the divine purpose in regard to it also.

But while to and by the Israelites one change of the Sabbath is thus alledged to have been effected by divine connivance, inspired prophecy given to the Israelites, it is also alledged, contained intimations of a return to the day from which they had unconsciously swerved.

One of these prophetic announcements, it is admitted by those who claim it, is indeed in very general terms, making no mention of any day of the week. It says not a word of any change of the Sabbath; neither, when examined, does it in any way imply this. Any allusion which it makes to the Sabbath is prophetic of its true sanctification. Still a distinguished Sunday advocate says concerning it, "The word of prophecy does not, indeed, expressly announce a change of the day of the Sabbath, but it affords such intimations as are quite consistent with such a transfer. The 'old creation'—the state of things under the law—shall not be remembered; but the new creation—the state of things under the Gospel—shall. The Christian Church shall have her ministers, solemnities, Sabbaths, and holy ordinances, all referring directly to the Messiah. A new dispensation shall be introduced, in which the alteration shall be so great and extensive as to be fitly compared to 'new heavens and a new earth,' which shall efface the memory of the old. Read the glowing language itself: 'Behold I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come to mind.' 'As the new heavens and the new earth which I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord.'" Rev. Daniel Wilson's Sermons on "the divine authority and perpetual obligation of the Lord's day."

The prediction referred to, is the conclusion of the prophecies of Isaiah. Let us look a little more closely at its statements. "For, behold," says the Lord, by the mouth of the prophet, "I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Is. 65: 17—19.

An important and blessed prediction this truly is; Jerusalem redeemed from her sin and sorrow—her sons and daughters recalled from their wandering—their strains of lamentation exchanged for those of joy and gladness—new heavens and a new earth created by the Lord! But where, in all this, is the change of the Sabbath? Are "new heavens" a new Sabbath? Is a "new earth" a new Sabbath? Is Jerusalem, or the joy of her people a new Sabbath? The prediction relates to the events of a future time, when Israel, restored to their land and the favor of their God, shall enjoy the smile of His countenance and the blessing of His hand. In the earlier verses of the chapter, the Lord complains of their iniquities, yet he declares, "I will bring a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains." Ver. 9. Those of them that forsake the Lord, it is added, shall be numbered to the sword, and a better and a happier time for Israel shall follow, when "he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth; because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes." Ver. 16. Not yet have the sins and the sorrows of Jacob and Judah ceased; still less are they forgotten. But the whole prophecies are replete with promises of this holy and happy state as yet in store for them. We have already had occasion to quote Deut. 30 as containing a similar promise of blessing; and a second witness we point to, in Jer. 13: 7—14, but must not amplify here upon the subject.

Now it is in reference to those times and circumstances that God says, by the prophet, "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth." The "for" with which the promise is given, intimates its connection with the times when the former troubles shall be forgotten, predicted in the preceding verse. The following portion of the prophecy also no less clearly carries forward our faith and attention to the period when the great Adversary of man shall be bound, and blessings shall be poured upon the human race in magnitude far beyond what has ever been known since sin found a place in our world. "For there shall no more thence be an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Is. 65: 20—25.

Glorious, indeed, are these promises, and our faith is pointed forward, by the Apostle Peter, to their fulfillment, as the "times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world begun." Acts 3: 21. And the same apostle, in his Epistle, refers expressly to this prediction of Isaiah, when speaking of our "looking for, and hasting unto, the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat," he adds, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2d Peter 3: 12, 13.

The only "promise" of new heavens and a new earth, which was on record when Peter wrote, was that by Isaiah, which the objector has converted into a promise of a new Sabbath. But as Peter shows the promise to have been still unfulfilled when he penned his second Epistle, such new Sabbath could not be coeval with the Christian era. The new heavens and new earth are still future; and therefore, if we will transmute the promise into a new Sabbath, the time has not yet arrived in which the changed Sabbath would be acceptable. Even according to the interpretation made by the objector, the time to which the prophecy relates proves the present and past observance of Sunday, as founded upon it, to be premature. We, according to His promise, do look for the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, and the blessing consequent on a righteous state predicted by the prophet; but we do not look for a change of the Sabbath, as being then to be authorized, any more than we believe such a change to have now the divine sanction.

With the author quoted, we do believe that then "the Christian Church shall have her ministers, solemnities, Sabbaths, and holy ordinances, all directly referring to the Messiah." But this is a truth confined neither to the present nor the future. All God's appointments in past times have equally had that reference. And we deplore the Church's apostacy as one which especially derogates from the honor of the Messiah as the Creator. And we rejoice in the happy anticipation of the fulfillment of the text, when "it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." The text points our faith and hope to a time when all flesh shall sanctify the Sabbath which the Lord has blessed; not that universally another, and an unblessed day, shall be substituted for it. The prophetic spirit contemplates the Sabbath of the Lord finding its appointed place in the hearts of men, and gives not the shadow of countenance to the church's departure from God's appointment.

[To be continued.

HOW IT STRIKES THE HEATHEN.

The following is an extract from the Address of Rev. George Smith, missionary to China, at the late Anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society:—

"During my residence in the city of Ningpo, I found continual opportunities, as also in every other part of China, of distributing copies of the word of God, and Christian tracts; and it was pleasing and delightful to see with what candor and with what liberality the natives, who were either atheists or idolaters, would receive the Word of God, and peruse the contents, and discuss the subject contained in it. On one occasion a native merchant came to my house, and he received a number of Christian tracts, which he was soon reading in an adjacent room. One morning I gave him a copy of St. James' Epistle in Chinese; and I observed that he immediately withdrew, and appeared to be diligently employed in perusing its contents. Soon after, I took a walk into the city; and on my return I saw a poor beggar lying in the last extremity of destitution and disease, and at the point of death, at the entrance of one of their heathen temples. On my return to my house, I sent my servant with a few copper coins to this man—though, alas! he was removed beyond the reach of any human remedy—just sufficient to relieve his present distress. As I had not sufficient to make up the sum I wanted, I borrowed a few coins from my Chinese friend. He asked me for what purpose I wanted it, and why I showed such anxiety in behalf of a youth of whom I knew nothing. I told him that the Supreme Ruler of heaven commanded us to do good to all men. He returned, after a little time, and repeated his inquiry, 'Why do you take such interest in this beggar? he is no relation of yours.' I again told him that the doctrine of Jesus commanded us to regard all men as brethren. He thought this very strange, and retired to his room; and then commenced reading this Epistle of St. James, as if something had previously struck his mind. He soon after came to me, with feelings of pleasure depicted on his countenance, as if he had made some great discovery, and pointing to the 2d chapter and 8th verse, said, 'Teacher, I now understand it.' I looked at the passage; The translation is this: 'If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the Scriptures, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well.'"

OMNIPRESENCE.

E'en now, while voiceless Midnight walks the land,
And spreads the wings of Darkness with her wand,
What scenes are witnessed by Thy watchful eye!
What millions waft to Thee the prayer and sigh!
Some gaily vanish to an unfeared grave,
Fleet as the sun-flash o'er a summer wave;
Some wear out life in smiles, and some in tears,
Some dare with hope, while others droop with fears;
The vagrant roaming in his tattered vest;
The babe is sleeping on its mother's breast;
The captive mutt'ring o'er his rust-worn chain;
The widow weeping for her lord again;
While many a mourner shuts his languid eye,
To dream of heaven, and view it ere he die.
And yet no sigh can swell, no tear-drop fall,
But Thou wilt see, and guide, and solace all!

From the People's Journal.

THE HOLY LAND.—BY HARRIET MARTINEAU.

JERUSALEM—A MORNING'S WALK.

There is little pleasure in visiting the places within the walls of Jerusalem which are reported by the monks to be the scenes of the acts and sufferings of Christ. There is no certainty about these; and the spots regarding which there can be no mistake are so interesting that the mind and heart of the traveler turns away from such as may be fabulous. About the site of the Temple there is no doubt; and, beyond the walls, one meets at every turn assurance of being where Christ walked and taught, and where the great events of Jewish history took place. Let us go over what I found in one ramble; and then my readers will see what it must be to take walks in the neighborhood of Jerusalem.

Leaving the city by the Bethlehem Gate, we descended into the Valley of Hinnom or Gehenna. Here there are many tombs cut in the rock, with entrances like door-ways. When I speak of Bethany, I shall have occasion to describe the tombs of the Jews. It was in this valley, and close by the Fountain of Siloam, that, in the days of Jewish idolatry, children passed through the fire, in honor of Moloch. This is the place called Tophet in Scripture—fit to be spoken of as it was, an image of hell. Here, in this place of corruption and cruelty, where fires hovered about living bodies, and worms preyed on the dead—here was the imagery of terror—"the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched." The scene is very different now. The slopes are terraced, that the winter rains may not wash away the soil; and these terraces were to-day green with springing wheat; and the spreading olives and fig-trees cast their shadows on the rich though stony soil. Streams were led from the Pool of Siloam among the fields and gardens; and all looked cool and fresh in the once hellish spot. On the top of the opposite hill was the Field of Blood—the field bought as a burial place for strangers, by the priests to whom Judas returned his bribe. For the burial of strangers, it was used in subsequent ages; for pilgrims who died at the Holy City were laid there. It is now no longer enclosed; but a charnel-house marks the spot.

The pools all around Jerusalem are beautiful; the cool arching rock-roof of some, the wood-tufted sides and clear waters of all, are delicious. The Pool of Siloam is still pretty—though less so, no doubt, than when the blind man, sent to wash there, opened his eyes on its sacred stream. The Fountain of Siloam is more beautiful than the pool. It lies deep in a cave, and must be reached by broad steps which wind down in the shadow. A woman sat to-day in the dim light of reflected sunshine—washing linen in the pool. Here it was, that in days old the priest came down with his golden pitcher, to draw water for the temple service; and hither it was that the thought of Milton came, when he sang of—

Siloa's brook, that flowed
Fast by the oracle of God.

We were now in the Valley of Jehoshaphat; and we crossed the bottom of it, where the Brook Kedron must run when it runs at all, but it seems to be now merely a winter torrent, and never to have been a constant stream. When we had ascended the opposite side of the valley, we were on the Mount of Olives. The ascent was steep—now among tombs, and now past fields of waving barley, decked with the shade of olive trees. As we ascended, the opposite hill seemed to rise, and the city to spread. Two horsemen in the valley below, and a woman with a burden on her head, mounting to the city by a path up Moriah, looked so surprisingly small as to prove the grandeur of the scenery. Hereabout it was, as it is said, and may reasonably be believed, that Jesus mourned over Jerusalem, and told his followers what would become of the noble city which here rose upon their view, crowning the sacred mount, and shining clear against the cloudless sky. Dwellers in our climate can not conceive of such a sight as Jerusalem seen from the summit of the Mount of Olives. The Moab mountains, over towards the Dead Sea, are dressed in the softes hues of purple, lilac, and gray. The hill country to the north is almost gaudy with its contrasts of color; its white or gray stones, red soil, and crops of vivid green. But the city is the glory—aloft on the steep, its long lines of wall clearly defining it to the sight, and every minaret and cupola, and almost every stone, marked out by the brilliant sunshine against the deep blue sky. In the spaces unbuilt on within the walls, are tufts of verdure; and cypresses spring here and there from some convent garden. The green lawns of the Mosque of Omar, are spread out small before the eye, with their groups of tiny, gay, moving people. If it is now so glorious a place to the eye, what must it have been in the days of its pride! Yet in that day, when every one looked for the exulting blessing, "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces!" there came instead the lamentation over the Jerusalem that killed the prophets and stoned the messengers of Jehovah, and whose house must be therefore left desolate.

The disciples, looking hence upon the strength of the walls, the massiveness of the Temple buildings, then springing 480 feet from the bed of the brook below, and the depth and ruggedness of the ravines surrounding the city on three sides, might well ask when those things should be, and how they should be accomplished. On the fourth side, the north, where there is no ravine, the Roman army was encamped. We could now see that rising ground, once covered with the Roman tents, but to-day with corn-fields and olive-grounds. The Romans encamped one legion on the Mount of Olives; but it could not do any harm to the city; and the only available point of attack—the north side—was guarded by a moat and three walls. The siege was long; so long that men's hearts failed them for fear, and at least one famished woman ate her own child; and at last the city was taken and nearly destroyed; and of the Temple, not one stone was left upon another. Here we were in the midst of these scenes to-day! We stood where the doom was pronounced, below us was the camp of the single legion I have mentioned; opposite was the humbled city, with the site of the Temple courts; and over to the north was the camp of the enemy. Here was the whole scene of that "great tribulation, such as was not known from the beginning of the world."

From the summit of Olivet, we went down to the scene of that other tribulation—that anguish of mind which had perhaps never been surpassed from the beginning of the world. "When Jesus had spoken these words," (his words of cheer after the last supper,) "he went forth," we are told, "with his disciples over the brook Kedron, where was a garden." This garden we entered to-day from the other direction, and left it by crossing the bed of the brook. It is a dreary place now, very unlike what it must have been when "Jesus oft times resorted thither with his disciples." It is a plot of ground on a slope above the brook, enclosed with fences of loose stones, and occupied by eight extremely old olive trees—the oldest, I should think, that we saw in all our travels. I do not mean that they could have been growing in the days of Christ. That is supposed to be impossible; though I never could learn what is the greatest age known to be attained by the olive tree. The roots of these were supported by little terraces of stones, that neither trees nor soil might be washed down the slope by the winter torrents. But little remains of these once fine trees but hollow trunks and a few straggling branches. It is with the mind's eye that we must see the filling up of this garden enclosure where Jesus "oft times resorted thither"—its orchard of fig, pomegranate, and olive trees, and the grass or young springing corn under foot. From every part of it the approach of Judas and his party must have been visible. By their "lanterns and torches and weapons," gleaming in the light, they must have been seen descending the hill from the city gate. The sleeping disciples may not have heeded the lights and footsteps of the multitude; but step by step, as it wound down the steep, and then crossed the brook, and turned up to the garden, the victim knew that the hour of his fate drew on.

By the way the crowd came down, we now ascended towards the city, turning aside, however, to skirt the north wall, instead of returning home through the streets. Not to mention now other things that we saw, we noted much connected with the siege—the nature of the ground—favorable for the encampment of an army, and the shallow moat under the walls, where the Romans brought two great wooden towers on wheels, that the men in the towers might fight on a level with those on the walls, and throw missiles into the town. This scene of conflict is very quiet now. A crop of barley was ripening under the very walls; and an Arab, with a soft, mild countenance, was filling his water-skins at the pool, called the sheep-pool, near the Damascus gate. The proud Roman and despairing Jew were not more unlike each other than this Arab, with his pathetic face, was unlike them both. As he stooped under the dim arches of the rock, and his red cap came into contrast with the dark gray of the still water below, and the green of the dangling weeds over his head, our thoughts were recalled to our own day, and to a sense of the beauty we meet in every nook and corner of the Holy Land.

PREACHERS MUST BE IN EARNEST.

"He that negotiates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should
Beware of lightness in his speech."

To be born, to live, and to die, are real events. Pain, grief, and dissolution, are serious things. The Saviour of the world was serious and earnest in all his labors, both as a teacher and worker of miracles. The Prophets and Apostles were serious, solemn, earnest, pointed, conscience-awakening, and soul-stirring preachers. It is said that Jerome used to say, "that he never entered the pulpit but the trumpet of the judgment day seemed to be sounding in his ears." The most successful ministers of the gospel have not been eminent as school-trained rhetoricians, but eloquent in their own way. Eloquent because they loved the souls of men, and loved the truth by which they were to be saved, and earnest in presenting it to them. We believe the want of point, plainness and earnestness, to be an error of many of the preachers of our times. They are not successful, because they are not in earnest. They do not realize the full meaning of their message, and the awful responsibility of their vocation. Eminent orators have always been earnest speakers. Hall, Chalmers, Griffin, and Payson, were serious, earnest, impassioned preachers.

Eternity, and the rewards of a well or ill-spent life, are serious realities. Surely, if men should ever be serious and earnest, it is when they are addressing their fellow-men about their eternal welfare. [N. O. Protestant.

TRANSLATIONS OF THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Few of our readers are perhaps aware of the great changes which have taken place in our language since its formation. We give below specimens of the Lord's Prayer at different periods:—

1300.—Fader our in hevene, Haleweyed be thi name, come thi kingdam, Thi will be don as in hevene and in erthe, Our uche dayes bred give us to day, Au forgive us our dettes, as we forgeven our dettoures, And lede us not into temptation, Bote delyvere us of yel. Amen.

1379—WICKLIFF'S BIBLE.—Our fadyr that art in heavenes, Hallowed be thy name, Thy kingdom come to, Be thy will done in erthe as in heavene; Give to us this day our bread over other substances; And forgif to us our dettes as we forgiven to our detters; and leed us not into temptation; But deliver us from evel. Amen.

1526—TINDAL'S TESTAMENT.—O oure father which art in heven, hallowed be thy name, Let thy kingdom come. Thy will be fulfilled as well in erthe, as hit ys in heven! Give vs this daye oure dayly breade. And forgeve vs oure tresspasses, even as we forgeve them which tresspass vs. Leede vs not into temptation, but delyever vs from yveh. Amen.

1589—COVERDALE'S BIBLE.—Our father which art in heauen, hollowed by thy name. Thy will be done even in earth as it is in heauen. Giue us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our detts as we also forgeve our detters. And lead us not into tentation, put deliuer us from euill; for thine is the kingdom and the power and glorie for euer. Amen.

SCIENCE AND MISSIONS.

Missionary travels form an interesting and important part of our modern evangelical literature. No travels that have ever been written can be fairly said to equal them in thrilling incident, or worthy object, or real value. They are generally the productions of men of disciplined minds, trained to habits of discriminating observation, and capable of taking comprehensive views of the countries and tribes which they visit. The accurate scholarship of many of our missionaries qualifies them, in an eminent manner, for the responsible but useful task. Their knowledge of geography, history, and literature; their acquaintance with the elements of diverse language, their intellectual culture, guiding them to investigations which promise the most beneficial results, and directing their attention to points of the highest consequence, render their works the most interesting contributions of this department of learning. They know what discussions will be most acceptable to men of letters. They know on what points information is demanded. Their religious character and object give them an element of qualification for their work, raising them above the sphere of common travelers, and securing to us a series of interesting investigations and observations, which in the notes of merely worldly travelers, would be sought for in vain. They go abroad with the eye of scholars, and the hearts of Christians. We trust the time is not distant, when science will more fully acknowledge its obligations to missions; when it will be universally understood, that while this great enterprise is raising human beings from degradation and sin, and preparing them to be "partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light," it is at the same time contributing to enlarge the treasures of learning, the extent and profit of commerce, the benefits of international intercourse, and all the salutary results of mutual sympathy and communication between man and man. In the journeys undertaken for the promulgation of the gospel, while this primary end is accomplished, the boundaries of human knowledge are also increased, the safety and virtue of our mariners are secured, national honor and influence are extended, the foundations of new literature are laid, the cause of morality and human happiness is advanced, new intellectual energies are aroused, mind acts upon mind, both by a direct and reflex influence, evangelical truth is illustrated and confirmed, and the period of the world's highest prosperity, peace and joy, is hastened. [Chris. Review.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 6, 1848.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT.

The Good Book says, "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." We do not suppose the passage was written with special reference to the support of ministers. It sets forth a principle, however, which we deem quite as applicable to that subject as to any other. Many churches seem not to understand it so. Accordingly they appropriate only a comparatively insignificant sum to the support of their ministers, and insist upon their adapting their expenses to this short allowance, or making up the deficiency in some way which their own ingenuity can invent. For our part, we seriously question whether such a course is consistent with the gospel rule of doing as we would be done by. But whether it is or is not, we think a little candid consideration will show that its effects are extremely disastrous to the minister, the people, and the church.

Insufficient support necessarily cripples a minister, and hinders his usefulness. In order to the greatest success of the gospel ministry, certain qualifications and conditions are indispensable. The minister must be in all respects a worthy example to the flock. He must be characterized by the strictest integrity, always meeting his engagements with such entire punctuality as to give no occasion for complaint from those who are without. He must be ready to engage heartily and practically in the various benevolent movements of the day, so that his brethren can never charge him with urging them to contribute for that towards which he does nothing himself. He must devote his undivided energies to his work, giving himself "to prayer, to reading, to meditation, to study, in order that his profiting may appear unto all." By pursuing such a course, and in that way only, can he reasonably hope that his labors will be crowned with the highest success. But how is it possible for a minister who is but half supported to comply with all these requirements? Who can always meet his engagements promptly, and contribute to the various benevolent objects so as to be an example for others, while his income is not equal to his expenses? Who can devote himself with undivided energies to the ministerial work, while he feels a necessity constantly pressing upon him to make provision for the temporal wants of himself and those connected with him? To do so is impossible. Those, therefore, who think a minister ought to be entirely devoted to his work, and yet do not furnish him an adequate support, are chargeable with grievous inconsistency.

The evils attendant upon inadequately supporting the ministry, are not confined to ministers themselves; they are felt by the people also. Many cases there are, in which such support is refused by people who are in easy circumstances, with enough for the present and the future. They can look upon their well-furnished homes; and can provide their children with similar homes when they have occasion for them. But the man who ministers for them in holy things—and who has perhaps spent his patrimony and his best days in preparing for that work—has no place which he can call home; and as to making provision for the future wants of his children, that is out of the question, he being quite satisfied if he can provide for their present wants. Now what is the natural result of this state of things? The minister's confidence in his brethren is seriously impaired. He does not feel assured of their sympathy, and he sees that he is treated as a dependent rather than as an equal. The character of his addresses becomes less free and bold, and the people are finally treated to little else than religious declamation.

The church also suffers from the existence of such a state of things as we have described. In these days, one of the greatest hindrances to the prosperity of many churches is believed to be the frequent change of ministers. This is produced in two ways by insufficient support. Sometimes the minister, finding that he is not provided for according to his necessities and the abilities of his brethren, feels constrained to close his labors and seek another place. At other times the people, finding that the minister devotes a considerable portion of his attention to secular pursuits—(to which, by the way, their own illiberality has driven him)—become dissatisfied, dismiss him, and obtain another to go through the same process. No matter in which of these two ways the change is produced, it will be found to be injurious to the church in nine cases out of ten where no other good reason exists for separation.

Most of these evils might be prevented by a change of policy in relation to ministerial support. Let the people treat the minister as though they regarded their interests as identified with his; and let them contribute for his support, not according to what they have been accustomed to do, but according as God has prospered them. Under such treatment, they need not fear that he will get above his station, and enrich himself at their expense. He will be altogether more likely to feel so anxious to honor his station, that he will sooner find fault with himself for his deficiencies than give place to pride.

The Evangelical Alliance.—A learned Presbyterian minister in England, of high standing in the denomination to which he belongs, has recently published a work, dedicated to the Evangelical Alliance, and entitled, "Sectarianism the bane of Religion and the Church, and the necessity of an immediate movement towards Unity." "The Church" newspaper speaks of the work as calculated to do much good among thoughtful Dissenters. But in relation to the Alliance to which it is dedicated, the paper in question uses the following language, which we regard as expressing very near the truth: "This Alliance has proved a total failure, mainly owing, we believe, to the circumstance, that the parties composing it shrink from the task of going to the root of the evil, and probing the wound to the bottom. In their own most unscriptural and meaningless phrase, they 'agreed to differ;' in other words, they met with a preformed determination to leave matters precisely where they found them, so far as any abatement of the evils of denominationalism was concerned."

ATHEISTIC FRANCE AND SUNDAY.

All attempts to repeal the compulsory part of the Sunday Laws of our Republican States, are regarded by many persons as of a character not only to endanger the Sunday observance, but the peace and even the existence of civil society. Our own efforts to induce the several State Legislatures to repeal the compulsory and penal parts of the Sunday Statutes, are often classed with the atheistic acts of the French Republicans of the latter part of the last century; and a superstitious fear of provoking the hot displeasure of Jehovah's providence, is really produced in many professors of religion at the thought of revoking the Sunday ordinances of the land. Nothing else has probably contributed so much to awaken and foster this fear, as the manner in which men in repute for learning and sagacity have associated the abolition of Sunday in France with all the enormities of the French Revolution. Thus, President Dwight, in his "Theology Explained and Defended," says in reference to this subject:—

"Elevate them to power, and the Sabbath is changed into the decade, and the house of God into a stable; the Bible is paraded through the streets on an ass, and consumed upon a bonfire; immortal existence is blotted out of the divine kingdom; the Redeemer is postponed to a murderer; and the Creator to the prostitute, styled the Goddess of Reason. The end of this progress might easily be foreseen. Legalized plunder, legislative butchery, the prostitution of a kingdom, fields drenched in human blood, and cities burnt by human incendiaries, fill up the tremendous measure of iniquity; bewildering the gaping world with astonishment; awakening the shouts of friends; and covering heaven itself with a robe of sack-cloth." Ser. 109.

"France, while she was observing her tenth-day Sabbath, was one scene of commotion and bloodshed." Kingsbury on the Sabbath.

"One of the first acts of avowed atheism in revolutionary France, was to abolish the Christian Sabbath; and the Lord came out against her with fire, and with chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebukes with flames of fire." Dr. Humprey on the Sabbath.

"Allow me also to refer to the case of the total abrogation of the Sabbath by revolutionary France. The abrogation was accompanied by a general corruption of morals, and even by the breaking up of the conjugal relation, under the law allowing an unlimited divorce at mere will of the parties; when, as the Abbe Gregoire states, upwards of twenty thousand divorces were registered in the short space of eighteen months; and those in the city of Paris were nearly equal to the number of marriages. There again the headless trunks of unnumbered thousands of contending factions attested the righteous indignation of the God of the Sabbath, at this national desecration and abrogation of his holy day, and the total extinction of all religion." Chancellor Walworth; Permanent Sabbath Documents, No. 2, 1845.

The same manner of treating this matter is common with the greater part of a certain class of the religious presses of the Protestants of America and Great Britain; and the same representations are frequently thundered forth from their pulpits and platforms. The subject therefore requires a little calm investigation. If the facts really occurred as they are above represented, and the inference drawn from them is just, that "to abolish the Christian Sabbath" was the first and chief act of impiety in atheistic France, and the cause of all the turbulence and bloodshed of that factious period—and if that was one and the same thing with abrogating the compulsory and penal parts of our own Sunday Statutes—then, indeed, ought we all seriously to consider before we proceed any farther with our efforts to effect this object. But let the matter be fairly stated, and candidly examined, and it will be seen that the facts are misplaced, and that the inferences are the offspring of prepossessions, or of some other paternity that need neither be feared nor favored when misapplied to the Sunday Statute question.

A writer of some eminence, belonging to the Church of England, has summed up the facts respecting the rise of the French Republic in the following brief and perspicuous manner:—

"A. D. 1789. On the 5th of May, the States-General opened their sittings at Versailles. On the 16th of June, the formation of the National Assembly was decreed. On the 27th it was formed. On the 13th of August, but three months from the commencement of the Revolution, the Gœllican Church was overthrown by the Decree for the abolition of tithes. The whole of the parochial clergy of France were instantly pauperized. The succeeding measures, the seizure of the church lands and houses, the confiscation of funds, the exile and massacre of the priesthood, were but the practical execution of the decree. The blow was struck in 1789. The Church of France was the first public body subverted by the Revolution. A. D. 1793, Jan. 21, the King was murdered. He had been deposed, August 14, 1792. June 23, the Constitution of the Republic was proclaimed; its three principles being, the sovereignty of the people, the indifference of the government to all distinctions of religion, the levee en masse, or summons of the whole population to arms.

"August 8, the levee en masse was ordered. 'All Frenchmen were commanded to hold themselves in permanent readiness for the armies.'

"September 28, the Christian era was abolished. The era of the Republic was substituted. Sunday was to be observed no more. Olympic games, every fourth year, were appointed in honor of liberty.

October 16, the sections of Paris demanded at the bar of the Convention the total suppression of religious worship. They passed through the Hall shouting, 'No more altars, no more priests, no god but the god of nature.' This blasphemy was followed by a demand, that the Cathedral of Paris should be made the temple of reason.

"November 1, Gobet, the Vicar-General of Paris, attended by a body of his priesthood, abjured his functions and Christianity, uttering the fearful words, 'All religion is an imposture.' The blasphemer was shortly guilotined.

"November 19, it was ordered that in all burial places, a monument should be erected, representing sleep, with the inscription, 'Death is an eternal sleep.'

"The republican system was now complete. Immorality and infidelity had produced their natural fruits, in rebellion, regicide, and natural atheism."

Thus it appears, that the "first acts" of the infidel, atheistic republic of France, were not the "abrogation of the Christian Sabbath," but the abolition of church tythes, the subversion of the state church of France, the murder of the King, and the abolition of the Christian era. All these were prior to the suppression of Sunday. And in the eyes of an English clergyman, the great and damning sins of that Republic, were, first rebellion, second regicide, and third atheism. So far as appears in this and other histories of those times, there is no evidence that Sunday was abolished by one single ordinance aimed at it specifically. It was suppressed in the suppression of the Christian era, the substitution of the era of the Republic of France, the division of time into decades, and the abolition of the Christian religion.

We ask, then, why this one feature of the great French drama of sin is singled out as the most God-provoking of the whole series? Is it more iniquitous to abolish Sunday, than to suppress all religion? To declare the non-existence of Jehovah, and set up the "goddess of reason," and affirm death to be an eternal sleep, are these things of so much less enormity, that Jehovah overlooks them in pouring out his fiery indignation upon republican France for "abolishing the Christian Sabbath?" Could such a representation have been put forth by great and wise men, except under very strong prepossessions, or else while actuated by hot-headed zeal to serve a purpose? We leave it to the common-sense of our readers to solve these problems.

We have another serious complaint to make against this manner of associating atheistic France with the question of seventh-day people's rights. The French Republicans PROHIBITED the exercise of all Bible-revealed religion whatever. The observers of the seventh-day Sabbath claim the right, and declare their sense of duty, to practice religion as it is revealed in the Bible; and ask the State Legislatures to let their religious faith alone. They never have asked for the prohibition of a single religious tenet or observance of their fellow citizens; on the contrary, they uniformly avow their belief that the great business of human governments is the protection of the persons and estates of the citizens, whatever may be their religious observances. When it suits their purpose, their opponents can represent these observers of the seventh day as being "as moral and religious a people as any in the United States." With what justice, then, we ask, can any one ever associate the question of the constitutionality of the penal parts of the Sunday statutes with the principles or issues of the atheists of France? We would ask the advocates of Sunday observance, who set up false issues respecting the French Republic and Sunday, to scare people from a candid investigation of the sabbatic question, or to quiet them under the penal restraints of the Sunday statutes, if there be any difference between tying the Bible to an ass' tail, and defending the right of private interpretation of it? Whether proclaiming religion an imposture, and maintaining one's own conscientious views of it against orthodox standards, human authorities, and the statutes of state religionists, be equally damnable in their eyes? When these latter questions are answered in the affirmative, there may be a show of consistency in that man's creed who so affirmeth, and in his classing opposition to the penal parts of the Sunday statutes with the principles and issues of the atheistic Republic of France. Till then there can be none. S. D.

Scarcity of Theatres.—One of the religious papers says: "The city of Houston has no theatre, but four evangelical churches. Galveston has six evangelical churches, but no theatre. Texas is taking an honorable stand in morals, in advance of many of the old States."

Mission to Oregon.—The Board of Missions in the Presbyterian Church have resolved to send a mission to Oregon, so soon as suitable men can be obtained, and the necessary preparations be made. The plan of the Board is to send at least three missionaries to that territory with as little delay as practicable.

Letters in favor of Catholicism.—For several months past many of the religious newspapers have been publishing a series of letters addressed to Bishop Hughes, of New York, by some one who signs himself "Kirwan." It is now said that the author of those letters is the Rev. Mr. McMurray, of Elizabethtown, N. J., formerly an adherent of the Roman Catholic Church. His object has been to show the reasons why he left that church, and the reasons why he can not return. In a letter to the editor of the Freeman's Journal, Bishop Hughes declares his determination to publish in that journal a series of letters, on the same great topic which Kirwan has discussed; and whereas Kirwan has published reasons for having left the Catholic Church, and for refusing to return, the object of the Bishop's letters will be to show that no Catholic ought to forsake his Church, and that all Protestants who have a zeal for their salvation ought to enter her communion with as little delay as possible. Such are the abilities and standing of Bishop Hughes, that we are sure these letters will be looked for and read with uncommon interest. We hope that some of the papers in which the first series appeared will publish these also.

Death of Rev. Walter M. Lowrie.—Willner & Smith's European Times, of Dec. 4, says that Rev. Walter M. Lowrie, an American missionary at Ningpo, a gentleman of eminent attainments, has been cruelly murdered in the Chinese seas by pirates. The reverend gentleman took his passage in a Chinese boat from Shanghai to Ningpo, and during the voyage was attacked by a piratical vessel. At first, it would appear that the pirates only meditated robbery, but fearing that Mr. Lowrie might bring them to justice, they resolved to throw him overboard. Two of the ruffians seized him for that purpose, but not being able to accomplish it, a third joined in the murderous attack, and they succeeded in throwing him into the sea. As the waves ran high, though he was seen two or three times, he soon sank to rise no more. Mr. Sullivan, the English Consul at Ningpo, proffered every aid his official station enabled him to render, and steps were being taken to recover the remains if possible.

Presbyterianism at the West.—The members of the Presbyterian Church throughout the United States are exerting themselves with commendable zeal to extend their denominational limits at the West; and as they are an efficient and disciplined body, there is reason to expect that their efforts will be to a considerable degree successful. Twenty members of a Presbyterian Church in Louisville recently contributed one thousand dollars for domestic missions; while another church in the same city contributed four hundred dollars. With this money schools are established and feeble churches assisted. The Presbyterian Herald says, "there never has been a time when the prospects for the diffusion of sound Presbyterianism throughout the great West were so flattering." No doubt the field open to Christian effort at the West is a most inviting one. The Catholics, at least, so regard it. Would that Protestants were as much awake to its claims and encouragements as the Catholics are.

Protestant Churches in Turkey.—Rev. Mr. Dwight, in a communication from Constantinople to the American Board of Missions, states that the present aggregate of communicants in the four reform churches is one hundred and thirty-nine, of whom eighty-nine are connected with the church at the Capital. The number of Armenians, men, women, and children, who are actually separated from their former church, and now openly profess Protestantism, in Turkey and Syria, is reckoned at one thousand and seven. Beside these, there are nearly three thousand who are known to their own people and to others to be of Protestant sentiments, but who still retain a loose connection with their former churches. A much larger number must be more or less desirous of seeing the reformation advance.

Colony of Blacks.—There is a colony of colored people, principally fugitives from slavery, settled in the fertile part of Canada, lying between lakes Huron and Erie, which seems to be in a flourishing condition. They have a manual-labor school—the British American Institute—at Dawn Mills, the head of navigation on the Sydenham river, 60 miles from Detroit, with a tract of 300 acres attached, and 7 buildings. Some 80 pupils are engaged for the winter. Among the new secular enterprises in progress is a large steam mill.

Missions without Bibles.—An exchange says that although Roman Catholics have had missions in Siam more than two hundred years, not a Bible, or even an entire Testament, in the language of the people, has been provided for them. The American missionaries in Siam believe this to be substantially true in regard to their labors throughout the East. If so, it is certainly a very instructive and significant fact.

The Church in Waterford, Ct., we rejoice to learn, is enjoying a very pleasant revival. Bro. Alfred B. Burdick has been holding a series of evening meetings there, in the course of which Christians were much awakened, and the impenitent were led to inquire what they must do to be saved.

"Desecration of the Sabbath."—Under this head the New York Tribune says that Francis H. Devoe, Henry Walton, Mary Ann Johnson, Jane Patterson, Nancy Thompson, Elizabeth Stevans, and Elisha A. Greely, were severally arrested on Sunday evening for desecrating the Sabbath by giving a series of performances at Pinteux's Saloon, in Broadway, New York. Justice Drinker held the parties to bail each in the sum of $300 for their future good behaviour.

Sunday Schools in Texas.—A letter from Huntsville, Texas, states that Gen. Houston and his lady are regular attendants on the Sunday-school in that place, as are also many other influential citizens. In October, the General was announced as preparing an Address, to be delivered before the school at its annual examination.

Another Mission in Africa.—An opulent merchant in Liverpool has recently sent off the mission ship Warren to the western coast of Africa, for the purpose of establishing a Scottish mission. The Society has sent out a number of missionaries, four of whom are colored men, provided with every thing necessary for successful operations in that field.

Family Religion in Arkansas—The Southern Churchman copies from the Banner of Peace the following account, by Mr. R. Wallace, of family religion as he finds it in Arkansas:

"Many members of the church do not maintain family prayer, or pray in meeting, or say grace at the table. Indeed you would not know that they were members of the church from their walk and conversation. I am seldom asked to hold family worship, even at professors' houses. I make it a rule to ask permission. Very few can join in singing—sometimes none will kneel with me. I have knelt alone and made the first prayer in the house of a professor of religion, and members of the family 15 years old whispering and laughing."

Horrible.—A Maryland paper publishes the following extract from a letter of a "Hancock Boy," now serving in the ranks of the army in Mexico. It is dated at Mexico, Nov. 17, 1847. How completely does war transform men into demons! He says:—

"I myself got a buckshot through the cheek and upper lip, also a piece of one of my friends' skull-bone running into the other cheek and pointing out at the eye; but, thank God, I have now got well; but worse than all, a twelve pound shot struck my gun and blew it all to atoms, out of my hands. I picked up another, belonging to a man who had just had his head blown off, and kept up shooting until I went into the city, where I was chosen as one of Gen. Worth's body guard and took up quarters in the Halls of Montezuma for the night, where I laid the wearied limbs of a soldier to rest. You may rest assured of that, after losing three nights' sleep and driving the Greasers from Molino del Rey, from the great castle of Chepultepec, from the fort Causeway, and from the gates of the city, by slaughtering and killing them like hogs at a butchering."

EDUCATION AMONG THE INDIANS.

Mr. W. Medill, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has prepared a long report upon the condition and prospects of the Indians. The following extract from the N. Y. Tribune will show what is doing to promote education:—

In every system which has been adopted for promoting the cause of education among the Indians, the Department has found its most efficient and faithful auxiliaries and laborers in the societies of the several Christian denominations, which have sent out missionaries, established schools, and maintained local teachers among the different tribes.

The Cherokees are represented to have appropriated the sum of $35,000 for the establishment of two seminaries near Tahlequah—one for males, and the other for females—and to be now engaged in erecting the buildings. Besides the neighborhood schools, which are located in the various precincts, the Choctaws have three academies for the instruction of boys, and five seminaries for females; in carrying on and maintaining which, they annually expend $30,000. The manual-labor school established among the Osages, which was placed under the care and superintendence of the Catholic society, went into operation on the 1st of June last, and promises to be attended with the most beneficial results.

Arrangements were made during the past summer with the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for the establishment of a manual-labor school among the Chickasaws, that tribe having appropriated from their own means the sum of $6,000 for the erection of the necessary buildings, and $6,000 annually for carrying on and maintaining the school. Contracts were entered into—one with the Methodists, and the other with the Presbyterians—for the establishment of two manual-labor schools at different and convenient points among the Creeks. The sum of $6,000 was appropriated for the buildings and improvements, and $4,000 annually for their support, in each case. Provision has likewise been made for a manual-labor school among the Quapaws, which will probably be ready to go into operation in the spring, under the superintendence of the Methodist Church; and a contract has just been closed with the Catholics for a similar institution among the Miamies, for which they have consented to make an annual appropriation from their annuities of $2,000. These societies, by the terms of the several contracts, are to receive fifty dollars for every scholar which they shall maintain and educate. This is to include boarding, clothing, stationery, medical attendance, and every other necessary expense.

But thirty-four years have elapsed since the first religious newspaper was started in the United States. Now there are upward of one hundred of this character, published by the different Christian denominations, many of which have a wide circulation.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In looking over the proceedings in Congress last week, we see but little to report. On Tuesday both Houses were occupied in attending the funeral of Senator Fairfield. He was in good health on the previous Thursday. On Friday morning he received the visits of friends with accustomed cheerfulness, and at noon submitted to a surgical operation for an infirmity of the knee. His physical strength, however, was insufficient to sustain the agony which the operation produced, and he died at twenty minutes before eight o'clock the same evening. The death of Mr. Bradley, of the House of Representatives, was announced on Wednesday. He was attacked by a pulmonary affection, and in July he left home in pursuit of health and eminent medical advice. He arrived at New York with the intention of taking his seat in the House before returning to Michigan, but died in New York on the 5th of August.

In the SENATE, a bill was passed authorizing the purchase of the Madison papers. A resolution was also adopted, calling for the number of volunteers received into the service since the beginning of the war, number of deaths, number killed, &c. An attempt was made to postpone all prior orders, and take up the bill to increase the army; but it was strenuously opposed by Mr. Calhoun, who desired that his resolutions before the Senate might be discussed previous to acting upon the bill. The 4th of January is the day for taking up Mr. C.'s resolutions, after which there will no doubt be much more interest in the proceedings of the Senate.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, a petition was presented from the American Peace Society, at Boston, praying the adoption of measures to restore peace. A resolution of inquiry was adopted as to the expediency of excluding white traders from the Indian territories, and confining the trade therein exclusively to Indian residents. A petition was presented from citizens of Indiana for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia and territories of the United States, and the suppression of the internal slave trade; it was laid on the table. Three anti-slavery memorials from Philadelphia were presented. The first was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and the others were laid on the table.

DARING HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—One of the most daring robberies that has occurred within our knowledge in New Jersey, was committed yesterday, in the vicinity of Metuchin, between Rahway and New Brunswick. The circumstances, as communicated to us from authentic sources, are as follows: Mr. Benajah M. Crowell, of New York, being at the house of some relatives in the village of Metuchin, (the family of the late Lewis Campbell, Esq.,) took their horse and wagon between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon to take a ride to New Brunswick. After having traveled about a mile and a half, he was accosted in the edge of a piece of woods by a man apparently coming from New Brunswick, who beckoned for him to stop, which he immediately did, supposing that he wanted to make some inquiries about the way, or to get a ride. In coming up before Mr. Crowell he presented a pistol to his breast, demanding his money. After a moment's reflection, Mr. C. handed him his pocket-book, containing $37; whereupon the ruffian immediately demanded a surrender of the horse and wagon, threatening at the same time to shoot him dead if he did not yield. Mr. C. accordingly surrendered it, and the villain took the reins, and turning round, made off.

Mr. C. followed him back as fast as he could, alarming the inhabitants, who had observed the wagon return and pass through Metuchin, apparently in a great hurry. A number of men immediately followed in pursuit, and when about 4 miles from Metuchin, on the road to Woodbridge, he was overtaken by Rev. P. H. Burghardt. When the villain had turned a corner and saw Mr. B. on horseback, pursuing him closely, he put the horse under a full run for some distance; but finding it impossible to escape with the horse and wagon, he abandoned it and took across the fields on foot, but was soon headed off and compelled to stop. Upon searching him, there were found upon his person a dirk-knife, two pistols, both heavily charged with ball, a lot of silver pencil-cases, and a stamp bearing the name of C. Henrie. The pocket-book was found under the fence where he crossed.

Upon being examined before Justice Runyon of New Brunswick, he gave his name as Charles Williamson—says that he resides in New York, is about 19 years of age, and was out in the country peddling pencil-cases, and that he carried the pistols for his own personal protection. He was fully committed to await his trial of the Middlesex Oyer and Terminer in March next. [Newark Adv. 30th.

REMARKABLE ARREST OF A ROGUE.—We mentioned, says the Newark Advertiser, that a lady of this city had been robbed of a gold watch and trinkets by a forged note handed to her by a little boy, purporting to come from a friend asking the loan of it. On inquiry it appeared that the unsuspecting little fellow was accosted in the street by a man with his face half muffled, and solicited to take the note. On returning to him with the watch, the villain gave the boy a two shilling piece and left. The husband of the lady robbed, (S. S. Morris, Esq.,) on being informed of the circumstances, suspected the fraud, and a slight circumstance pointed to a young man in New York; whither he went in company with officer Southard, taking along the lad, only about ten years of age, in pursuit of him. While passing up Broadway with a New York officer, they met a stranger whom the lad identified as the villain who had deceived him. The fellow was soon brought to a confession by the address of the officer, the watch and its appendages were restored, and he taken into custody to answer for his crime. The arrest is certainly a remarkable case.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION—SIXTY TO SEVENTY LIVES LOST.—The steamer A. N. Johnson, bound to Wheeling, burst her boiler, Dec. 29, with a tremendous explosion, near Maysville, Ky., from some unascertained defect in the machinery. Between 60 and 70 persons were killed on the spot, and a large number scalded, of whom some 30 are so horribly injured that their recovery was considered doubtful.

So rapid was the progress of the flames after the explosion, and so complete the devastation, that hardly an effort could be made for self-preservation. The boat was soon in one sheet of fire, and burned to the water's edge.

The number of passengers on board the A. N. Johnson when this appalling accident occurred, was one hundred and sixty, not more than one quarter of whom escaped injury. So dreadful an accident has rarely, if ever, occurred on the Ohio. [Tribune.

THE LIBERIA PACKET.—We learn from the Colonization Journal, that the time for the sailing of the bark "Liberia Packet" for Liberia, on her third voyage, is fixed for the 15th of January. She is now daily expected home (at Baltimore) from her second voyage; all those who therefore intend going out in the Packet must be ready, and give notice of their intention by that time. "The terms on which the Society takes emigrants are as follows: Passage out, free; provisions on the voyage, free—house rent and provisions for six months after arrival in the colony, free; medical attendance, medicine and nursing, if sick, during the first year, free; five acres of good land contiguous to that already appropriated to other colonists and under cultivation, free; schooling for children, free; government and religious worship, all free." For those who go out on their own account, the cabin passage (either way) is $100, steerage do. $40.

SUMMARY.

The New York Tribune learns that the negotiation which has been pending since the appearance of the copyright article in the October number of Blackwood, between the Edinburgh proprietors by their Attorney, John Jay, Esq., of this City, and Messrs. Leonard Scott & Company, the republishers, has resulted in an amicable arrangement. By this arrangement the reprint establish on a legitimate basis will be continued in its complete and unmutilated form, and an early copy furnished to Messrs. Scott so as to enable them to bring out the Magazine at New-York at about the same time it will appear in Edinburgh and London.

There was quite a panic in Wall-st., N. Y. last week, on account of the failure of four or five banks, whose bills are in pretty general circulation. The New Hope and Delaware Bridge Co.'s Bank, and the Susquehannah Bank, failed, and their bills were selling for about 30 cents on the dollar. The Atlas Bank, at Clymer, Chatauque Co., N. Y., and the James Bank, also failed, creating considerable unnecessary suspicion in relation to all of the free banks of New York State.

The Executive of New Jersey has made a demand upon Gov. Young of New York, for the surrender to justice, for trial, of two young gentlemen, sons of Moses Y. Beach, of this city, who have been indicted by a grand jury of the sister State, and stand charged with embezzling the funds or money of the Plainfield Bank, to the loss and injury of its bill-holders. Gov. Young has not yet given a decided answer.

The North American of the 14th ult., gives an account of a serious affray which occurred at the Capital of Mexico on Sunday the 12th. Three men of the 1st and 2d Pennsylvanians were attacked in the street by a mob of leperos, in the western part of the city, and one of them, Luke Floyd, was badly wounded. Two of them escaped, and having procured the assistance of the guard, they shot three of the Mexicans, and wounded several others.

The schooner Effort, Bartlett, master, from Philadelphia for Newburyport, was run into at midnight on the 24th ult., off the Isle Shoals, by the schooner Bellona,, Allen, master, of Boston, for Sedgwick. Henry Stickman and J. H. Brown got on board the Bellona; the Effort sunk shortly after. Capt. Bartlett, Gideon Hickman, mate, and Jno. Macar, were lost.

The Official Report of the Senate's Proceedings, on Thursday last, as copied into the Union, includes a long debate on a motion, by General Cass, to raise ten regiments for the war in Mexico, immediately, in addition to the 43,000 United States troops now occupying that unfortunate Republic, and with a view to farther levies hereafter.

Wm. Jones, well known as a Chief of the Seneca Nation, died at the Cattaraugus Reservation on the 10th ult. He was the son of Capt. Jones, who resided on the Genesseo Flats, near the village of Geneseo, and was much respected, not only among the people of his own nation, but by a large circle of white acquaintances.

The owners of the Phœnix make the following statement of the number of souls on board the propeller at the time of her conflagration, Nov. 31, 1847: Hollanders, 154; cabin and other American passengers, 32; crew, including officers, 20. Total, 203. Number saved, 45. Total lost, 161.

The Pictou Chronicle records the death of a little girl, eight years of age, who was attacked and eaten by bears. Parts of her clothing, covered with blood, as well as some bones and mangled remains of her person, have been discovered.

Since the closing of the Hudson River, the most convenient mode of communication between Albany and New-York is by the Housatonic railroad. Boats leave New-York in the morning for Bridgeport, Ct., where passengers take the cars, which reach Albany in the evening.

Among the shipments to the eastward, from Rochester, by the Erie canal during the present and past seasons, were several packages of domestic cotton goods, as follows: In 1846, 2,876 pounds, and in 1847, 141,621 pounds, thus showing an increased export in 1847, equal to 138,845 pounds.

Snow two feet deep prevails considerably in Cattaraugus county, and business of all kinds moves to the sound of the merry bell.

A Scientific Congress assembled at Venice during the present year, and fourteen hundred and seventy-two men of science, and about two thousand lovers of science, met in the Ducal Palace, commencing on the 18th of September, and continued three weeks. The assembly had under its consideration questions of physics, mathematics, mechanics, geology, mineralogy, geography, archæology, agriculture, technology, botany, vegetable physiology, chemistry, zoology, comparative anatomy, and medicine.

Two men named Austin Johnson and Thomas Martin were drowned just outside of Nashville on the 23d, while attempting to follow the Gallatin Turnpike while submerged by the great flood. A companion escaped. The water had fallen two feet from its highest point, and was still falling at our last advices. So throughout the West; but the loss of property is estimated at not less than ten millions of dollars.

The Nottingham (Eng.) Journal states that a singular fraud has been successfully attempted by some lace-workers, who have given to cotton the appearance of silk. Silk thread is dissolved by a strong caustic ley, and after the cotton thread has been drawn through the solution thus obtained, it has the gloss and appearance of silk thread, from which the eye cannot distinguish it.

The schooner Hamilton, Captain Wixon, says the Yarmouth Register, cost last spring $3,000. She has been engaged in the fishing business six and a half months of the past season, has brought into port 1295 barrels of mackerel, and has stocked the handsome sum of $10,386. Seven of the crew received for their wages $526 each, and thirteen more received $472 each.

The packing establishment of D. B. Allen, in Louisville, Ky., has capacity for the slaughtering of from 1,200 to 1,400 hogs, and fifty head of cattle, (rendering the lard and tallow) per day. The whole operation is carried on under one roof. The machinery is capable of producing daily one thousand kegs of prime lard.

Thursday, Dec. 16, was the 74th anniversary of the destruction of tea in Boston harbor. Over 340 chests were thrown overboard and destroyed. The late Judge Thatcher had in his possession a small quantity of this tea, which one of the actors inadvertently carried away in his shoes.

A destructive tornado passed over the counties of Perry, Tuscaloosa, and Greene, in Alabama, on the 10th inst., destroying a large amount of property. The town of Newbern, in Greene county, was entirely demolished, the tornado in its course destroying houses, trees, &c., and killing the sheriff (M. Stokes) of Perry county.

Says the Louisville Journal: "A bill has been introduced into the Legislature of Alabama, the object of which is to prevent the separation of the families of negroes, and to exempt them from sale by legal process. A motion was made to indefinitely postpone the bill, but it was lost by a large majority."

The Lady Kennaway, a fine new East India ship, with a cargo, from Bombay, valued at a million of dollars, was abandoned last month by her crew in the Bay of Biscay. Crew saved. She was owned by Miss Ward, only daughter of the late T. Ward, London.

We learn from the Conneaut (Ohio) Reporter that the Academy in Kingsville, Ashtabula County, was destroyed by fire on the 20th inst. Most of the apparatus connected with the school, a very flourishing one, was destroyed, and the loss will be severely felt by Mr. Graves, the Principal.

The house of Mr. James Brook, of Cheraw, S. C., a revolutionary soldier, aged nearly 100 years, was consumed by fire, and horrid to relate, its owner with it. Mr. Brook had no family living with him except his negroes.

An explosion of a boiler took place in the kitchen of the eating-house of Mr. Fox, in Baltimore, on Monday morning, immediately killing Mrs. Mary Ann Roden and seriously scalding Miss Nancy Quynn and Miss Sarah Healey, also a beggar woman and 2 colored persons.

The Washington correspondent of the Evening Post says he has seen a letter dated at Kalamazoo, Michigan, Dec. 15, stating that the spotted fever has appeared in that village and carried off fourteen victims in eleven days.

The N. O. Picayune of the 21st says the steamer Westwood, while going down the Mississippi to meet the English steamer Teviot, ran into the bank in a fog, burst her boilers, and killed from 12 to 15 persons—7 whites and the remainder negroes. All the firemen were killed.

The King of Sweden has directed the Minister of Justice to draw up a bill, which shall authorize the admission of Jews into the kingdom of Norway, from which they are now excluded, and to set forth the rights to which they are to be entitled. The bill is to be submitted to the Storthing at its next session.

The large pork-house of Mr. B. Wilson, on Deer Creek, near Cincinnati, was, with nearly all its contents, consumed by fire on the 22d inst. The loss is estimated at about $45,000.

Catharine Jane, daughter of Mr. Thomas Cunard of Indian Town, came to her death by playing with a heated poker, which ignited her clothes, and burned her so severely that the little sufferer expired in five hours after.

A census has been taken of the free white males in Ohio, who are 21 years of age or upward, and the return is about 350,000, Paulding containing only 274, and Hamilton 22,810.

In Syracuse, says the Star of the 25th, sleigh-rides are the order of the day, and the plank-road the chosen thoroughfare. One carriage establishment in that place has sold, within one week, cutters and sleighs to the amount of 700 dollars.

Three arctic expeditions are in preparation to go in search of Sir John Franklin: one to Behring's Straits, one to Baffin's Bay, and one to Canada.

On May, 1st, this year, 256,509 able-bodied men were employed in the construction of British Railways. Now there are 128,000 of these turned adrift idle.

Over 2,000 miles of Electric Telegraph wires are in operation in Britain.

The Military Committee of the Senate reported a bill, a few days ago, for adding ten regiments to the present twenty-five regiments of the regular army; and the same Committee have reported another bill authorizing twenty new regiments of volunteers. When all these regiments shall be raised, the army of the United States, regular and volunteer, will amount to some sixty or seventy thousand men.

The three German papers in Cincinnati published the President's Message in German, on the Thursday morning after its delivery. Thus, in about forty hours after it was sent into Congress, it was translated into German and printed at a distance of some 800 miles!

Maryland, within the last three years, has netted $68,000 of revenue by licensing and taxing lotteries, of which even European governments have refused to partake of the infamy since 1810 or '12.

All the New York State officers chosen at the last general election, (except Canal Commissioner Cook and Prison Inspector Gedney,) were introduced to their respective departments on New Year's Day, and took the usual oath of office.

Major I. McMickin, of Pottsville, Pa., has received the appointment of Post Master of the City of Mexico, with a salary of one hundred and fifty dollars per month.

A man named Shaw, near Cleveland, has invented a new style of spectacles. He has been successful in combining three sets of lenses in such a manner, that they can be readily adapted to seven distinct focal distances.

The Messenger says:—We recently announced the donation of $500 from a gentleman in New York, for colportage in Mexico. Another liberal donor in Baltimore has forwarded $250 for the same object.

An officer, writing from Mexico, says every thing is high in that city; he paid $40 for a new coat, a pair of shoes cost $4, a pound of tea $5, and every thing in proportion.

A new kind of penny has been lately issued from the English mint. It is a center of silver with a copper rim, with the inscription, model penny.

Thirty-four hands, in the slaughtering establishment of Messrs. Hand & Pattison, at Cincinnati, killed and dressed in three successive days 3,424 hogs.

Mr. Page, the popular and esteemed Principal of the Normal School at Albany, died Jan. 1st, universally lamented.

The large stone cotton factory at Fitchville, Conn., on the Colchester road, was destroyed by fire, on the 30th ult. Insured for $80,000.

Edwin Forrest is building a Gothic castle on the banks of the Hudson, near Kingsbridge. It is to cost $50,000.

A residence building at Quebec for the Roman Catholic Bishop, will cost, it is said, $200,000.

The new engine on the Western Railroad—the North Carolina—came into Springfield from the west, with a train of 118 cars!

Barzilla Howard, of Portland, Me., has recovered $2,500 damages of a Dr. Grover for malpractice.

The reception of General Taylor cost the municipal authorities of New Orleans more than $9,000.

A private letter from St. Petersburg states that the produce of the Russian mines for the year 1846 was 76,000 lbs. of gold, and 54,000 lbs. of silver.

MARRIED,

In Brookfield, N. Y., Dec. 21st, by Eld. S. B. Crandall, Mr. CLARK MILLARD, of Bolivar, Allegany Co., and Miss MARY DENISON, of the former place.

In Brookfield, on the evening of the 25th, by the same, Mr. BENJAMIN MILLER, of West Edmeston, and Miss MARTHA B. COON, of Brookfield.

In Genesee, Allegany N. Y., on the 5th of September, by Eld. Henry P. Green, Mr. ELLERY CRANDALL, of Persia, Cattaraugus Co., to Miss ANGELINE KENYON, of Genesee.

By the same, Oct. 17th, Mr. EPHRAIM FAIRBANKS, of Madrid, St. Lawrence Co., to Miss PHEBE T. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee.

By the same, Nov. 27th, Mr. BENJAMIN F. BURDICK to Miss JULIA A. CRANDALL, both of Genesee.

In Genesee, on the 21st of Nov., by Wm. P. Langworthy, Esq., Mr. JOSEPH BALLARD to Miss ORINDA DODSON, both of the town of Wirt, N. Y.

DIED,

In Milton, W. T., Dec. 4th, of quick consumption, SOPHRONIA TODD, wife of Julius M. Todd, aged 29 years. Sister Todd embraced religion when young, and became a member of the first-day Baptist Church, of which she was regarded as a worthy member. In the spring of 1842, she embraced the Sabbath. At the time of her death she was a living member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Milton, who will greatly feel the loss. Sister Todd had been for several years in a declining state of health, and toward the close of life she endured severe suffering with Christian fortitude. She called her companion to the bed-side and requested him to read the 486th hymn in the Seventh-day Baptist Collection, which she wished to have sung at the grave. She also selected the 57th verse of the 15th chapter of first Corinthians as the text for her funeral. After making other arrangements for her funeral, she fell asleep in Jesus. Z. C.

In Milton, W. T., Nov. 16th, SARAH A. M. COON, wife of Nathan L. Coon, aged 22 years. Sister Coon had been an observer of the Sabbath for the last three years, and was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Albion. Z. C.

LETTERS.

Maxson Green, Andrew Babcock, E. D. Barker, Z. Campbell, Lucius Crandall, Calvin Waldo, Wm. P. Langworthy, Ephraim Maxson, G. W. Hinkly, J. Angell, D. North.

RECEIPTS.

Albert Potter, Alfred,	$2 00	pays to vol. 4	No. 52
Erastus A. Green, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Samuel Pierce, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Wm. M. Saunders, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Nathan Maxson, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
Albert Smith, "	2 00	" 6	" 10
J. Crandall, Little Genesee,	4 00	" 4	" 52
Joel Maxson, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Henry P. Green, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
George Potter, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
J. A. Langworthy, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Palermo Lackey, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Lewis J. Coon, "	1 00	" 3	" 52
Patten Fitch, Jr., Brookfield,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Ethan Stillman, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Clarke Burdick, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
Nancy Burdick, Leonardsville,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Morgan Calkins, Perry,	1 00	" 4	" 52
Calvin Waldo, Edinburgh, Pa.	2 00	" 5	" 52
Henry Chipman, Mystic, Ct.	2 00	" 4	" 52
E. D. Barker, Newport, R. I.	2 00	" 4	" 52
Keturah C. Barker, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
S. Dunham, Metouchin, N. J.	2 00	" 4	" 52
C. H. Breece, "	2 00	" 4	" 52
I. Compton, "	2 00	" 4	" 52

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.
CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.
26tf. E. H. WILCOX, PROPRIETOR.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!
CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847-8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:
First commencing Wednesday, Aug. 25, and ending Dec. 1
Second " " Dec. 15, " March 22
Third " " April 5, " July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to $5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing 1 00
" Painting 2 00
" Piano Music 8 00
" Use of Instrument 2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture, 1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!
Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.
CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. Complete in two imperial octavo volumes, of more than fourteen hundred pages of double column letter-press: and upwards of three hundred elegant illustrations. Price $5 00

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

In addition to the great number of pictorial illustrations in the English edition, the American publishers have greatly enriched the work by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron, a full length portrait of Dr. Johnson, and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson.

These important additions to the American edition, together with a better paper and binding than the English, must give this a decided preference with the American reader.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—JP Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

From the Gem of the Season for 1848.

LAY OF THE WOUNDED HEART.

BY FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH.

O chide me not for weeping—
She's still the same to me,
Though she has long been sleeping
Beneath the willow tree.
That name, so lightly spoken,
Falls sadly on my ear—
Deem not that Death hath broken
A spell so strong, so dear.

Can the cold grave e'er smother
The heart's first, warmest flame?—
That heart enshrine another,
And still love on the same?—
Say not, she early perished,
As flowers in autumn die;
Say not the form I cherished
Dwells where her ashes lie.

No—oft when tears are flowing,
As tears are flowing now,
And Life's chill winds are blowing
Fiercely upon my brow,
That loved one, who before me
Flew to her native sky,
Is bending fondly o'er me,
As in bright years gone by.

How thin the curtain hiding
The spirit world from me!
How oft, like shadows gliding,
That cherished form I see!
My God! I thank thee ever,
That friends so fond and true
Not e'en the grave can sever,
Or shroud from human view.

Now comes she near and nearer!
Welcome, my spirit bride!
Methinks she should be dearer
Than erst before she died.
What though she has been sleeping
Long 'neath the willow tree,
Yet chide me not for weeping—
She's still the same to me!

From Chambers' Miscellany.

ANECDOTES OF THE HORSE AND THE ASS.

Occasionally equine attachment exhibits itself in a light as exalted and creditable as that of the human mind. During the peninsular war, the trumpeter of a French cavalry corps had a fine charger assigned to him, of which he became passionately fond, and which, by gentleness of disposition, and uniform docility, equally evinced its affection. The sound of the trumpeter's voice, the sight of his uniform, or the twang of his trumpet, was sufficient to throw this animal into a state of excitement; and he appeared to be pleased and happy only when under the saddle of his rider. Indeed he was unruly and useless to everybody else; for once, on being removed to another part of the forces, and consigned to a young officer, he resolutely refused to perform his evolutions, and bolted straight to the trumpeter's station, and there took his stand, jostling alongside his former master. This animal, on being restored to the trumpeter, curried him, during several of the peninsular campaigns, through many hair-breadth escapes. At last the corps to which he belonged was worsted, and in the confusion of retreat, the trumpeter was mortally wounded. Dropping from his horse, his body was found many days after the engagement, stretched on the sward, with the faithful charger standing beside it. During the long interval, it seems that he had never quitted the trumpeter's side, but had stood sentinel over his corpse, scaring away the birds of prey, and remaining totally heedless of his own privations. When found he was in a sadly reduced condition, partly from loss of blood through wounds, but chiefly from want of food, of which, in the excess of his grief, he could not be prevailed on to partake.

The generally received opinion, that asses are stubborn and intractable, alike unmoved by harsh or affectionate usage, is in a great measure unfounded, as appears from the following anecdote, related in Church's Cabinet of Quadrupeds. In most instances, their stubbornness is the result of bad treatment—a fact that says less for the humanity and intelligence of man, than for the natural disposition of the brute. An old man, who a few years ago sold vegetables in London, used in his employment an ass, which conveyed his baskets from door to door. Frequently he gave the poor industrious creature a handfull of hay, or a piece of bread, or greens, by way of refreshment or reward. He had no need of any goad for the animal, and seldom, indeed, had he to lift up his hand to drive it on. His kind treatment was one day remarked to him, and he was asked whether his beast was apt to be stubborn. "Ah! master," replied he, "it is of no use to be cruel, and as for stubbornness, I cannot complain; for he is ready to do anything, and go anywhere. I bred him myself. He is sometimes skittish and playful, and once ran away from me; you will hardly believe it, but there were more than fifty people after him, yet he turned of himself, and never stopped till he ran his head kindly into my bosom."

The ass, like his congener, the horse, is also sometimes influenced by the most determined revenge. At Salwell, in 1825, an ass was ferociously attacked by a bull dog; but the poor animal defended himself so gallantly with his heels—keeping his rear always presented to his assailant—that the dog was unable to fix on him. He at length turned rapidly round on his adversary, and caught hold of him with his teeth, in such a manner that the dog was unable to retaliate. Here the dog howled most repentantly, and one would have thought that the ass would have dismissed him with this punishment; but no; he dragged the enemy to the river Derwent, into which he put him over the head, and lying down upon him, kept him under water till he was drowned.

Gregarious when wild, the horse retains his sociable disposition undiminished by domestication and bondage. "My neighbor's horse," says White of Selborne, "will not only not stay by himself abroad, but he will not bear to be left alone in a strange stable without discovering the utmost impatience, and endeavoring to break the rack and manger with his fore-feet. He has been known to leap out a stable-window, through which dung was thrown, after company; and yet in other respects he is remarkably quiet." The same disposition characterises, less or more, every member of the family. Many horses, though quiet in company, will not stay one minute in a field by themselves; and yet the presence of a cow, of a goat, or a pet lamb, will perfectly satisfy them. The attachments which they thus form are often curious and inexplicable.

A gentleman of Bristol had a greyhound, which slept in the stable along with a very fine hunter, of about five years of age. These animals became mutually attached, and regarded each other with the most tender affection. The greyhound always lay under the manger beside the horse, which was so fond of him, that he became unhappy and restless when the dog was out of his sight. It was a common practice with the gentleman to whom they belonged, to call at the stable for the greyhound to accompany him in his walks; on such occasions the horse would look over his shoulder at the dog with much anxiety, and neigh in a manner which plainly said—"Let me also accompany you." When the dog returned to the stable, he was always welcomed by a loud neigh—he ran up to the horse and licked his nose; in return, the horse would scratch the dog's back with his teeth. One day, when the groom was out with his horse and greyhound for exercise, a large dog attacked the latter, and quickly bore him to the ground; on which the horse threw back his ears, and, in spite of all the efforts of his groom, rushed at the strange dog that was worrying at the greyhound, seized him by the back with his teeth, which speedily made him quit his hold, and shook him till a large piece of the skin gave way. The offender no sooner got on his feet, then he judged it prudent to beat a precipitate retreat from so formidable an opponent.

◆

SKETCHES OF YOUNG MEN.

William Pitt, the first earl of Chatham, was but 27 years of age, when, as a member of Parliament, he waged the war of a giant against the corruptions of Sir Robert Walpole.

The younger Pitt was scarcely 20 years of age, when, with masterly power, he grappled with the veterans of Parliament, in favor of America. At the age of 22 he was called to the high and responsible trust of chancellor of the exchequer. It was at that age that he came forth in his might on the affairs of the East Indies. At 29, during the first insanity of George III., he rallied around the Prince of Wales.

Edmund Burke, at the age of 19, planned a refutation of the metaphysical theories of Burkley and Hume. At 20 he was in the temple, the admiration of its inmates, for the brilliancy of his genius and the variety of his acquisitions. At 26 he published his celebrated satire, entitled "A Vindication of Natural Society." The same year he published his Essay on the Sublime and Beautiful—so much admired for its spirit of philosophical investigation and the elegance of its language. At 25 he was first lord of the treasury.

George Washington was only 27 years of age when he covered the retreat of the British troops at Braddock's defeat, and the same year was appointed commander-in-chief of all the Virginia forces.

General Joseph Warren was only 29 years of age, when, in defiance of the British soldiers stationed at the door of the church, he pronounced the celebrated oration which aroused the spirit of liberty and patriotism that terminated in the achievement of Independence. At 34 he fell, gallantly fighting in the cause of freedom on Bunker Hill.

Alexander Hamilton was a lieutenant-colonel in the army of the American Revolution, and aid-de-camp to Washington at the age of 20. At the age of 25 he was a member of Congress from New York; at 30 he was one of the ablest members of the Convention that formed the Constitution of the United States. At 31 he was a member of the New York Convention, and joint author of the work entitled the "Federalist." At 32 he was Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and arranged the financial branch of the government upon so perfect a plan, that no great improvement has ever been made upon it by his successors.

◆

HINTS TO PEOPLE OF MODERATE FORTUNE.

BY MRS. L. M. CHILD.

If you are about to furnish a house, do not spend all your money, be it much or little. Do not let the beauty of this thing, and the cheapness of that, tempt you to buy unnecessary articles. Dr. Franklin's maxim was a wise one; "Nothing is cheap which we do not want."

Buy merely what is absolutely necessary, and let experience of your wants and your means dictate what shall be afterwards obtained. If you spend all at first, you will find you have bought many things you do not want, and omitted many you do want. Begin cautiously. As riches increase, it is easy to increase in hospitality and splendor; but it is always painful and inconvenient to decrease. After all, these things are viewed in their proper light by the judicious and respectable. Neatness, tastefulness and good sense may be shown in the management of a small household, and the arrangement of a little furniture, as well as upon a larger scale. The consideration gained by living beyond one's income, is not actually worth the trouble it costs. The glare there is about such false, wicked parade, is deceptive; it does not, in fact, procure valuable friends, or extensive influence. More than that, it is wrong—morally wrong, so far as the individual is concerned; and injurious, beyond calculation, to the interests of our country. To what are the increasing beggary and discouraged exertions of the present day owing? A multitude of causes no doubt tend to increase the evils, but the root of the whole matter is the extravagance of all classes of people! We never shall be prosperous, till we have sufficient moral courage to make pride and vanity yield to the dictates of honesty and prudence! We never shall be free from embarrassment, till we cease to be ashamed of industry and economy! Let woman aid in the needed reformation. Let their husbands and fathers see them happy without finery; and if these friends have (as is often the case) a foolish pride in seeing them decorated, let them silently and gradually check this feeling, by showing that they have better means of commanding respect. Let the exercise of ingenuity, economy and neatness, prove that good taste and gentility are attainable without great expense.

◆

The cure of an evil tone must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion.

PROVERBS FOR THE WISE.

1. When thou enterest a printing office, have a care to thyself, that thou touch not the type; for thou mayst cause the printer much trouble.

2. Look not at the copy which is in the compositor's hands; for that is not meet in the sight of the printer.

3. Neither examine the proof-sheet; for it is not ready to meet thine eye, that thou mayest read it clearly.

4. When thou proposest to write for a paper, never send beforehand to the editor to inquire whether he will admit thy article; for thou dost not inquire wisely concerning this. He will let thee know when he has first read thy article.

5. When thou dost write for his paper, never say unto him, "What thinkest thou of my piece?" for the truth might offend thee.

6. It is not fit that thou shouldst ask him who is the author of any article; for his duty often requires him to keep such things to himself.

7. Never say to the publisher that thou wilt take his paper, if he will send it to thee on conditions differing from his published terms, lest he be tempted to do an unwise thing, or to think less highly of thee.

8. It is not wise for thee to say, "Stop my paper," because of something which does not quite please thee, for this not a rule by which thou thyself would wish to be treated, and it shows thee to be a person of violent and hasty temper.

9. Neither is it meet for thee to endeavor to intimidate the editor from his course by threatening him with the loss of his subscribers, but it is better to correct him kindly, and faithfully pray for him.

10. Do not think thyself slighted, if thy name does not appear in the paper on every public occasion; for in so doing, thou wilt take counsel of thy pride, and disquiet thy soul.

11. Remember that the cares of the editor are great, therefore make thy calls upon him short, and never occupy his time without some important object.

◆

THE RICHEST MEN.—Louis Phillippe, the King of the French, is reputed to be worth fifty millions of dollars. Sir Robert Peel is said to possess an estate valued at ninety millions of dollars. The valuation of John Jacob Astor's possessions is thirty millions of dollars.

The French monarch has lived three-quarters of a century, but old as he is, he dare not take the air in his own capital without calling up fifty thousand soldiers to guard the streets through which he may pass. The labor which he performs would render any man a slave; although the work he has performed and the keen foresight he has exercised, would have given any man wealth and distinction. Sir Robert Peel is the son of a cotton spinner, and one of the mental giants of the world. The load of care that he bears about, would crush an army of common men. He is about sixty years of age, and is likely to do England much good service yet. Mr. Astor is now in his second childhood.

◆

THE EARL AND THE FARMER.—A farmer called on Earl Fitzwilliam, and complained that in his hunting excursions with his hounds, he had trodden down a field of wheat so as to do it damage. The earl told him if he would procure an estimate of the loss he would pay it. The man informed him that he had done so already, and it was believed the damage would be fifty pounds. The earl paid it. But, as spring came on, the wheat which had been trodden down, grew up, and became the best in the field. The farmer honestly returned the fifty pounds. "Ah," said the earl, "this is what I like. This is as it ought to be between man and man." After making some inquiries about his family, the earl went into another room, and returning, gave the man a check for one hundred pounds, saying, "Take care of this, and when your eldest son is of age, present it to him, and tell him the occasion that produced it."

◆

WESLEY'S LIBERALITY.—Perhaps no Englishman, since the days of Bernard Gilpin, has given so much away as did John Wesley. When his income was thirty pounds a year, he lived on twenty-eight, and saved two for charity. Next year he had sixty pounds, and still living on twenty-eight, he had thirty-two to spend. A fourth year raised his income to a hundred and twenty pounds, and steadfast to his plan, the poor got ninety-two. In the year 1775, the Accountant-General sent him a copy of the Excise Order for a return of Plate: "Rev. Sir,—As the Commissioners cannot doubt but you have plate, for which you have hitherto neglected to make an entry, &c.;" to which he wrote this memorable answer: "Sir—I have two silver tea-spoons at London, and two at Bristol. This is all the plate which I have at present; and I shall not buy any more while so many around me want bread. I am, Sir, your most humble servant, JOHN WESLEY."

◆

BEDS IN INDIA.—A person would imagine that every body is very fidgetty at night, and rolls and tosses about a great deal in the very hot weather. To render ourselves more comfortable at such times, we have a number of pillows of all shapes and sizes, and hardness, scattered over the bed. At one roll you lay your leg on one and your arm on another, and then you turn over to the other side, and then, throwing your feet on to one pillow, you hold another fast under your arm; that won't do, and you roll over on your back, with one pillow under your knee and another under each arm, and so on through the night. "I assure you," says Mr. Ackland, "that however absurd it may appear, this multiplicity of pillows is a very great comfort on very hot nights, although when you awake you certainly often find yourself and them in very funny positions."

◆

THE NOBLE GUEST WITHIN.—There is a noble guest within us. O! let all our business be to entertain him honorably, and to live in celestial love within, that will make things without be very contemptible in our eyes. I should rove on did I not stop myself, it falling out well, too for that, to be hard upon the past hours ere I thought of writing. Therefore good night is all I add; for whatsoever hour it comes to your hand, I believe you are as sensible as I, that it is still night; but the comfort is, it draws nigh towards that bright morning that shall make amends. Your weary fellow pilgrim.

[Leighton.

VARIETY.

Excellent breakfast cakes can be made in the following manner: Mix two quarts of corn meal, at night, with water, and a little yeast and salt, and make it just thin enough to stir easy. In the morning stir three or four eggs, a little saleratus, and a cup of sour milk, so as to leave it thin enough to pour out of a pan; bake three-quarters of an hour, and you will have light, rich, honey-comb cakes—and with a good cup of coffee and sweet butter at breakfast, one finds with Hamlet, "increase of appetite to grow with what it feeds on."

It is asserted in the "Transactions of the Society of Arts," that there is great advantage in fattening geese, turkeys, and, in short, fowls of every description, on potatoes mixed with meal. On this diet they are said to fatten in less than one-half the time ordinarily required to bring them to the same condition of excellence on any kind of corn or even meal itself. The potatoes must be boiled, and mashed fine while they are hot, and the meal added just before the food is to be presented.

There is a large tribe of Indians in New Mexico, who live on a sort of grasshoppers, or wingless locust, which they dry, pulverize, and knead into a kind of cake which they bake, and which is not bad eating. The wild horses which traverse the plains of California and New Mexico in vast troops, the descendants of the war horse introduced by the Spanish discoverers and conquerors, are becoming more highly prized and sought out. By some they are used as food. The early settlers of Oregon fed on their flesh and found it quite palatable and nourishing. They called it "Columbia beef."

At a meeting of the British Association a few years ago at Glasgow, a paper was read by Mr. Hodgkinson, describing a series of experiments made by him on the strength of iron pillars. It appeared, from these, that a pillar, square at the top and bottom, is about three times as strong as one rounded at the ends; that if the pillars are not placed perpendicular, at least two-thirds of their strength is lost; and that they are one-seventh stronger when swelled in the middle, like the frustrum of a cone, with the base in the centre of the pillar.

Dr. Bushnell says:—"If something could be done to civilize the manner of American politics, to abate the rudeness of political animosities, to establish candor and courtesy, and dignity of feeling, between opposing parties and their leaders, it would greatly expedite the progress of refinement in our people. And I know of no more ready or proper expedient, than for every Christian man to look at the most interior merits of every cause or question, and stand ready to support the right, bear what name it may."

Dr. Scott says, that the present sticklers for Atheism consist chiefly of such as never troubled themselves so much as to understand the first principles of religion. Their study hath been employed another way, viz., in courtly forms of speech, and punctilious action; in fashionable garbs, and artificial luxuries. But as for the severer and more useful studies, they bequeath them to the dull men of sense and reason.

Memory is the highest gift; we do not feel it to be so, because we only partially lose it, and generally retain it in great things; but let a man every moment forget others, and then see what he would be. We are the creatures of the past, therefore of memory. To deprive us of memory, would be to thrust us naked, destitute, into the mere present, only the moment after to strip us of memory again.

Col. Jaques of Boston, says he has an infallible rule for distinguishing young poultry from old, in the market. The tail-pieces of young poultry are connected to the body by a small neck, presenting an appearance as if a string had been drawn tightly around that part of the body. As poultry grow older, this neck gradually enlarges till in the course of time it becomes no neck at all.

"How do you contrive to raise your rent?" said a lazy tavern-lounger to an industrious, thriving farmer. "Why, sir," said the latter, "I put my plough into the ground, and after it is well broken up I drop seed, and then I raise potatoes, wheat, corn, cabbages, parsnips, and —the RENT."

The present population of Wisconsin is estimated at from 210,000 to 230,000; and it has, in point of numbers, precedence of six states in the Union. It is thought that the population in 1850 will fall very little short of 500,000; and this estimate will not be deemed unreasonable, when it is recollected that there were but 3,245 souls in the territory only seventeen years age

The Philadelphia Gleaner says: "We yesterday saw a letter from a distinguished physician in London, to another in this city, in which the writer alluded to one of his patients, a lady of 35, who had had 32 children at 13 births, namely: 4 twice, 3 three times, while most of the others were twins. This beats the case of the German mother who had 32 daughters at 16 births."

Rev. Hinds Howell, of Bridestone, (England,) a Tractarian, refused to let the corps, of a liberal and benevolent gentleman, J. G. Newton, Esq. be taken into the church during the reading of the funeral service, because he had 'two dissenting meeting-houses standing on his lands.'

The rose is sweetest when it first opens, and the spikenard roots when the head dies. Beauty belongs to youth, and dies with it; but the odor of piety survives death and perfumes the tomb.

The Batavia Times says that if a tea-spoon full of salt, or what you can take up between the thumb and two fingers, be dropped into the centre of a cabbage, scarcely one in a hundred will fail of having a good head.

There are two things which ought to teach us to think but meanly of human glory; the very best have had their calumniators, the very worst their panegyrists.

Many men are reserved and shy before some, while they are free and open to others, resembling in this respect doors which only certain keys will unlock.

The best cough drops for young ladies are to drop the practice of dressing thin when they go out in the night air.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the psess of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

ALFRED, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 30. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JANUARY 13, 1848. WHOLE NO. 186.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since. [Continued.

But another prediction has been pressed into the service of those who justify existing usages. In the language of one at whose feet not a few of the church's present teachers sat, "It has been supposed that the change of the day is predicted in the following words of Ezekiel, when he is giving a description of the mystical temple, which may be considered as a figure of the Christian Church: 'Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves. And when these doings are expired, it shall be that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.'* This language is symbolical; the allusions are to the ceremonial services of the temple. Something is manifestly predicted which was never literally fulfilled; but as the whole refers to a new state of things, the mention of the eighth day, as the day of solemn sacrifices, may well be considered as an intimation that the eighth day in order from the beginning of the Jewish week, or the Christian Sabbath, was henceforth to be holy to the Lord." Dick's Lectures, vol. 4, p. 44.

The Doctor, indeed, very modestly says, in reference to his view, "it has been supposed" to be warranted; but he advances with a little more confidence, as he draws towards his conclusion, the assertion that it "may well be considered as an intimation" of the change of the Sabbath. But neither a supposition, nor a dubious apprehension, are sufficient in an important article of faith and practice; and others, therefore, have more boldly maintained the text to be a distinct revelation from heaven, appointing the first day of the week as the Sabbath. Of this number was the respected author of "The Protestant," whose gloss, in the exercises of a Sunday school, we confess, with shame, at an early period to have received, and long after to have retained, when no other text seemed to warrant the idea. Enlarged acquaintance with the import of Scripture Prophecy, in its manifold revelations, and a closer examination of this prediction in particular, satisfied us, as we are convinced will be the case with others, that it contains no authority whatever for a first-day Sabbath.

Still "it has been supposed," and by some is "considered as an intimation" to that effect, and it behoves us, therefore, to point to circumstances calculated to dispel the delusion. Let us, then, remember that while confessedly any allusion to the Sabbath in the verses quoted is obscure, this same prophet Ezekiel, under the commission of his master, does in other cases, (in chapter 20 and 22 especially,) in no obscure or dubious form, testify against the sin of Israel in polluting the Sabbath. Can we, then, suppose that, amid the numerous open denunciations of Israel's sin in violating the fourth commandment, there is placed an intimation couched in obscure terms, in which the Sabbath is not even named, an expression of the divine changing in a most important point that very commandment? This remark has the more force when we observe that in the same vision from which the objector culls his supposed allusion to the change, there is express prediction, repeatedly made, of what is to be done upon "the Sabbath day," referring to it by the same title, as altogether unchanged. Ezek. 46: 1, 3, 12.

We say "express prediction, repeatedly made, of what is to be done upon the Sabbath day," because while we agree with Dr. Dick that this is a prediction which hitherto "was never literally fulfilled," we differ from him by believing that yet at a future time it will be so accomplished. The fact that obviously it has not yet been fulfilled, instead of warranting us to put upon it a meaning which the language cannot bear, leads us to the conclusion, justified by every part of the prediction, that it relates not to the present but the future. "Faithful is He that has promised," and though the vision tarry, yet will we wait for it. All the statements plainly imply that they are to be understood in their simple and obvious sense; while the context proves, as we shall yet have occasion to show, that the Sabbath which the Lord at first sanctified and blessed, shall be faithfully observed, "when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

The Doctor does but imperfectly quote the text, as do others who have the same object in view. We, therefore, cite more at length for the purpose of bringing out more truly its meaning. "And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God; These are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it, to offer burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon. And thou shalt give to the priests the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok, which approach unto me, to minister unto me, saith the Lord God, a young bullock for a sin offering. And thou shalt take of the blood thereof, and put it on the four horns of it, and on the four corners of the settle, and upon the border round about; thus shalt thou cleanse and purge it. Thou shalt take the bullock also of the sin offering, and he shall burn it in the appointed place of the house, without the sanctuary. And on the second day thou shalt offer a kid of the goats without blemish for a sin offering; and they shall cleanse the altar, as they did cleanse it with the bullock. When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish. And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt offering unto the Lord. Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin offering; they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock, without blemish. Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves. And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God." Ezek. 43: 18—27.

Will our friends who suppose a change of the Sabbath to be intimated in the close of the quotation, again look at the prophecy as thus more fully cited? Surely every thing introduced betokens a prediction intended to be understood in the natural meaning of the language employed. The prophet is informed that "these are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they SHALL make it," implying a real altar, and also, that the making of it is future. The object in view is "to offer burnt-offerings thereon, and to sprinkle blood thereon." The altar has "four horns," a settle, and border, with "four corners." The sacrifices are "a young bullock without blemish," "a ram out of the flock," and "a kid of the goats;" offered both as "a sin offering" and as "a burnt offering;" "and the priests shall cast salt upon them." These priests are selected; they are "the Levites that be of the seed of Zadok." These offerings are repeated during seven days for the cleansing of the altar; and the acceptance of the sacrifices upon the altar afterwards, "upon the eighth day, and so forward," is the promise upon which our friends lay hold as a predicted change of the Sabbath! All the statements of the text are in perfect accordance with other predictions given to the children of Israel. "And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord; if ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites, the priests, my ministers." Jer. 33: 19—21. We have already referred to Deut. 30, as likewise foretelling the future reöbservance of the Mosaic ritual by the Israelites after their restoration, of which other prophecies speak with equal explicitness. Instead, therefore, of making a change of the Sabbath, where none is foretold, we believe that the ordinances of the altar and the Sabbath will be again observed in the land of the Lord by His peculiar people. [To be continued.

---

* Ezek. 43: 26, 27.

THE WIFE OF RICHARD BAXTER.

In his earlier years, Baxter avowed opinions that seemed to forbid his ever wearing the garland yoke of matrimony. A singular train of providential events, however, led this stickler for clerical celibacy into a submission to the kindly influences of conjugal love, and the later years of his troubled life were cheered by the glow which woman's deep and hallowed attachment can so well throw upon the darkest earthly scenery. Margaret Charlton, a woman of high respectability, both as to birth, natural endowments, and the gifts of fortune, became the pupil of the venerable non-conformist. In severe affliction he administered spiritual advice and consolation; in returning health he gladly continued his friendly offices; admiration on her part gradually deepened into a softer feeling; and although a vast disparity both of age and outward circumstances seemed to forbid a union,—he near fifty, she not twenty-one; he the victim of poverty, persecution, and bodily suffering; she lovely, accomplished, surrounded by the elegances of life and the smiles of the world,—yet it actually took place. It is said, that Margaret first felt, or first betrayed, an affection which had insensibly grown out of the communings of lofty minds of kindred mould and companionship in works of mercy, such as angels love to join in.

A writer in the Edinburgh Review gives the following sketch of her character:

"Timid, gentle, and reserved, and nursed amid the luxuries of her age, her heart was the abode of affection so intense, and of a fortitude so enduring, that her meek spirit, impatient of one selfish wish, progressively acquired all the heroism of benevolence, and seemed at length incapable of one selfish fear. In prison, in sickness, in evil report, in every form of danger and fatigue, she was still with unabated cheerfulness at the side of him to whom she had pledged her conjugal faith,—prompting him to the discharge of every duty, calming the asperities of his temper, his associate in unnumbered acts of philanthropy, embellishing his humble home by the little arts with which a cultivated mind imparts its own gracefulness to the meanest dwelling place,—and during the nineteen years of their union, joining with him in one unbroken strain of filial affiance to the divine mercy, and of grateful adoration to the divine goodness. Her tastes and habits had been moulded into a perfect conformity to his. He celebrates her catholic charity to the opponents of their religious opinions, and her inflexible adherence to her own; her high esteem of the active and passive virtues of a Christian life as contrasted with a barren orthodoxy; her noble disinterestedness, her skill in casuistry, her love of music, and her medicinal arts. Their union afforded to her the daily delight of supporting in his gigantic labors, and of soothing in his unremitted cares, a husband who repaid her tenderness with unceasing love and gratitude. To him it gave a friend whose presence was tranquility; who tempered by her milder wisdom, and graced by her superior elegance, and exalted by her more confiding piety, whatever was austere, or rude, or distrustful in his rugged character."

And the whole story stands out to observation, like a green spot in the weary wastes of professional life—a beautiful bay, sheltered from the storm and tempest. It reaches the nobleness of woman's character, and points out her true vocation.

SPEAK NOT HARSHLY.

BY MISS JULIA A. FLETCHER.

Speak not harshly—much of care
Every human heart must bear;
Enough of shadows sadly play
Around the very sunniest way;
Enough of sorrows darkly lie,
Veiled within the merriest eye.
By thy childhood's gushing tears—
By the griefs of after years—
By the anguish thou dost know,
Add not to another's woe.

Speak not harshly—much of sin
Dwelleth every heart within;
In its closely-covered cells,
Many a wayward passion dwells.
By the many hours misspent—
By the gifts to Error lent—
By the wrong thou didst not shun—
By the good thou hast not done—
With a lenient spirit scan
The weakness of thy brother man.

From the People's Journal.

THE HOLY LAND.—BY HARRIET MARTINEAU.

JACOB'S WELL AND THE SAMARITANS.

The next morning, we saw the Mediterranean, like a basin of deep blue water between two hills. We were not going towards it, however, but to Nablons, the ancient Sychar; where lies that Jacob's well at which the woman of Samaria was wont to draw water.

Our road lay through a most fertile valley now called Hawarrah, where the crops were splendid for miles, and the villages were thickly planted an the hills. The ground rose in a series of table-lands, of which there was a succession of three, when we were leaving the rich Hawarrah valley. The roads in this part of the Holy Land were mere lanes full of stones between walls, or tracks through olive grounds and meadows, or paths running along shelves of the rocks, with a bit of rock staircase at each end, about ascending or descending which our good horses made no difficulty.

Before entering the valley where old Sychar lay between the mountains of Ebal and Gerizim, we came to the fine fertile parcel of ground which Jacob bought. The valley opens out into this wide basin; and near the junction of the valley and the basin is the old well which is the supposed scene of the conversation of Jesus with the Samaritan woman. Some of our party wound round the base of the hill to the well; and some (I for one) rode by the upper path, over the shoulder of the hill, and came down on the other side. I had thus a fine view of the whole locality; of the valley where the city lies—a narrow valley, rich with fig and olive groves, and overhung by the rocky bases of Ebal and Gerizim, where the square black entrances of tombs dotted the strata of the rocks. From this hight, Jacob's land looked a beautiful expanse. The well is a mere rough heap of stones, with a hole in the middle, nearly closed up. What there is below-ground, I cannot say; but this is all that is to be seen on the surface. It is not a well likely to be in use now, for there are many springs and shallow cisterns (though no well) between this and the town, which lies about a mile and a half off.

Everybody knows that the Jews had no friendly dealings with the Samaritans in the time of Jesus. The quarrel had then lasted above 500 years. How many suns had gone down upon their wrath! The Samaritans had wished to assist the Jews in rebuilding the temple of Jerusalem; but the Jews hated them as a mixed race, and would not admit that they had any right to share in temple worship, or any other Jewish privileges. It really was a most serious objection to the Samaritans, that they were of a mixed race; not only because the Jews believed that they held the promises on the very ground of the purity of their race; but because the intermarriages of the former Samaritan Israelites with Assyrians and others disposed them to idolatry, or at least to a worship as mixed as their race. So the Samaritans were excluded from the rebuilding of the temple, above 500 years B. C. And not being permitted to help, they did all they could to hinder. About 100 years after, they obtained leave from the Persian court, (to which both the Jews and they were subject,) to build a second temple to Jehovah; and they built it on Mount Gerizim. This was a shocking impiety in the sight of the Jews; and it was the occasion of a number of lax-minded Jews, who had broken the law, by marrying heathen wives, or otherwise, and who yet wished to worship Jehovah in his temple, resorting to Sychar, to join the Samaritans, and render their race yet more mixed. This was the quarrel which the woman of Samaria referred to when she spoke of the question, whether "men ought to worship in this mountain or in Jerusalem!" and thus is explained her wonder that Jesus, being a Jew, should ask water of her who was a Samaritan. There was also a quarrel about their scriptures; the Jews insisting to this day, that the Samaritans had altered two or three texts, relating to these two mountains, Ebal and Gerizim, in their own sacred copy of the books of Moses; the Samaritans insisting, of course, that theirs was the true copy.

From my early youth, I had always taken a strong interest in this old quarrel, feeling sympathy with both parties, and a keen delight in the wise and soothing words of Jesus concerning it. What a truth it was for both parties to hear, that God was now to be worshiped everywhere; and that all places were henceforth to be as sacred as the Jerusalem temple, or the mountain at Sychar! And what a lesson in liberality it was to the Jews, when he gave honor to the Samaritan in the parable, on account of his good works, above the sacred priest and the servant of the temple at Jerusalem. Both parties were, of course, wrong in their fierce anger; but each had much to plead on his own side. The Jews were bound to keep their race and worship pure, and held, as an essential matter of faith, that Jehovah would have but one dwelling-place; which was their view of their temple. And the Samaritans were surely right in persisting in their endeavor to worship Jehovah, in accordance with the laws of Moses, as they did not believe in strange gods; and, if the Jews could not admit them to worship in the temple at Jerusalem, they could not be blamed for building one for themselves.

Such was always my view of the matter; and such being my view, it was with indescribable interest that I looked this day upon Mount Gerizim, and remembered that somewhere in the city we were approaching, was treasured that sacred copy of the Samaritan Pentateuch, (Books of Moses,) which the possessors believe to be the true one, and to be 3,500 years old. The most learned men among the Christians do not believe it to be nearly so old as that; but they have a high opinion of its value, and would follow it sooner than any other, I believe, excepting in instances where the disputed texts about Ebal and Gerizim are concerned.

The present inhabitants of the city hate the Christians as heartily as the old inhabitants used to hate the Jews. The present inhabitants are Mohammedans of a most bigoted character; and they would admit neither Jews nor Christians within their gates, till within a few years; when the government of the country (then Egyptian) compelled them to better manners. They dared not refuse us admission; but they behaved with great insolence. We had to ride from end to end of the city, our tents being pitched on a green on the other side. Our horses had to go as slowly as possible through the narrow street, which would not hold two abreast, and was paved with large, slippery stones. As we rode along, one behind another, at this funeral pace, all the people came out to stare, and many to mock. Three times things were thrown in my face; men and women laughed and sneered, and children thrust out their tongues. I felt what a lesson this was to intolerance about matters of opinion. These people hold a faith which is very noble and beautiful; few of us know how noble and beautiful is the Mohammedan faith. And there is no need to say what their visitors thought of the Christian faith as they hold it; and yet, what a scene of hatred and misunderstanding was here! And thus it is, but too often, in the streets of other cities, where men ought to know better than to despise each other for worshiping the same God in a different manner. In the streets of other cities, men take upon themselves to pity and despise one another, with no better knowledge in reality of one another's views and feelings, than these Mohammedans had of ours, or we of theirs.

At last, we were through; and glad I was to issue from the gate at the farther end. But a sad sight awaited us there. A company of lepers were under the trees, crying out to us for charity, and stretching out their maimed hands. It is a terrible sight, which we see too often in this country. It saddened us at Jerusalem almost every day.

Our tents were pitched on a weedy plot of ground, among gardens, orchards, and rippling streams, and looking up to Ebal on the one side, and Gerizim on the other. Ebal is still the sterner looking mountain of the two; but Gerizim has lost much of its fertility. Both have tombs and votive buildings on them, which show them to have been places of pilgrimage.

After dinner, we ascended a hight, past the Mohammedan cemetery, whence we had a fine view, in the last sunlight, of this most beautiful city. It was once the capital of Samaria; and it is still, and must ever be, from its situation, a very striking place. It completely fills the valley, from side to side, and ascends a little way up the skirts of Garizim. Its houses, with their flat white roofs, are hedged in by the groves which surround the town; vines spread from court to court; two or three palms spring up in the midst, and higher aloft still a graceful minaret here and there.

Then, to my delight, we descended to seek the Samaritan synagogue. We were guided to it, and I saw nearly all the Samaritans of the place; good-looking people, the men wearing the high helmet-like turban which we see in the portraits of Josephus, and other old Jews. They said their number was sixty in this place, and about forty more elsewhere; only a hundred in the whole world. They declared their chief-priest and the rest of their sect to be at Genoa. They keep three great feasts in the year, going up to Gerizim as the Jews used to go up to the Temple.

The synagogue was a small, ordinary-looking chapel, within a curtained recess of which is kept the old copy of the Pentatuch. It was shown to us, after some entreaty on our part; but I found it was impossible that I could be allowed to touch it.

I felt it a great event to have seen it. It is written on a sort of vellum, in the Samaritan text, clear, small and even. The vellum is tattered; but it is well mounted on parchment. The priest himself dares not touch the MS. without careful purification; and he holds it by the ends of the rollers on which it is fixed as a scroll, like the copies of the Jewish law in synagogues.

We were lighted through the archways of the street, on our way home, and down the hill, by a single candle which burned steadily in the still air.

Our employment this evening was reading aloud the history of the Jewish and Samaritan controversy and the fourth chapter of the gospel of John. While we were thus reading in our tent, the jackal was in full cry on the slopes of Gerizim.

The Bible.—What sort of a book is this, that even the winds and waves of human passion obey it? What other engine of social improvement has operated so long, and yet lost none of its virtue? Since it appeared, many boasted plans of amelioration have been tried and failed; many codes of jurisprudence have arisen, and run their course, and expired. Empire after empire has been launched on the tide of time, and gone down, leaving no trace on the waters. But this book is still going about doing good—leavening society with its holy principles—cheering the sorrowful with its consolations—strengthening the tempted—encouraging the penitent—calming the troubled spirit—and smoothing the pillow of death. Can such a book be the offspring of human genius? Does not the vastness of its effects demonstrate the excellency of the power of God. [McCullough.

USEFUL HINTS TO PUBLIC SPEAKERS.

It is a curious fact in the history of sound, that the loudest noises always perish on the spot where they are produced, whereas musical notes will be heard at a great distance. Thus, if we approach within a mile or two of a town or village, in which a fair is held, we may hear very faintly the clamor of the multitude, but more distinctly the organs and other musical instruments which are played for their amusement. If a Cremona violin, a real Amati, be played by the side of a modern fiddle, the latter will sound much louder of the two; but the sweet brilliant tone of the Amati, will be heard at a distance the other cannot reach. Dr. Young, on the authority of Derham, states that, at Gibralter, the human voice is heard at the distance of ten miles. It is a well-known fact that the human voice may be heard at a greater distance than that of any other animal. Thus, when the cottager in the woods, or in the open plain, wishes to call her husband, who is working at a distance, she does not shout, but pitches her voice to a musical key, which she knows from habit, and by that means reaches his ear. The loudest roar of the largest lion could not penetrate so far. "This property of music in the human voice," says the author, "is strikingly shown in the cathedrals abroad. There the mass is entirely performed in musical sounds, and becomes audible to every devotee, however placed in the remotest part of the church; whereas, if the same mass had been read, the sounds would not have traveled beyond the precincts of the choir." Those orators who are heard in large assemblies most distinctly, and at the greatest distance, are those who, by modulating the voice, render it more musical. Loud speakers are seldom heard to advantage.

Burke's voice is said to have been a sort of lofty cry, which tended, as much as the formality of his discourse in the House of Commons, to send the members to their dinner. Chatham's lowest whisper was distinctly heard; "his middle tones were sweet, rich, and beautifully varied," says a writer, describing the orator; "when he raised his voice to its highest pitch, the house was completely filled with the volume of sound; and the effect was awful, except when he wished to cheer or animate—and then he had spirit-stirring notes, which were perfectly irresistible. The terrible, however, was his peculiar power. Then the house sunk before him; still he was dignified, and wonderful as was his eloquence, it was attended with this important effect, that it possessed every one with a conviction that there was something in him finer even than his words: that the man was greater, infinitely greater than the orator."

CONSISTENT PRAYING.

Said a good man, now gone to his reward, "I have almost lost my interest in the monthly concert of prayer." I expressed surprise, and asked the reason. He replied, "Our minister has done asking us to contribute to the missionary cause, and I can not pray unless I give; it seems like mocking God, to pray for the conversion of the world, and not send the gospel to the destitute." Here is good sense, as well as consistent piety. "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard?" To pray without effort is presumption; to labor without prayer is atheism. We must pray and labor, and labor and pray. Dear reader, are you one of those, who, having the ability, never contribute anything, or give almost nothing, to sustain home and foreign missions, and send Bibles, and religious books, and tracts, to the millions who are perishing without the means of grace? There will be a prayer-meeting outside the gate of heaven. Many will be there, and pray earnestly. God grant that neither you nor I may attend it! The petition will be, "Lord, Lord, open unto us." But it will be as unavailing as "Thy kingdom come," from him who only prays, but neither labors nor gives to make known the gospel of the Son of God.

PERSONAL HOLINESS.

Every individual should feel, that whilst his influence over other men's hearts and characters is very bounded, his power over his own heart is great and constant, and that his zeal for extending Christianity is to appear chiefly in extending it through his own mind and life. Let him remember that he as truly enlarges God's kingdom by invigorating his own moral and religious principles, as by communicating them to others. Our first concern is at home, our chief work is in our own breasts. It is idle to talk of our anxiety for other men's souls, if we neglect our own. Without personal virtue and religion, we cannot, even if we would, do much for the cause of Christ. It is only by purifying our own conceptions of God and duty, that we can give clear and useful views to others. We must first feel the power of religion, or we cannot recommend it with an unaffected and prevalent zeal. [Channing.

John Flavel preached a sermon on the text, "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha." When he was about to pronounce the apostolic benediction, he paused, and asked how he could pronounce a blessing over an assembly where there were possibly many persons under the dreadful curse denounced in the text. The effect was very powerful. One conversion took place on the spot. A lad was present, fifteen years old, who lived to the advanced age of one hundred and sixteen. He was converted when one hundred years old, by means of his vivid recollection of Flavel's sermon, and the incident above named.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 13, 1848.

SUNDAY PUBLICATIONS IN ENGLAND.

Of the numerous American clergymen who have visited England within a few years, several have published very flattering accounts of the manner in which the Sunday is there observed. They found the general post-office closed, and a very scrupulous attendance upon religious services among the persons belonging to the circle in which they moved; hence they concluded that things were about right, and reported accordingly. But a careful examination of the facts, in the case will show that there is in London a vast amount of what is called Sunday desecration—such an amount as gives them but little chance to boast over this country. The number of publications issued on Sunday, strikes us as being a very good indication of the popular regard for that day. Of these a correspondent of the New England Puritan, who seems to be familiar with the facts, says "it will be quite safe to affirm, that there are more newspapers and unstamped publication sold and circulated on the Lord's day than on the other six days put together." It appears from the stamp returns, that the regular issues of the daily press are only about 53,000, while three of the Sunday papers alone issue 103,000 every Sunday, to which should be added a large unstamped circulation. Or, says the writer in question, "we may view this subject in another light, and say, that, as almost all the twenty-eight millions of pernicious literature issuing from London, in one year, is published on or for Sunday, it may be safely affirmed that there are 500,000 Lord's day issues against 63,000 for any one day's isssue of the entire daily press; or 500,000 Lord's day issues against the whole week's issue to the daily press of 378,000!" Who can look at these facts, without feeling that there is a great deal yet to be done before the Sunday will be regarded in London as a Sabbath ought to be regarded? Who can say, in view of such facts, that the world is so well agreed about observing the Sunday, that it is unwise to advocate a return to the Sabbath of the Bible?

MISSIONS OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.

The Missionary Herald says that there are now under the care of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 20 missions, embracing 98 stations, at which are laboring under its direction 570 persons, being 59 more than last year, of whom 147 are ordained missionaries, 14 are physicians, 5 are licensed preachers not ordained, 26 printers, &c.; 199 females, married and unmarried; in all 382 Americans. The remainder are native teachers and preachers. Gathered and watched over by these missionaries are 73 churches, containing at this time 25,441 members, of whom 1,076 were added the past year. Connected with these missions are also 11 theological seminaries for training teachers and preachers, having 423 pupils; also 22 boarding schools, having 399 male and 536 female pupils; also 367 free schools containing about 11,330 children; in all 12,600 children and youth under the instruction of the missionaries. This is exclusive of the schools at the Sandwich Islands, which have been put into the charge of the native government, and are supported by it, and which include as pupils about one-fifth of the entire population. The missions have also 11 printing establishments, and 6 type and stereotype foundries. At these presses are type and other requisites for printing in 30 languages besides the English. Of books and tracts printed the past year, partial returns give 489,584 copies, embracing 40,451,955 pages; whole number of pages printed since the commencement of the missions is 375,000,000 in 30 languages. Quite a number of these languages were first reduced to writing by missionaries of this or some other of the American or English Societies.

◆

Marriage of a Wife's Sister.—The Christian Chronicle says that the Court of Queen's Bench, all of the judges assembled, has declared that to marry the sister of a deceased wife is in violation of the law of England, such marriages having been prohibited by two statutes passed in the reign of Henry the Eighth. The decision was pronounced in the case of one Chadwick, whose wife, Harriet Fisher, having died, he married her sister, Annie; but, being advised that his marriage was illegal, afterward disregarded it, and married another, Annie Fisher being still living. For this third marriage he was indicted on the charge of bigamy, and convicted; but the conviction is now set aside, the Court holding that his second marriage, with Annie Fisher, was no marriage at all.

This is the same question which came up before the old-school Presbyterian General Assembly, in 1842, in the case of the Rev. Mr. McQueen. The Assemby confirmed the decision of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, N. C., which had pronounced him guilty of incest.

◆

Missions at Amoy, China.—One of the Missionaries at Amoy says, in a recent letter, "In different places in the city four chapels are now opened for public worship by the brethren of different Missionary Societies. But instead of four chapels, we might have forty; and the Chinese would gladly rent their buildings for the purpose, were there men to occupy them and hold forth the word of life."

The Island of Amoy contains 136 villages and 400,000 inhabitants. Nearly half the inhabitants are in the City of Amoy, the situation of which appears to be healthy. The whole island is open to the unrestricted residence and labor of Missionaries, and nowhere in China have Missionaries been treated with such marked respect by the higher Chinese officers.

PARAGRAPHS FROM MISSIONARY LETTERS.

Within the last week we have received two parcels of letters from our missionaries in China—one by a ship which arrived at Boston, and the other by a New York ship. They were both made up previous to the departure of Bro. Wardner and sisters Wardner and Carpenter from Hongkong; and do not, therefore, convey so late intelligence as the letter received more than a month ago by the overland mail, which announced their safe arrival at Shanghai. They contain, however, some items of general interest, of which the following will serve as specimens:—

Dress of a Chinese Lady.

"The little shoe I send is of the pattern most in use, the heel being very high, and the only part which touches the ground. Yet you would be surprised to see how serviceable such feet are. The gait of the fortunate owner does not differ much from that of the ordinary lady, with her clumsy shoes, which are made exactly like the skates used by boys at home—high, narrow soles, turned up at the toes, and with no quarters, or very short ones, so that any body can wear them. None of the pictures I have seen convey a correct idea of the form of the little foot, being always too clumsy and blunt at the toes, whereas they all terminate in the merest point conceivable. The owners seem very proud of them, and will glance at their own feet, and then at ours, as we meet in the street, as if fearful lest their undoubted title to superiority should be unheeded by us. The dressing of the head, (which is never covered, except occasionally by a handkerchief thrown over it,) is a matter of the greatest moment; and the shining braids and folds are most tastefully set off by clasps, arrows, pins, and sometimes by the graceful figure of a bird, with drooping wings, and other fantastic figures. These, with the truly becoming dress, and the never-omitted jewels of the ears, wrists, and ankles, render a Chinese lady at all times a picturesque, and to me an attractive object. But, after all, it is the countenances that give me most pleasure, and these, always intelligent, always sprightly, I never behold without emotion. I long for the time when I can converse with them, and tell them something of the errand which brought me here."

Visit from Mr. Gutzlaff.

"Yesterday we received a most interesting call from Mr. Gutzlaff. Mr. Wardner had previously given him some of our tracts, and he had manifested an interest in our sentiments, and a wish to know more of us. He is very social and agreeable, asked many questions about our people, and complimented us on having some learned men among us—a fact which he had learned from the books. He complimented particularly the compilation of the "History," which he considered a very able work. He told us also, that he has now in his possession a manuscript copy of a work recently written by a learned Chinese, proving that the seventh day was formerly the Sabbath of the Empire, and says he is surprised at the amount of proof adduced in the essay, and which he considers as authentic. It goes back through a period of two thousand years, and shows a research and erudition truly wonderful. He says the Chinese as a nation are surely, although quietly, and rather rapidly, coming to a knowledge of the truth; that few know the extent to which it is already received and preached; that the work is, and of necessity must be, done mostly by natives; that the number of native preachers, which at the commencement of the present year was about seventy-five, is now nearly or quite one hundred; that two or three days' journey towards the interior numbers have been converted; that women are among the converts, and one female has taken upon herself to hold meetings among her sex, to explain the truth to them, and acts as a kind of preacher. He was accompanied by three native teachers, two of some experience, and one just entering upon the work, but all approved and acknowledged laborers."

The Cooley.

"Our Cooley would like to go with us to Shanghai, but we cannot take him. He is very social and serviceable, and often entertains us with his interesting stories. We have a sort of dialect among ourselves, partly Chinese, partly English, and partly a kind of nondescript or natural language, by which we manage to converse quite freely. I will give you a specimen of our conversation, as well as I can. He reads some, and seems very fond of reading. The other day he came up, in a burst of rapture, to tell "Sin-sey" (teacher)—a title which he always applies to Mr. Wardner—the story of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda. He pointed to the thirty-eight years, which he knew we could comprehend, and then threw himself on the carpet, with his feet under him, as if useless. He then explained, by words and gestures, the pool, the coming down of the angel to trouble the waters, and the inability of the poor man to go down of himself, and that no one took him down, and how, when Yaysoo (Jesus) came, he spoke to him, and the poor man rose and walked: to express which, he sprang up with a most exulting bound, the perfect representative of one leaping, and walking, and praising God."

Real Open Communion.—A great deal is said against "close communion" by those who practice it as truly, though not quite as strictly, as any body else. Real open communion is very scarce. It seems, however, that there are some churches among the Unitarians in which it can be found. The following paragraph from an article by Edmund Quincy, son of the late President of Harvard University, shows how they regard it. In replying to the doctrine advocated by the editor of the Christian World, that slaveholders ought not to be excluded from Christian fellowship, he says:—

"We are not surprised at the doctrine of the 'World' touching technical 'Fellowship,' because, as we understand Unitarian usages, a wish to come to the Communion Table is all that is required for admission to it. At least, in many Unitarian churches, the Communion is open to all who may be present when the Last Supper is commemorated, and every one is invited to participate who feels disposed so to do. No test of doctrine or of life is applied. The person approaching the Table does so on his own responsibility, which is shared by no one else. This we presume to be the case with the church of which the editor of the World is the minister. 'A drunkard, a pirate, or a murderer,' known to be such, would be admitted to Communion as readily as the veriest saint in the region round about. The test of Christian fellowship, therefore, does not apply to Unitarians, or at least to this liberal class of them, as it does to other sects, which make a great point of maintaining it in its purity."

◆

Catholic Estimate of Protestant Benevolence.—Mr. O. A. Brownson, once a Protestant, and a distinguished advocate of reform, but now a member of the Roman Catholic Church, uses the following language in relation to the efforts of benevolent ladies in Boston:—

"There is hardly a city in the Union in which there are not benevolent ladies banded together, practicing self-denial; and giving alms enough even to gain heaven, if accompanied by faith and charity, who make it a business to find out poor children, and with sweetmeats, and fine dresses, and flattering words, entice them from religion, lure them from God, to be brought up in hatred of him who redeemed them, of the Spiritual Mother who bore them, and to burn eternally in the fire prepared for the devil and his angels. And these charming ladies persuade themselves that they are doing a deed of charity, that they are serving God, that he will love and reward them for it—poor, deluded creatures, who are nothing more nor less than procuresses to the devil. How strange! What terrible infatuation! As if it were not ten thousand million times better that our children should starve to death before our eyes than that they should be brought up Protestants!"

◆

Diffusion of Religious Truth.—It can not fail to be noticed, says the Christian Intelligencer, as one of the cheering signs of advance in public sentiment, that the secular journals so very generally manifest an increasing interest in the religious movements of the age. A daily paper, in reviewing the moral and religious aspects of 1847, says:—

"In no former year have such multitudes of Bibles, Testaments, religious volumes, and tracts, been distributed throughout our country; or so many hundreds of faithful missionaries and other messengers of truth been employed among our scattered population. In no year has there been such an increased demand for the religious journals of all denominations, and especially, at no former period has there ever been anything like the present general diffusion of religious intelligence and moral influence through the secular press."

◆

Qualifications for a Western Minister.—A correspondent of the New York Recorder, who seems to understand the matter, gives the qualifications necessary for a minister at the West:—

"Suffer me to say, that the indispensable qualification—after piety—for a minister coming into this country, is a knowledge of human nature. No matter what a man's talents are, the want of this knowledge will make him a fool here, and worse than a fool. Half the young ministers from the East fail simply on this occount; some now here, otherwise our best men, will fail from the same reason.

"Perhaps it may be deemed proper for me to add, that every minister who proposes to come to this country must make up his mind to preach without written sermons before him. He that can not dispense with them, may regard it as settled that, as a preacher, he can be of but little use here. I have no prejudice on that subject myself, but the people have. Or, rather, they covet a sort of preaching altogether different from reading. Feeling and sentiment must go together here. Without the former, the latter will avail nothing."

◆

Expulsion of the Jesuits from Switzerland.—Late London papers contain the decree of the Provisional Government of Fribourg, signed by the President and Chancellor. The following is an extract:

"We have decreed:—The Jesuits corporations, congregations, teachers, and professors affiliated to that order, are forever banished from the Fribourg territory. This measure applies to the Jesuits, the Lignorians, the Marianites or Freres Ignorantins, the Brethren of the Christian Doctrine, the Sisters of St. Joseph, the Sisters of St. Vincent of Paule, and the Nuns of the Holy Heart. Congregations and corporations of that description shall not in future be permitted to settle in the Canton under any denomination or pretext whatsoever, to purchase property in it, or to direct public or private establishments for the education of youth. The individuals belonging to those orders and congregations shall quit within the space of thrice twenty-four hours from the publication of the present decree. All the property, moveable or real, possessed by the above-mentioned corporations, is to become the property of the State, and its proceeds to be applied to public instruction."

The Heroine of Tampico.—Mrs. Ann Chase, the woman who so distinguished herself at the surrender of Tampico, by mounting the enemy's works and hauling down the Mexican flag, and running up the stars and stripes upon the approach of Commodore Conner on the 14th of November, 1846, has signified to the American Tract Society her desire to receive and distribute, by sale and gift, as many of the Society's publications as they may see fit to forward to her—thus to become a voluntary colporteur for that city. At her suggestion some thousands of Spanish tracts have been issued by the Society, and among the rest, La Hija del Lechero, or the Dairyman's Daughter, having its opposite pages printed in Spanish and English, for that object.

◆

Prayers to the Virgin for the Pope.—The Pope has issued an order that "the litanies of the Blessed Virgin shall be recited daily in all the collegiate churches and religious houses of Rome, to obtain for him the special light of which he feels himself in need." The Freeman's Journal, (Bishop Hughes' paper,) says the temporal affairs of his Holiness are supposed to be a sufficient reason for this step, "but it is confidently asserted, that it is the known intention of Pius IX. to realize the expectation of the faithful, ere very long, by declaring as an article of faith the doctrine of the immaculate conception of the Blessed Virgin."

◆

Books for the Chinese Literati.—The Missionnary Herald states that Mr. Pohlman, in January last, sent a new-year's present of books to forty or fifty of the literati and influential men of Amoy, China. Among these were the History of America, a fine edition of the Gospels, and of Luke and Acts, bound in red morocco, gilt edged, and the Christian Almanac for 1847, the Life of Christ, and tracts. They were done up neatly, and accompanied with a red complimentary card. They were thankfully received, and cards of acceptance sent in return.

◆

A Jew in Parliament.—Not a little feeling is manifested in England against the admission of Baron Rothschild into the British Parliament. The London correspondent of the Traveler remarks, that "Protestants cannot believe that the Baron will be so bold as to take his seat, even if all objections were removed, so that he could take the oath of office." Baron Rothschild is a Jew; and because the Jews believe that our Saviour was an imposter, Protestants are shocked to find that the head of all the London Jews is about to take his seat in the British Parliament! Several strong articles have appeared in the leading journals on the subject.

◆

The Jews and the Pope.—We sometime since mentioned the fact that the Pope of Rome had removed some of the embarrassments which rested upon the Jews, and that in consequence thereof the question had been raised among them whether he might not be their long-expected Messiah. Late papers from Europe say that the Jewish residents of Rome have presented to the Pope, as an acknowledgment of their gratitude for the blessings he has conferred upon them, a copy of the Bible, splendidly bound and illuminated, which cost upward of 1,000 scudi.

◆

Churches and Chapels in Scotland.—Church of Scotland, 1,160; Free (Presbyterian) Church, 850; United Presbyterian Church, 518; Congregationalist, 142; United Original Seceder, (Presbyterian,) 41; Reformed Presbyterian Church, 109; Baptist, 91; Roman Catholic, 82; Wesleyan Methodist, 32; Evangelical Union, 18; various minor sects (supposed) 80. Total of congregations or churches, 2,988. Perhaps there are more Presbyterians in Scotland, as compared with its population, than in any other country on the earth.

◆

"Progress."—After all that has been said about the progress of the Sabbath cause in connection with the stoppage of Sunday mails, we now learn from a Washington letter-writer, that the Postmaster General has ordered a change in the Sunday mail service, so that mails will be run from Baltimore as on all other days, reaching Philadelphia by 3 P. M.

◆

"Mourn, Israel, Mourn!"—The Portland Argus, speaking of Mr. Judd, the Unitarian clergyman at Augusta, says that, on Thanksgiving day, "when he came to deliver his sermon, without explaining himself to his people at all, or making any apologies for his course, he opened the Bible and read the whole of the Book of Lamentations instead!—every chapter of its wailings."

◆

Time of the Advent.—The Advent Herald, a leading Millerite prper, in an address to correspondents, says: "We have received a long article on time, giving the day in which the writer thinks the Lord will appear. We do not feel that it would be consistent in us to publish what we believe is unscriptural, and highly pernicious in its tendency, for the sake of gratifying the writer."

◆

A Sunday School Missionary Society, composed of the teachers and scholars of the Broadway Tabernacle, raised during the year 1847, $412. The money was appropriated for the benefit of Sunday Schools in other parts of the country. Most of the contributions were in cents or small pieces of silver, and very few of them in larger pieces than a quarter of a dollar.

THE POWER OF CASTE.

Eld. Jeremiah Phillips, the missionary to Orissa from the Free-Will Baptists of this country, narrates the following incident connected with two Santal youths under his instruction:—

"Daniel and Elias have at length, and I trust forever, become emancipated from the shackles of caste! They had repeatedly communicated their intention to do so, and I felt pretty well satisfied with their experience. I thought it best to lose no time in bringing the matter to a close. I therefore called them in this P. M., with Rama and Mahes, and after conversing with them some time proposed that they should take some bread and eat before us. Surprising as it may seem, this startled them, and they drew back. At length Daniel said he would eat, Elias said he would wait till he should be baptized. The bread was brought, but Daniel's heart almost failed him. He, however, after some hesitation, raised his hand and took a piece; Elias declined. Poor Daniel sat with the bread in his hand, swelled up and seemed in an awful trial, and for half an hour or more it seemed doubtful whether they would taste the morsel which was to be the signal of a final separation from all their former connections. It was an important step to take. The Rubicon once passed, there could be no retreat. They, however, at length put the fearful morsel to their mouths, and the work was done, when they immediately became tranquil and happy. They appeared quite happy at our prayer meeting this evening, and the family they have now left, so far from taking fright, have been singing and praying with Rama as cheerful as ever."

The above occurred on the 16th day of August, 1847. What follows occurred on the 19th of August, three days later:—

"Elias' brother, having heard of his conversion, came to see him. Elias was sitting with me in the study, when he came in. His first salutation was, 'What have you been eating?' and this was followed up by a most sad complaint indeed, of the disgrace he had inflicted on the family. He reproached him for not having first consulted him, asked if he had taken him to be a fool, that he should have taken such a step, and inflict such irreparable injury on all his relatives, without even once asking a brother's advice. He was now an outcast, no Santal would take water from his hands. Where could he find a wife when he should wish to marry? No one would give him his daughter. Who would perform his funeral rites when he died? His body must lie above ground and be devoured by vultures and jackals."

◆

Condition of England.—Speaking of England, in his twelfth lecture at Hartford, Ct., Dr. Baird said:—

"There is enormous wealth there, and resources almost unlimited for increasing it. Many suppose that England has seen her best days, but Dr. B. could not concur in this opinion. True, there is embarrassment and distress there, but that is temporary. The nation will recover from it and still advance.

"Education in Scotland is very thorough. Her school system has been about as long in operation as that of Massachusetts, and is an excellent one. There are 999 parishes, each of which has a good school. In England and Ireland paimary education is neglected. There is no system of common schools, and the lower classes are profoundly ignorant. As regards higher education, there are universities at Oxford, Cambridge, and London, in England, and those of Edingurgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and St. Andrews, in Scotland. There are also King's College, London; Trinity College, Dublin; and a college at Durham, which deserve the name of universities, making in all ten. Cambridge and Oxford universities are the largest, the former having about 1,300 and the latter about 1,700 students.

"London grows rapidly. It covers an area 8 miles by 6, of which St. Paul's Cathedral may be regarded as the center. From this center a circle drawn with a radius of ten miles would contain three millions of inhabitants. The present population of the city is two and a half millions, and is rapidly increasing. Edinburgh, the capital of Scotland, is the most picturesque city in Great Britain."

◆

Mr. Shuck's Voyage to China.—When our missionaries sailed for China, one year ago, Messrs. Shuck, Toby, Yates, and others, were about ready to leave, and talked of going in the same ship. But they finally concluded to wait a month, and take the Ashburton, in which they met with very different treatment from what our brethren found on the Houqua, as appears by the following extract from a letter of Mr. Shuck to the editor of the Christian Watchman:—

"Ere this, you have heard of our long and trying voyage. Our ship was a freight ship, our accommodations miserable, our fare hard indeed, and our captain beyond any thing I ever conceived of. He is not only no gentleman, but surely cannot claim to be even a man. When we left the ship immediately on her anchoring at Hongkong, July 25, we felt that our deliverance was a special one, effected by God's own almighty hand. The voyage well nigh proved fatal to the lives of several of our party. Mrs. Toby can never recover from it."

◆

Sandwich Islands.—In the public schools of the Sandwich Islands, according to the Report of Mr. Richards, the Minister of Public Instruction, the number of pupils is 18,644. The number of ordained clergymen, 43; of whom 26 are Protestants and 17 Catholics. Beside these—who are all foreigners—there are seven natives (Protestants) who have been licensed to preach the gospel. Within the last year or two the population has slightly increased; but, taking a period of ten years together, it has diminished.

◆

Legislature of New York.—The Legislature of the State of New York assembled on Monday of last week. Whig officers were elected. The Governor's Message was read, and the different portions of it were referred to appropriate committees. There was but little else of general interest done.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Senate.

The subject of the war came before the Senate in the early part of last week. The resolutions presented by Mr. Calhoun were taken up, and he spoke at length in favor of them. He had proposed a defensive line at the last session, as the only course that could save the country from tremendous evils; but this view had been over-ruled. He had no confidence in the course recommended of establishing a government over the peaceable portion of the citizens, and making a treaty with that government, because it would be too weak to command the confidence of the people. He also argued at length against conquering or holding Mexico as a province or by annexation, and calculated that it would be necessary in either case to keep an army of forty thousand men in that country to preserve tranquility. His resolutions were finally laid on the table, to be taken up again after the bill to increase the army has been disposed of.

The Ten Regiments Bill, as it is called, authorizing a great increase of the army, was taken up, and speeches upon it were made by Messrs. Cass, Crittenden, Hale, and others. It was under consideration until Thursday, when the Senate adjourned over until Monday.

House of Representatives.

In the House, on Monday, Jan. 3, Mr. Hudson, of Massachusetts, offered a resolution to inquire into the expediency of requesting the President to withdraw our troops from Mexico to the east bank of the Rio Grande, and forthwith propose a peace, relinquishing all claims to indemnity for the expenses of the war, and proposing the desert between the Nueces and the Rio Grande as the boundary between the State of Texas and the Mexican Republic. The proposition was voted down, 41 to 137.

On the same day, Mr. Dickey offered a joint resolution, with a long preamble, for the appointment of a Committee of five, from each House, to invite the President to a conference on the best mode of effecting a peace with Mexico. It lies over.

Mr. Houston, of Delaware, introduced joint resolutions of thanks to Gen. Taylor, his officers, and men. Mr. Henly moved to amend by adding, "while engaged as they were, defending the rights and honor of the country." Mr. Ashmun moved an amendment, adding thereto, "in a war unnecessarily and unconstitution ally begun by the President of the United States." Mr. Ashmun's amendment was adopted by Yeas and Nays, 85 to 81. The question on the resolution, as amended, has not yet been taken.

A good deal of time was spent in discussing a question connected with the transportation of the great southern mail.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROHE.

The steamship Caledonia arrived at Boston last week, bring Liverpool papers to Dec. 19. The news is not particularly important. It is generally regarded as rather unfavorable to American interests, there having been a slight decline in cotton and provisions.

The English Parliament, since opening, has been chiefly occupied with the affairs of Ireland. The bill for the repression of crime in that country will soon become a law. It is of the most gentle character, and is expected, as precuror of ameliorative measure, to answer the end designed.

Within the last two or three weeks the British Islands have been visited by a succession of tremendous gales, causing the most appalling loss of life and property on the coast. Several vessels have been wrecked, either with the whole or a portion of the crews. Among other ships from this port that have shared in the casualties, is the Franklands, for Callao, whose master and 20 of the hands were drowned.

Letters from Presburg, Poland, say that the news from Galicia is terrific. Famine and disease are committing such awful ravages among the peasantry, that in almost every village a third part, and even the half of the population is dead. All the misery of Ireland is being reacted in this wretched country, and. at the same time, they want especially a second England, rich, powerful, and benevolent, to come to its aid, for all that is done by the Austrian Government is utterly insufficient.

There is no intelligence of importance from France. The health of the King is bad. Agrarian disturbances have somewhat subsided in Ireland. Father Mathew will proceed to America in the New World early in April. Mr. Liston, the eminent surgical operator, is dead.

TERRIBLE STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.

The Cincinnati papers of the 31st ult., are filled with accounts of the awful disaster to the steamer A. N. Johnson, a brief account of which we published. The steamer was a new one, and was making her first trip from Cincinnati to Wheeling. The explosion occurred about 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning, 29th ult., when the passengers were in their births, some 11 or 12 miles from Maysville. The steamer was at the time in the act of rounding out from shore, having just discharged some passengers on the wharf boat at Manchester. She had three boilers, and it is thought the flues of all collapsed. One is supposed to have gone down through the hull, and occasioned the rapid sinking which took place; another passed aft, tearing everything before it, and landing in a cornfield some 300 yards below; while the third broke in two pieces, one of which was found in the bank close by, and the other in the cornfield some 250 yards above.

As near as can be told there were 95 cabin passengers and 65 deck; from 60 to 80 are killed or missing. There were six ladies on board—all saved; 4 or 5 children, also saved. The circumstances of the death of the first clerk are represented as most singular. He was blown some 100 yards on shore—sprang up, ran some distance into a house, ran under a bed, and when persons got to him he was just dying. The scene immediately after the explosion is represented as horrible and heartrending in the extreme. The groans of the badly injured, the shrieks of women, the confused and eager efforts of nearly all, not disabled, to escape from the wreck, beggars description. It must have been a horrid waking out of deep sleep in the still hour of the night One woman, with three children, threw the elder two overboard, and, with the youngest in her arms, sprang after them. They were all rescued. Had the explosion taken place any considerable distance from shore, scarcely one would have escaped to tell the tale. The books of the boat being lost and both of the clerks dead, it is impossible to state with any degree of accuracy the names of the victims.

Fatal Family Quarrel.—An altercation took place, says the Newark Advertiser of the 5th inst., night before last, just over the river, this side of New Brunswick, between John T. Dunham and his son-in-law, Jonathan Drake. It appears that Drake came home somewhat intoxicated, and finding the children crying, inquired the cause, and learning that Dunham had taken something from them, a scuffle ensued, in which the latter struck Drake with a chair, whereupon Drake caught him by the collar and choked him severely. The wife of Drake then interfered and got her father into another room, when he fell dead upon the floor. No notice was at first taken of his condition. About two hours after the neighbors were called in, being told that he had fallen in a fit. On the arrival of a physician Dunham was pronounced dead, being then cold. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict of death from causes unknown. It is said, however, that a minority of the committee were in favor of rendering a verdict of death by violence.

SUMMARY.

We are informed, says the Hartford Times, that on New-Year's day a lad in East Hartford had his leg amputated at the thigh, and what is more remarkable it was done without pain. The operation was performed by Dr. P. Ellsworth, in less than half a minutes from the time of the first incision. Dr. Wells was in attendance and administered the Nitrous Oxide gas which had the effect to produce a sleep so profound that the patient was not aware the operation had been performed until he awoke and to his astonishment was minus a leg; he said that he had felt no pain but thought he heard the sawing of the bone.

The steamer Sea Bird, from New Orleans for St. Louis, having 1,000 kegs of gunpowder on board, took fire on Wednesday, Jan. 5, near Cape Gerardeau. The fire soon communicated with the powder, when a tremendous explosion took place, the report of which was heard a distance of forty miles. The boat of course was blown to atoms. Fortunately the passengers and crew were enabled to escape before the explosion took place, so that no lives were lost.

A telegraphic dispatch to the New York Tribune, dated at Washington, Jan. 9, conveys a rumor, thought to be well founded, that General Scott has been recalled from Mexico. The name of his successor has not transpired. Rumor mentions several generals, but the one who received the appointment, if any, is not yet known. Orders have been received from Gen. Scott, requesting officers of the army now in the United States on leave of absence, to return to the seat of war at the earliest practicable day, and resume their respective commands in the army.

Passengers by the steamship Portland, which left Vera Cruz Dec. 24th, and reached New Orleans Jan. 2d, say it was reported that Gen. Scott was about to invade Queretaro, the city in which the Mexican Government was located. Preparations had been making for some time for a new movement of the American troops, but the object did not transpire until the day the Portland left Vera Cruz.

The telegraph wires are all strung between Buffalo and Detroit, under the O'Reilly contract. Thus within the period of a year, the wires have been stretched by this association, from Pittsburgh to St. Louis; from Columbus to Cleveland; and from Buffalo to Detroit; an aggregate distance of over 2,500 miles. This latter line will be put in full operation next week.

The colored people of New York City are taking measurers to send out some of their most respectable men to Liberia, to procure information, with the intention of making a great movement in that direction if the report should be favorable.

A daughter of Hon. Granville Ryder, and grand-daughter of the Earl of Harrowby, aged 17, was burned to death, on the 14th ult., at her grand-father's country seat, by her dress taking fire as she stood before the grate. Her uncle, Lord Sandon, was badly burned in his attempt to save her. Her dress was drawn into the fire by the strong draught.

The Berlin papers state that the "Swedish Nightingale" has been presented with a very beautiful parure in diamonds said to be of the value of 400,000 francs, ($75,200.) This valuable present was raised by the subscription of the nobility and gentry of the Prussian capital.

A patent has been taken out in England for making paper for the building of houses, bridges, ships, boats, and all sorts of wheel carriages, chairs, tables, bookcases, either entirely of paper, or to cover the wood and iron with sail paper.

A committee in the British House of Commons report the entire value of imports into China as $43,296,782, of which twenty-three millions dollars are paid for opium. Large quantities are used in other countries, Siam, Hindostan, &c.

The large hotel which Mr. Cozzens has been inclosing during the autumn and winter, a mile below West Point, fell into a mass of ruins on Sunday morning.

Rev. Messrs. Ford and Wilson, with their wives, embarked at Boston, on the 28th ult., for Smyrna, on their way to join the mission in Syria.

Any person of good moral character, although not admitted and licensed as an Attorney, may now practise in the Courts of this State. The only distinction between such a practitioner and one regularly licensed, is, that the former must show a special power of Attorney in such case. By another provision, parties to a suit may be summoned to testify thereon, at the option of the opposing party,—an important and organic change in the law.

The foundry and saw-mill buildings, located within the yard of the Clinton prison, were destroyed by fire on the night of the 21st inst. The fire is supposed to have been communicated from the stove chimney, in the saw-mill. The loss, including buildings, patterns and flasks in the iron and brass foundry, is said to amount to between $6,000 and $8,000. Men were employed at once in getting out timber &c., for the rebuilding.

The Courier de Lyons mentions the following discovery of a new motive force:—"It is now some time since the idea of employing ether as a propelling force was suggested. Our townsman, M. Tremblay, has reduced this theory to practice. A machine worked by the steam of ether, has been in full operation for the last six days in a glass-cutting manufactory in the Guillottiere. Its power is equal to that of twenty horses."

A land owner lately claimed compensation from one of the East Anglian Railway Companies, on the ground that two windmills belonging to him, the nearest of which was 150 yards from the railway, would be deprived of a portion of their motive power by an embankment eighteen feet high. The demand was submitted to arbitration, and the claimant was awarded 1,000*l.* "for loss of wind!"

William Hillhouse, Esq., of New Haven, has recently made to the Library of Yale College the very valuable donation of a copy of the original edition of the Description of Egypt—in ten folio volumes of text, and fourteen volumes of large sized plates—which is the celebrated work prepared by the French savans who accompanied Napoleon's expedition to Egypt.

James W. Parker of Cornwall, Vt., says that during last Winter, he felled an elm tree which had been dead for several years. On cutting and splitting the body of the tree, he found in its heart, and about eighteen inches above the cut for falling, seventeen distinct marks, apparently made with a hatchet when the tree was but a sapling. Outside these marks were three hundred and fifty-seven grains—noting the number of years from the time the hatchet strokes were made to the death of the tree.

Mr. Seth Hunt of Northampton gives the following statement of the success of treating with cold water a severe burn and scald in his family: "Cold water was applied, by immersion, till the pain ceased: the water being changed as often as it became warm. The part was then kept swathed with wet bandages, a dry woolen one enveloping them, until the injury was healed. The healing was rapid, and effected without leaving a scar. The instant relief which the cold water gave from the excruciating pain was highly gratifying."

7, 317 Mexican bounty land warrants, for 160 acres each, have been issued, and 1,120 for 40 acres each,—in all 1,215,840 acres, of which only 3,520 acres have been located. A land warrant is worth only $125 at Washington, but as good as $200 in specie to the western buyer.

It is stated that the sum annually expended for bread by the population of Great Britain and Ireland amounts to twenty-five millions sterling, while the money expended in distilled and fermented drinks amounts to upwards of fifty millions annually.

The administration of the post office in Russia has just published the list of foreign newspapers which will be allowed to enter Russia next year. The total number is 306, of which 156 are German, 103 French, 45 English, and 2 Polish.

The quantity of merchandise transported over the Boston and Worcester railroad during the year ending on the 30th of November last, amounted to 284,000 tons, which exceeds an average of 900 tons a day.

The New Testament has, for the first time, been translated inte the Servian language, by Dr. Wuk Stephanowitsch Koradschitsch. It is from tha ancient Slavonian version, compared with the Greek.

A Dr. Allen, of Milford, was sitting with his back to a window, when a pistol ball crashed through the pane behind him a few inches from his head. It was shot by some lads who were practicing at a mark.

At an election to decide upon the adoption of the new City Charter, of Syracuse, N. Y., held on the 1st inst., 1,849 votes were cast. The friends of the Charter had a majority of 346.

Prof. Finney, of Oberlin, O., has lately gone through a regular course of typhus fever, and recovered without the use of any medicine or stimulants whatever. It is said that for fourteen days he tasted of nothing but cold water.

It is said that Senator Cameron has adopted for his family ensign, and has it engraved upon his letter stamps, a printing press, over which stretches the word "Persevere."

The Regium Donum paid to 485 Presbyterian ministers, chiefly in the North of Ireland, amounted to $180,000 in 1847. Parliament votes the money—to some $400 a year, to others $300.

Lord Dalhousi, the newly-appointed Governor-General, is reported to have said that his business in India would be, "not to carry on war there, but to send home cotton."

The church of All Hallow, in London, still possesses an income originally given to it for the purpose of buying faggots for burning heritics.

Francis Upton, Esq., one of the selectmen of Reading, Pa., was drowned in Mill-Pond River in Wilmington.

A State Temperance Convention will be held at Syracuse on the 19th inst., by call of the Central Committee.

Four thousand five hundred dollars were received at the late Anti-Slavery Bazaar in Faneuil Hall, Boston.

Tatnall H. Post, deputy sheriff of Illinois District, having understood that a small boat load of whisky was on its way from Fort Smith to Fort Gibson, intended for the Indian trade, went in pursuit of it, and having found it, knocked in the heads of twelve barrels, and poured their contents into the Arkansas. The boat was a small ferry-boat, commanded by Capt. Lively, a white man, and manned by several Creek Indians, and is said with her cargo to have belonged to certain Cherokee whisky dealers about Fort Gibson—who were probably making ready for a "merry Christmas."

The ship Isaac Wright sailed from New-York on the morning of Dec. 4, and arrived at Liverpool Dec. 17, making her passage in thirteen days. The Acadia steamer left Boston Dec. 1st, and arrived at Liverpool Dec. 16; so that the passage of the Isaac Wright was more than three days shortest in the point of time, though in respect to distance she had the longest passage by at least one day.

The editor of the Wisconsin Argus, accompanied by several friends, recently entered upon an exploration of a newly-discovered cave in Dane Co., near Madison. They wandered through its labyrinths for several hours, but found no signs of its termination. It is probably of great extent, and is marked by many of the peculiarities of the great cave of Kentucky. It will constitute the story of some venturesome explorer hereafter.

Three large steamers, says the N. Y. Evangelist, with engines from 200 to 300 horse power, have been fitted at Bahai, S. A. for the slave trade. One of them has already arrived on the west coast of Africa, where she embarked 900 slaves, and escaped from the brig-of-war Sea Lark, by steaming away from her during a calm.

A jury in New Orleans has rendered a verdict of $2,000 damages in favor of a free colored woman named Ophelia Evans, as compensation for injuries received at the hands of Messrs. Genois and Avegno, by whom she was severely whipped without just cause.

Tutor Goodrich, at New-Haven, is still living, and is considered nearly out of danger. Fears are entertained that his mind may permanently suffer from the severe injury he received. The two students who perpetrated the outrage (Towar of Philadelphia, and Ewing of Tennessee,) are still in prison.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, JAN. 10.

ASHES—Pots $5 62; Pearls 7 00.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Flour ranges from 6 00 to 6 37. Jersey Meal 3 35; Western and State 3 15. Rye Flour 4 25.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 40; Ohio from 1 25 to 1 35. Corn 66 a 70c. Rye 87c. Oats 45 a 50c.

PROVISIONS—The market for Pork and Beef is very unsettled. Butter and Cheese remain about as heretofore. The best fresh Butter, in rolls, is retailed at 25c.; firkin for the table 18 a 20c.; cooking 14 a 16c. Cheese 6 a 7c.

MARRIED,

In Verona, N. Y., on the 1st inst., by Eld. Christopher Chester, Mr. David P. Marsh to Miss Miranda H. Potter, both of Verona, N. Y.

In Plainfield, N. Y., on the 18th of Dec., by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. Samuel N. Stillman to Miss Betsey Ann Mason, all of Plainfield.

In Edmeston, N. Y., on the 23d of Dec., by the same, Mr. John Davis, of Brookfield, to Miss Mary Ann Burdick, of the former place.

On the 31st ult., by Eld. Samuel Davison, Mr. Charles Cobb to Miss Mary Jones, both of Hopewell, Cumberland Co., N. J.

In Piscataway, N. J., Dec. 22, by Eld. W. B. Gillett, Elias F. Randolph to Jane Pope, both of Piscataway.

LETTERS.

Samuel Davison, W. B. Gillett, Abel Stillman, John Whitford, John D. Collins, D. Mallory, G H. Mitchel, Charles Potter, L. Cottrell, Wm. B. Maxson, Barton G. Stillman, P. C. Kenyon, Samuel Hunt, W. H. Fahnestock (week after next,) Isaac C. Burdick (package sent by express.)

RECEIPTS.

Isaac Saunders, Adams,		$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No. 52
Geo. Armesbury,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Jos. Green,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Dr. E. R. Maxson,	"	2 00	"	5	" 20
Daniel Main,	"	2 00	"	4	" 40
B. G. Stillman, DeRuyter,		3 00	"	4	" 52
Eli S. Colgrove,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Lorenzo Burdick,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Burdick & Maxson,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Arza Coon,	"	1 00	"	4	" 26
Leman Andrus, Lockport,		2 00	"	4	" 52
Rowse Burdick, Clarence,		2 00	"	4	" 52
Richard Day,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
Abram R. Andrus,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
E. B. Stillman, Newport,		2 00	"	4	" 52
Joshua Clarke, Preston,		2 00	"	4	" 52
Truman Saunders, Berlin,		2 00	"	4	" 52
E. Stillman, Unadilla Forks,		2 00	"	4	" 52
J. W. Barker, New York,		2 00	"	5	" 28
P. C Kenyon, Carbondale, Pa.		2 00	"	4	" 52
I. C. Burdick, Centerville, R. I.		2 00	"	4	" 52
Jacob Lewis,	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
V. R. Ball, Mystic, Ct.		1 00	"	5	" 26
S. W. Atkins, Bristol, Ct.		1 00	"	4	" 39
J. W. Brown, Hopkinton, R. I.		2 00	"	4	" 52
A. Drake, New Market, N. J.		2 00	"	4	" 52
Asa F. Randolph, Jr.	"	2 00	"	4	" 52
J. D. Collins, New Orleans, La.		2 50	"	4	" 30

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held in New York, on the evening of second-day, Feb. 7, at 7 o'clock. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the members of the Board, and that those having business to present will make the same known to the Corresponding Secretary, Thomas B. Brown, previous to the meeting.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto. gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman, New York, will be promptly attended to.

COUNTING-HOUSE ALMANAC.

1848.	Sun	Mo.	Tu.	We	Th.	Fr.	Sat	1848.	Sun	Mo.	Tu.	We	Th.	Fr.	Sat
JAN....	..	..	..	..	..	..	1	JULY....	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
	2	3	4	5	6	7	8		2	3	4	5	6	7	8
	9	10	11	12	13	14	15		9	10	11	12	13	14	15
	16	17	18	19	20	21	22		16	17	18	19	20	21	22
	23	24	25	26	27	28	29		23	24	25	26	27	28	29
	30	31							30	31
FEB....	..	..	1	2	3	4	5	AUG....	..	..	1	2	3	4	5
	6	7	8	9	10	11	12		6	7	8	9	10	11	12
	13	14	15	16	17	18	19		13	14	15	16	17	18	19
	20	21	22	23	24	25	26		20	21	22	23	24	25	26
	27	28	29						27	28	29	30	31
MARCH.	..	..	..	1	2	3	4	SEPT...	..	..	..	..	..	1	2
	5	6	7	8	9	10	11		3	4	5	6	7	8	9
	12	13	14	15	16	17	18		10	11	12	13	14	15	16
	19	20	21	22	23	24	25		17	18	19	20	21	22	23
	26	27	28	29	30	31			24	25	26	27	28	29	30
APRIL..	..	..	..	..	..	..	1	OCT....	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
	2	3	4	5	6	7	8		8	9	10	11	12	13	14
	9	10	11	12	13	14	15		15	16	17	18	19	20	21
	16	17	18	19	20	21	22		22	23	24	25	26	27	28
	23	24	25	26	27	28	29		29	30	31
	30							NOV....	..	..	..	1	2	3	4
MAY...	..	1	2	3	4	5	6		5	6	7	8	9	10	11
	7	8	9	10	11	12	13		12	13	14	15	16	17	18
	14	15	16	17	18	19	20		19	20	21	22	23	24	25
	21	22	23	24	25	26	27		26	27	28	29	30
	28	29	30	31				DEC...	..	..	..	..	..	1	2
JUNE...	..	..	..	..	1	2	3		3	4	5	6	7	8	9
	4	5	6	7	8	9	10		10	11	12	13	14	15	16
	11	12	13	14	15	16	17		17	18	19	20	21	22	23
	18	19	20	21	22	23	24		24	25	26	27	28	29	30
	25	26	27	28	29	30			31

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.

CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, Proprietor.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday, Aug. 25, and ending Dec. 1
Second " " Dec. 15, " March 22
Third " " April 5, " July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from $3 00 to	$5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!

Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. Complete in two imperial octavo volumes, of more than fourteen hundred pages of double column letter-press: and upwards of three hundred elegant illustrations. Price $5 00

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance, at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

In addition to the great number of pictorial illustrations in the English edition, the American publishers have greatly enriched the work by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron, a full length portrait of Dr. Johnson, and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson.

These important additions to the American edition, together with a better paper and binding than the English, must give this a decided preference with the American reader.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem —David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler,
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

ANGRY WORDS.

Angry words are lightly spoken,
In a rash and thoughtless hour;
Brightest links of life are broken
By their deep insidious power.
Hearts inspired by warmest feeling,
Ne'er before by anger stirred,
Oft are rent past human healing
By a single angry word.

Poison-drops of care and sorrow,
Bitter poison-drops are they,
Weaving for the coming morrow
Saddest memories of to-day.
Angry words! oh let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip:
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them, ere they soil the lip!

Love is much too pure and holy,
Friendship is too sacred far,
For a moment's reckless folly
Thus to desolate and mar.
Angry words are lightly spoken;
Bitterest thoughts are rashly stirred:
Brightest links of life are broken
By a single angry word.

BURNING LAVA POURED INTO THE OCEAN.

When the torrent of fire precipitated itself into the ocean, the scene assumed a character of terrific and terrible grandeur. The magnificence of destruction was never more perceptibly displayed than when these antagonistic elements met in deadly strife. The mightiest of earth's magazines of fire poured forth its burning billows to meet the mightiest of oceans. For two score miles it came, rolling, tumbling, swelling forward, an awful agent of death. Rocks melted like wax in its path; the very hills were lifted from their primeval beds, and sank beneath its tide, or were borne onward by its waves; the works of man were to it but as a scroll in the flames, nature shriveled and trembled before the irresistible foe. Imagine Niagara's stream, above the brink of its fall, with its dashing, whirling, tossing, and eddying rapids, madly raging, and hurrying on to their plunge, instantaneously converted into fire, a glory-hued river of fused minerals; the wrecks of created matter blazing and disappearing beneath its surface; volumes of hissing steam arising; smoke curling upwards from ten thousand vents, which gave utterance to as many deep-toned mutterings, and sullen, confined, omenous clamorings, as if the spirits of fallen demons were struggling against their final doom; gases detonating and shrieking as they burst from their hot prison house; the heavens lurid with flame; the atmosphere dark, turgid and oppressive, the horizon murky with vapors, and gleaming with the reflected contest; while cave and hollow, as the hot air swept along their heated walls, threw back the unearthly sounds in a myriad of prolonged echoes. Such was the scene, as the fiery cataract, leaping a precipice of fifty feet, poured its flood upon the ocean. The old line of coast, a mass of compact, indurated lava, whitened, cracked, and fell. The waters recoiled and sent forth a tempest of spray; they foamed and lashed around and over the melted rock; they boiled with the heat, and the roar of the conflicting agencies grew thicker and louder. The reports of the exploding gas were distinctly heard twenty-five miles distant. They were likened to the discharges of whole broadsides of heavy artillery. Streaks of the insentest light glanced like lightning in every direction; the outskirts of the burning lava, as it fell, cooled by the shock, was shiverod into millions of fragments, and borne aloft by strong breezes, blowing toward the land, were scattered into scintillant showers far into the country. For three successive weeks the volcano disgorged an uninterrupted burning tide, with scarcely a diminution, into the ocean. On either side, for twenty miles, the sea became heated, and with such rapidity that, on the second day of the junction, fishes came on shore dead in great numbers at Keau, fifteen miles distant. Six weeks later, at the base of the hills, water continued scalding hot, and sent forth steam at every wash of the waves.

[Scenery in the Sandwich Islands

AUSTRALIAN TRADITION.

Of their traditions the most novel is their creation. First, say they, a young man, along with others, "quamby along a beek," sat down in the earth, when it was "plenty dark." There they were not merely two, but many people laying or sitting unfinished and torpid on the ground. This reminds us of Milton's Limbo. But Karackarock, the daughter of the god Pungil, a kindly divinity, had condescended to "yannina warrect," walk a long way, to look out for them, and to clothe them comfortably with good oppossum-rags, of which, no doubt, she had a great store. The "old man"—so they call Pungil, their god, not unlike the Hebrew term, "ancient of days,"—now held out his hand to "Gerer," the sun, and made him warm. When the sun warmed the earth, it opened like a door; and then plenty of black fellows, came up out of the earth. Then the black fellews "plenty sing," like its white fellows "big on Sunday;" which means that a day is kept sacred, like our Sabbath, in commemoration of the creation; the dance on that day being of peculiar kind, called "gaygip;" at which time they corrobory before images carved curiously in bark. For a long time after the creation, in the winter, they were very cold, for they had no fire; their condition, as it regarded their food, was not better than their dogs, for they were compelled to eat the kangaroo raw; and to add to their misery, the land was full of deadly snakes and guanos; but good Karackarock, their truly womanly divinity, did not forget or forsake them. Pungil, her father, like a true natives' god, was too much of a "big one gentleman" to do any thing but carry his war weapons; whilst Karackarock, a native divinity of the true feminine sort, a worker, came a long way, armed with a long staff—native women carry such—and with this she went over the whole land, killing the reptiles; but, just before she had killed them all, the staff broke, and the kind did not all perish. Misery there was in the breaking of that weapon; but there was also mercy, for Karackarock had so warmed it, as well as herself, with such great slaughter, that, when the staff snapped, there came out of it fire. Fire they now had to warm themselves, and to cook with. Their condition was much improved, but did not long continue so, for "Wang," the crow—a mysterious bird, regarded as superstitiously by them as the raven amongst Thor and Odin's worshipers—watched his opportunity, and flew away with it. For a long time they were again in a most fireless condition, until ever-kind Karackarock learned their state, supplied their wants, and they have never since lost it. Of a great flood they speak, that rose above the highest trees and hills; and how the natives were some drowned, and the rest, for a great wind blew, were caught up by a whirlwind to another similar country above them. When the flood subsided, there jumped up out of the earth, trees, kangaroos, and oppossums—every thing. The old race, the antediluvians, became stars. Among them were Pungil, their principal deity; Karackarock, their female Prometheus; Teert and Teerer, sons of Pungil; Berwool and Bobinger, son and daughter of Pungil, the first pair who dwelt on the earth after the flood, and from whom the present race of natives sprung. Wang, the crow, also became a star.

[R. Howitt's Australia.

THE FIRST STEAMSHIP.

The first Atlantic steamer was the Savannah, Capt. Rogers, built at New York. She was 400 tons burden, ship-rigged. Her engine was 70 or 80 horse power, low pressure. She proceeded from that port to Savannah, whence she sailed in 1819 for Liverpool, making the passage in 22 days. In passing the Irish coast, the smoke and steam from her chimneys gave her the appearance of a ship on fire, and vessels were dispatched from the Cove of Cork to her relief. From Liverpool she went to Copenhagen, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Arundel, making the passage from the latter port (in Norway) back to Savannah, in 25 days. Crowned heads, ministers, officers of state, &c., visited her, and valuable services of plate, jewelry, &c., were presented to her officers.

She subsequently made the voyage to Constantinople and back, being the first steamer that traversed the Mediterranean Sea, as well as the Atlantic Ocean. She was afterwards purchased to run as a packet between New-York and Savannah, under Capt. Holdredge, but was wrecked on the south side of Long Island. Capt. Moses Rogers, of Groton, Connecticut, commanded her on her first voyage out. Capt. Stephen Rogers, now living at New London, was the sailing-master. He it was that made that memorable reply to a British officer—"I have no master, sir!" The circumstances which drew forth that reply were these: When the Savannah approached Liverpool, a boat from a British sloop-of-war came alongside and hailed, "Where is your master?" Capt. Stephen Rogers replied, "I have no master, sir!" "Where's your captain, then?" "He's below, sir; do you wish to see him?" "I do, sir."

Capt. Moses came on deck and asked the British officer what he wanted, when the following conversation ensued: "Why do you wear that pennant, sir?" "Because my country allows me, sir." "My commander thinks it was done to insult him, and if you don't take it down, he will send a force that will do it." Capt. Moses turned to the Engineer and exclaimed—"Get the hot water engine ready there!" The man-of-war's boat turned about in an instant, and was off! Nothing more was said about that pennant. It was suspected at Liverpool, that the Savannah came over to rescue Napoleon. His brother Jerome had just offered a large reward to any one who would take him off the Island of St. Helena, and hence the excitement her appearance created throughout England. She was the first ocean steamer ever seen in European waters.

THE THIRTY THOUSAND POUND NOTE.

An extraordinary affair happened about the year 1740. One of the Directors of the Bank of England, a very rich man, had occasion for 30,000*l*., which he was to pay as the price of an estate he had just bought. To facilitate the matter, he carried the sum with him to the Bank, and obtained for it a Bank note. On his return home, he was suddenly called out upon particular business; he threw the note carelessly on the chimney, but when he came back a few minutes afterwards to lock it up, it was not to be found. No one had entered the room; he could not, therefore, suspect any person. At last, after much ineffectual search, he was persuaded that it had fallen from the chimney into the fire. The Director went to acquaint his colleagues with the misfortune that had happened to him; and as he was known to be a perfectly honorable man, he was readily believed. It was only about four and twenty hours from the time that he had deposited his money; they thought, therefore, that it would be hard to refuse his request for a second bill. He received it, after giving an obligation to restore the first bill, if it should ever be found, or to pay the money himself, if it should be presented by any stranger. About thirty years afterwards, (the Director having been long dead, and his heirs in possession of his fortune,) an unknown person presented the lost bill at the Bank, and demanded payment. It was in vain that they mentioned the transaction by which that bill was annulled; he would not listen to it; he maintained that it had come to him from abroad, and insisted upon immediate payment. The note was payable to bearer; and the thirty thousand pounds were paid to him. The heirs of the Director would not listen to any demands of restitution, and the Bank was obliged to sustain the loss. It was discovered afterwards, that an architect, having purchased the Director's house, had taken it down, in order to build another upon the same spot, had found the note in a crevice of the chimney, and made his discovery an engine for robbing the Bank.

NATURAL BRIDGE OF ILLINOIS.

The Natural Bridge of Illinois is situated in Jackson county, on the south side of Muddy river, about seven and a half miles south-west of the new town of Murfreesborough. It is thrown across the bed of the rivulet from perfect buttresses of nearly equal size, worn out of the rock by the water, as smooth as if cut by a chisel. The bridge is a solid block of limestone, eighty-four feet in the span of the arch, from buttress to buttress, twenty-two feet above the bed of the stream, fifteen feet wide, seven feet thick in the center, about twelve feet thick at the ends resting upon the two buttresses. The appearance of the whole is that of a modern stone bridge, except that the north end is a little lower than the other, though the inclination is not more than two and a half feet in its length on the top. This is one hundred and twenty feet long, and firmly and conveniently set into the opposite banks, and over which is a good road for horses.

The bridge is only about forty feet from the ledge of rocks before-named, runs parallel to its base, and both looked upon together remind one of some ancient castle with its draw-bridge. Large oaks and poplars are growing upon the bridge and on the top of the ledge, while the deep tangled undergrowth gives to the whole scene an air of strange mystery. The country is volcanic; the bed of the stream is several hundred feet above the bed of the Mississippi, and it is evident that once a river cut out and ran under that bridge, and that in a shock of nature the ledge was thrown up to intercept its channel, while the whole country being elevated by the earthquake, took its present astonishing condition.

[Prairie Argus.

Secure Cellars from Frost.—Scarcely a severe winter passes, without many and great losses from the freezing of potatoes and other articles in cellars, all of which might be prevented by little expense. Sometimes a single day's work would prevent a loss of some hundreds of dollars. In all cases of building cellars, they should be so constructed as to make them perfectly secure against frost, at the same time having doors and windows, that they may be rendered as cool as necessary.

Almost any cellar may be made sufficiently warm by banking with earth, tan, saw-dust, or shavings, or by using sea weed, &c. If it be desirable to keep the cellar tolerably cool for apples, turnips and other roots not very liable to freeze, and yet have a part warm enough to protect potatoes, these may be put in a close bin and secured by covering with evergreens, which are very clean and protect well against cold, and yet do not injure from heat like some other kinds of covering. Green hemlock boughs are the best covering that we ever used for this purpose.

[Cultivator.

Washington, in 1801.—One can scarcely credit the description of Washington City, as Mrs. John Adams found it in 1801. Mrs. A. thus speaks of the city:—

"Here and there," she writes, "is a small cot, without a glass window, interspersed amongst the forests, through which you travel for miles without seeing a human being. The house is upon a grand and superb scale, requiring about thirty servants to attend and sweep the apartments in proper order. I could content myself almost any where for three months; but surrounded by forests, can you believe that wood is not to be had, because people cannot be found to cut or cart it? The house is made habitable, but there is not a single apartment in it finished. We have not the least fence, yard, or other convenience without, and the great unfurnished audience room I make a drying room of, to hang up the clothes in. It is a beautiful spot, capable of every improvement, and the more I view it the more I am delighted with it."

The "great unfurnished audience room" which Mrs. A. speaks of, is the famous East room of the White House.

A Curious Relic.—The Oneida Morning Herald gives the following clause from the will of Lewis Morris, one of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence. "It will be seen," remarks the Herald, "that the worthy old Patriot partook liberally of the prejudice which existed among our honest Dutch fathers against the Yankee race":—"It is my desire that my son Gouverneur Morris may have the best education that is to be had in England or America, but my express will and directions are, that he be never sent for that purpose to the Connecticut Colonies, lest he should imbibe in his youth that low craft and cunning, so incident to the people of that country, which is so interwoven in their constitutions that all their art cannot disguise it from the world, though many of them, under the sanctified garb of religion, have endeavored to impose themselves on the world for honest men. Lewis Morris.

1760, Nov. 23.

The Origin of the Term "News."—The origin of this word has been variously defined:—"News is a fresh account of anything;" it is something not heard of before; "News is an account of the transactions of the present times." The word "news" is not, as many imagine, derived from the adjective new. In former times, between the years of 1595 and 1730, it was a prevalent practice, to put over the periodical publications of the day, the initial letters of the cardinal points of the compass, thus:—

N
E—|—W
S

importing that these papers contained intelligence from the four quarters of the globe; and from this practice is derived the term of newspapers.

The Pay of the First Congress.—The Continental Congress met on the 10th of May, 1775; the number of members was 64. At this session, a member appeared from St. John's parish, Ga., and afterwards the Colony of Georgia sent an entire delegation. Each colony paid its own delegation. New Hampshire allowed to each all expenses, a servant, two horses, and a guinea a day; Massachusetts, expenses and three dollars a day; Rhode Island and Maryland, forty shillings a day, with nothing for expenses; Pennsylvania, twenty shillings a day and expenses; Virginia, a half Johannes per day; North Carolina £500 per annum; South Carolina £300 per annum; Georgia, £100 per month while in session.

The Happy Girl.—Ay, she is a happy girl—we know by her fresh looks and buoyant spirits. Day in and day out she has something to do, and she takes hold of work as if she did not fear to soil her hands or dirty her apron. Such girls we love and respect wherever we find them—in a palace or a hovel. Always pleasant and always kind, they never turn up their noses before your face or slander you behind your back. They have more good sense and better employment. What are flirts and bustle-bound girls in comparison with these? Good for nothing but to look at; and that is rather disgusting. Give us the industrious and happy girl, and we care not who worships fashionable and idle simpletons.

VARIETY.

The Maiden, an instrument by which criminals are beheaded in Scotland, was introduced into that country by Earl Morton, and he was the first person who suffered by it; M. Guillotine, a French surgeon, who gave his name to an improvement of the Maiden, died also by his own invention; and Deacon Brodie, who was executed about thirty years ago for robbing the Excise-office in Edinburgh, and who really was a man of very genteel birth, and in his manners more of the Macbeth than anybody that appeared for the last fifty years—this gay deacon of the carpenter of Edinburgh, invented the drop by which all criminals now suffer in Britain; and strange to say, he was the first man who was hanged on his own commodious gallows.

The origin of the term 'windfall,' is said to be the following: Some of the English nobility were forbidden felling any of the trees in their forests—the timber being reserved for the use of the Royal Navy. Such trees as fell without cutting were the property of the occupant. A tornado was, therefore, a perfect godsend, in every sense of the word, to those who had occupancy of these extensive forests, and a windfall was sometimes of very great value. Some years since it is said a tornado threw down timber enough on the Duke of Marlborough's estate to sell for forty thousand dollars.

A curious case is to be tried in St. Louis shortly. A man employed two others to dig a cellar, and when the work was done, neither of them being able to make out a bill for it, another person was employed by mutual agreement, and paid to estimate the cost. Some time after the bill was discharged, however, it was discovered that he had made a mistake of $47 50, in favor of the workmen, which they refused to refund, and an account is brought against the person making the mistake, who, it is contended, is responsible.

Mr. William Rule, of Cambourne, agreed with John Carthew, a farm laborer of Phillack, to thresh a quantity of barley, for which he was to give 10s., six meals, and a gallon of beer. Carthew commenced, and in eleven hours he completed his task, amounting to 921 sheaves, which is considered six days and a half work. He says he will undertake for a wager a similar task for six successive days. He threshed, last year, in Copperhouse, 400 sheaves of wheat in 12 hours. Carthew is a tall, robust man, and fifty-eight years old.

Two men entered a trunk and hat store in Ann street and purchased a trunk, in which they deposited an old coat and hat, and stated that they would call and get it in a few moments. In a short time they returned, and carried off the trunk which the store-keeper supposed to be the one they had purchased; but he soon discovered that in lieu thereof, they had taken a trunk filled with fur caps to the value of $50; to obtain which was probably their motive in purchasing the trunk.

Late intelligence from Mexico says that on account of fears entertained at the Capital that Santa Anna would brave Congress, Gen. Scott had ordered Gen. Worth, with a strong force, to march to Queretaro for the purpose of protecting its deliberations. The Louisiana mounted men had a skirmish with a body of guerrillas at a rancho, about 17 miles from Vera Cruz. The Louisianians were commanded by Capt. Reed of Ohio. They killed 5 of the guerrillas, and took 5 more prisoners, when they burnt the rancho down.

About three years ago, a method was discovered of making most if not all kinds of cloth water proof, without altering their appearance or producing that impermeability to air which is so objectionable a feature in India-rubber clothing. It is obvious that a sufficient degree of pressure would force water through the pores in the cloth by which the air circulates. But for all purposes of apparel, the protection is ample, as the cloth may be exposed to severe rain for days in succession, and though the outside may look as if it were thoroughly soaked, the inside will remain perfectly dry.

Friend Buckminster, of the Massachusetts Ploughman, suggests that apple trees be set on a line, where you wish to have a permanent fence, about ten feet apart. In the course of ten years they would be large enough to mortise in to receive cedar or chestnut rails. These, he thinks, would last more than half a century. In the mean time the fence posts would occasionally bear a crop of apples, and thus become profitable in "divers ways."

Taste and elegance, though they are reckoned only among the smaller and secondary morals, yet are of no mean importance in the regulation of life. A moral taste is not of force to turn vice into virtue; but it recommends virtue, with something like the blandishments of pleasure.

Forty-five miles an hour is the contract time for carrying the mails in England, per railway. In this country they are carried on horseback at from two to four or five miles per hour, by stages at from four to twelve miles, and by steamboats and on railroads, at from twelve to twenty-five miles per hour.

It is stated that ten thousand persons are employed in Hamburg in the manufacture of cigars. They make 150,000,000 annually. Of these, 14,000,000 yearly, or 40,000 daily, are puffed away by the Hamburghers, for the special pollution of their own atmosphere.

Mattogrosso, S. A., is considered the most unhealthy place in the world. Out of a population of 1,200, four only are whites—three of them being public functionaries. The rich are negroes or colored people, who only can support the climate.

M. Arago states that there is in Siberia an entire district where, during the Winter, the sky is constantly clear, and where a single particle of snow never falls.

A gold mine has just been discovered in the Government of Irkoutsk, in which this metal is found in a state of complete alloy with silver, a mineralogical fact which is extremely rare.

Horse radish may be kept during the winter by grating it while green and corking it up tight in bottles filled with vinegar.

I can hardly think that man to be in his right mind, says Cicero, who is destitute of religion.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months. noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT

NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 31. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JANUARY 20, 1848. WHOLE NO. 187.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VII.

On an asserted change of the Sabbath prior to the promulgation of the Law from Sinai, and on two alledged predictions of another change since. [Concluded.

In order that the prediction [Ezek. 23 : 25] may be made to serve as evidence of a change of the Sabbath, it is assumed that "the eighth day" specified, is identical with the first day of the week. But where is the evidence of this? It is not in the text. The eighth day here is just that which follows immediately after the seven days employed in purifying the altar; but what reason is there to believe that this purging begins on the last day of the week? No intimation is made that this will be the case, and no importance seems attached to the particular day on which they begin or end. "Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it," is the whole instruction, as to their commencing, comprised in the intimation, "These are the ordinances of the altar, in the day when they shall make it," ver. 18. So that, in so far as the divine appointment intimates, any day of the week may be the one on which the purifying is completed; and, consequently, the eighth day from the period of their commencing to do so, may fall on any day of the week, indefinitely. Yet, according to the view we are now opposing, the eighth day, which may be a Wednesday or Thursday, must be a Sabbath. If God meant so much to depend on the termination of the seven days referred to, we may well believe that He would have given an express injunction as to the day of the week on which they were to be commenced, and not have left it undefined. As it is, they being determined alone by "the day in which they shall make" the altar, we can have no certainty as to the day on which the seven days purgation expire, and, therefore, no certainty as to the day of the week upon which the eighth shall fall.

But we may be reminded that the text speaks not merely of one day, but of "the eighth day, and so forward," ver. 27. And here, again, it is assumed that the meaning is the eighth day as it regularly recurs from week to week, that the eighth day is the first day, and that it is not one first day merely that is spoken of, but every first day thereafter. But here, again, we contend that this is not on the eighth or first day of one week, and then on the corresponding day of the ensuing week; but on the eighth day, and the ninth day, and tenth day, and every day after. The "so" is not in the original, and is marked as supplementary in the translation. Without it, the sentence reads "on the eighth day, and forward,"—forward from, and after, that day. It is the same word which occurs in a preceding chapter of this same book: "So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward." Ezek. 39: 22. Here it obviously means that the Lord shall thenceforward be always known by Israel; not that He shall be known by them once a week only from and after that day.

It occurs in other instances, and with the same meaning. The prophet Isaiah says, "Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto." Is. 18: 2. Here again it clearly means always from the period of their origin. We have even the very word, and in the very same connection with "the eighth day," occurring in circumstances where the meaning cannot be mistaken. Under the law given by Moses, an ordinance is, "When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat, is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; and from THE EIGHTH DAY, and thenceforth, it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord." Lev. 22: 27. Here, imperfection of the animal, as, in the case under consideration, impurity of the altar, prevents the acceptance of the offering till after seven days; but, on and after the eighth day, the prohibition ceases to operate.

The text is perfectly parallel to that containing the account of the purification of the altar in the days of Moses, "And thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, and thou shalt anoint it, to sanctify it. Seven days shalt thou make an atonement for the altar, and sanctify it; and it shall be an altar most holy." Ex. 29: 36, 37. No one will suppose that this altar was for weekly offerings only. The context, in the very next verse, expressly informs us that the altar, being so purified seven days, the offering of two lambs, in the morning and evening sacrifice, was to be presented, "day by day, continually," verse 38. Here, also, no specific day was appointed for the commencement of the seven days' purifying, and, consequently, nothing can be ascertained as to the particular day of the week upon which they terminated, and the eighth day fell.

Aaron and his sons were purified seven days at the time of their consecration, "for seven days shall he consecrate you;" these "seven days" being repeated thrice within the space of three verses. Lev. 8: 33—35. Immediately after we read, "And it came to pass, on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel; and he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the Lord." Lev. 9: 1, 2. Here "the eighth day" is evidently intended to express nothing more than the day following the seven days' purification, by which they were qualified to officiate in the priests' office; as, in the case under consideration, the seven days' purification of the altar fits it for being used in sacrifice.

At the dedication of the temple, "Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt. And in the eighth day they made a solemn assembly, for they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast seven days." 2d Chron. 7: 8, 9. And afterwards, in the days of Hezekiah, when the Temple had been profaned, "they began on the first day of the first month to sanctify, and on the eighth day of the month came they unto the porch of the Lord; so they sanctified the house of the Lord, in eight days, and in the sixteenth day of the first month they made an end." 2d Chron. 29: 17. No one supposes that this "eighth day" was an authoritative changing of the Sabbath, or that it had any reference to any particular day of the week; and why should this be imagined in the parallel case of the predicted purifying of the altar?

Other instances occur, which it seems altogether unnecessary to specify. The text itself on which the objection is founded seems so obvious, that the simple reading of it, with its context, will show that it prescribes the means and the manner of purifying the altar of the Lord. The design of this purifying is that it may afterwards be used in sacrifice to God. But acceptable sacrifice has never been confined to the Sabbath. Even if, therefore, we were to understand the prediction as intimating only a spiritual worship, without the use of symbols, still that spiritual worship would not be confined to either Sunday or Sabbath. Access to our Father in heaven, through the mediation of His Son, is a privilege limited neither by time nor space. Yet the altar did serve its appropriate purpose in directing aright the heart to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world. And the promise to which our attention is now directed is, that the altar being purified seven days, when these days are expired, thenceforward "the priests shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord God."

The promise, therefore, is that of the divine acceptance of burnt-offerings and peace-offerings "upon the altar," after it has been so purified. The objector says the acceptance here promised is on the eighth day, and on the eighth day only. Now whatever this altar may mean, and whatever the burnt-offerings and the peace-offerings may mean, we may still inquire whether there be any evidence enabling us to determine whether the use of the altar is indeed to be thus confined to the eighth day. And on this point we have the direct testimony of the prophet himself, in this very prediction. We do not seek to avail ourselves of the argument that might be deduced from the fact that, on the seven days previous to the eighth, the burnt-offerings are commanded to be presented on the same altar; and it cannot be supposed that seven days in succession are to be all Sabbaths. We rather speak now of the acceptance of the offerings upon the altar, subsequently to the days of purification. An express distinction is drawn between the Sabbath sacrifices and others which are specified along with them. "And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the Sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel." Ezek. 45: 17. In the verses immediately following, a sacrifice is appointed for "the first month, in the first day of the month," ver. 18. In the 21st verse, the passover is appointed to be observed "in the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month," the feast continuing "seven days," as formerly, in which are to be offered "seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish daily the seven days, and a kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering," ver. 21—24. And "in the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, shall he do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil," ver. 25. Sacrifices for the new moons and the Sabbaths are also specified, and provision is made in addition for "a voluntary burnt-offering, or peace-offerings voluntarily, unto the Lord." Ezek. 46: 4—6, 12.

But besides all these, it is expressly ordained, "Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord, of a lamb of the first year without blemish; thou shalt prepare it every morning. And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually, for a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord. Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, every morning, for a continual burnt-offering." Ezek. 46: 13—15.

Now let it be remembered, that "these are the ordinances of the altar in the day when they shall make it." Before being used, in the ordinary service of God, or in the more extraordinary feasts divinely appointed, the altar undergoes a seven days' purgation, after which, "on the eighth day and forward," continually, that altar is to be used both in the special feasts and in the daily sacrifice. In showing the fallacy of the objection which we are exposing, it is not necessary that we should use any argument to prove that the altar and the sacrifices are real. In whatever sense the altar is understood, still it is apparent that the divine acceptance of the sacrifices offered thereon is not confined to the eighth day. "Daily," after it has been purified, on the eighth day and forward, continually thereafter, the sacrifices are offered and accepted of the Lord.

Thus, again, does the futility of this evasion become apparent. Viewed in the simplicity of its language, in the light of its context, or as part of a series of enactments, the meaning of the prophecy is plain. It says nothing about a change of the Sabbath. The ear may be deceived by the words "on the eighth day and so forward" being rent from their connection, and having a meaning put upon them alien to that which they truly bear. But the ingenuous inquirer into the meaning of the prediction, will perceive in it a promise of accepted sacrifice at the hand of the Israelites any and every day when the altar shall have been consecrated in the appointed manner for the service of the Most High.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Where, where are all the birds that sang
A hundred years ago?
The flowers that all in beauty sprang
A hundred years ago?
The lips that smiled,
The eyes that wild
In flashes shone
Soft eyes upon—
Where, oh where are lips and eyes,
The maiden's smiles, the lover's sighs,
That lived so long ago?

Who peopled all the streets
A hundred years ago?
Who filled the church with faces meek
A hundreds year ago?
The sneering tale
Of sister frail—
The plot that work'd
A brother's hurt,
Where, oh where are plots and sneers,
The poor man's hopes, the rich man's fears,
That lived so long ago?

Where are the graves where dead men slept
A hundred years ago?
Who are they that living wept
A hundred years ago?
By other men,
Who knew not them,
Their lands are tilled;
Their graves are filled—
Yet Nature then was just as gay,
And bright the sun shone as to-day,
A hundred years ago!

From Zion's Advocate.

OUR PASTOR.

It looked dark in the Pastor's study as he entered it one evening not long since. And well it might look dark, for his meditations were gloomy, and he saw no star of hope to cheer him in the distance. The truth was, his scanty supper had been closed with a conversation between himself and wife on the pressing and immediate wants of the family. There was not flour enough to make another loaf of bread, the last piece of butter was on the table, and, to say nothing of other necessaries in this line, it was plain enough that several additional articles of wearing apparel were loudly called for to render the family even comfortable for the winter.

The pastor did not reproach his wife for calling his attention to these things. Neither could he accuse her of ignorance or insensibility in regard to their true condition. No, for she had just told him of her resolution to appropriate her ten dollars of "wedding fees" to the unavoidable wants of the family, and fix up her old cloak for another year's service.

But still it was dark in the pastor's study. And yet not so dark, literally, as to prevent him from tracing distinctly, the outlines of an empty pocket; not so dark as to obscure the record on his memory that the last barrel of flour had not yet been paid for, and that this formed only one item in a bill at Mr. D——'s store which had been running for some time. Nor was it so dark that he could not recognize Brother B., who just then passed in his wagon on his return from the city.

The pastor sat down, and thus held communion with himself. How can I live here with my present means of support. And yet, with my limited congregation, and the usual amount of salary paid in neighboring parishes, I cannot have the face to ask for more. Shall I then seek another field of labor? This I dare not think of doing. The congregation has been gradually increasing under my ministry, the church seem united and prosperous. I cannot doubt that providence has assigned me this post. I have every reason to believe, from the kind expressions of the people, and their regular attendance on my ministry, that it would be a grief to them to have me leave.

And yet, there is one thing that I cannot disguise—a fact that I cannot account for. I have received far less in presents this year than formerly. While there is no apparent diminution in the confidence and love of the people, there has been a great diminution in such marks of their favor as called forth the gratitude of my pockets as well as my heart. Year before last we had butter enough sent in by one and another, to last through the winter. This year we have received but one small box as a gift. And what makes it still worse, one pound costs now nearly as much as two did then. One year I recollect we had so much fresh meat sent in about thanksgiving time, that our chief source of anxiety was to know what we should do with it. Our anxiety this year has been of a nature entirely different.

The pastor felt that the people were under no obligation to continue such favors, and that he had no reason to complain. He did not complain. Still, he could not conceal from himself the fact, that what was not a gratuity in the necessaries of life must be paid for; and that a bushel of neighbor E.'s chenangoes, with the "best wishes" of the donor, would go quite as far in his family as a bushel for which he had to pay a round half-dollar. The chine of pork for which he had paid 48 cents that very day was no sweeter, no more nourishing, than those that came in during the year of plenty almost as often as a porker died in the parish. But it was useless to think of these things now. Something must be done to meet present emergencies. There must be some flour, or before Monday the family would be destitute of bread. Could he with a clear conscience ask Mr. D—— for another barrel, while the last remained unpaid for, and while he had but small hopes of being able to meet his present debts at the close of the year?

In his perplexity, he fell on his knees and commended himself and his family anew to Him who hears the young ravens when they cry. Long and fervently he prayed, until his feelings were calmed, his faith was invigorated, and a cluster of rich promises told him to cast all his care on the Lord, and go forward. He seemed to feel an assurance that God would provide—but in what way he was entirely ignorant.

Just as he was leaving the study to go out on his trying commission, he was summoned by the announcement that the clerk of Mr. D—— wished to speak with him at the door. He had long been expecting such a call, and no inference could be more natural, under the circumstances, than that the bill at the village store was sent in for payment. No wonder that his faith wavered, and that he went to the door with a heavy heart.

We have already mentioned that farmer B., a member of the church, and a true friend of the pastor, had returned from the city in the early part of the evening. It is only necessary to relate the substance of a conversation that evening, to account for the call of Mr. D——'s clerk on the afflicted pastor.

Not long after Mr. B.'s return, Mr. A., another member of the church, called in to hear the news, and especially to inquire about the state of the markets. After Mr. B. had named the prices at which he had disposed of the different articles of his load, Mr. A. remarked, that whatever other folks might say about hard times, the farmers had certainly no cause of complaint. Seventy cents for potatoes, twenty-two cents for butter, nine and ten cents for pork, &c., didn't sound much like the prices at which these things ranged a few years ago.

"Very true," replied farmer B., "and now, as you have introduced the subject, I will give you some of my reflections on my way home, and some of their practical results." He then stated that he had been comparing the fruits or rewards of his labor the past year, with those of some former years when he sold his potatoes for twenty and twenty-five cents per bushel. Then butter was ten and twelve and a half cents—now twenty and twenty-two cents per pound. Pork then brought six or seven cents—now it was quick at eight and nine. And this same proportion held in most articles. It had cost him but little if any more to cultivate his farm this year than in former years. And now look at the result:

100 bushels of potatoes at 70 cts.,	$70 00
75 lbs. butter at 20 cts.,	15 00
150 lbs. cheese at 10 cts.,	15 00
375 lbs. pork at 9 cts.,	33 75
	$133 75

According to the prices of some former years, the following result would appear:

100 bushels potatoes at 25 cts.,	$25 00
75 lbs. butter at 12 cts.,	9 00
150 lbs. cheese at 7 cts.,	10 50
375 lbs. pork at 7 cts.,	26 25
	$70 75

"Now," said Mr. B., "add to these beef, hay, grain, apples, poultry, &c., &c., and I think with you, brother A., that we farmers ought not to complain of hard times."

"But," he continued, "these calculations have let me into another secret, which it may be important for me as well as you to know." He then mentioned that with the same number of cows as formerly and the same family to provide for as in former years, he found that his butter and cheese not only commanded a larger price, but there was more in quantity. This he was about to ascribe to the superior economy of his wife, when it flashed upon him that he had sold the whole, and given none to the minister. He could hardly account for it—certainly it was not that he prized him less highly than in former years. No, no, his heart couldn't deceive him here. But why was it? Could it be possible that because everything was quick in the market, he had forgotten to save a cheese and a few pounds of butter for their good pastor? Such a thing had never been known with him before. Perhaps others in the parish had done the same thing. And then, to think that their pastor must not only buy, but buy at a high price also. No wonder that Mr. D—— refused to pay his subscription for preaching the other day, because, as he intimated, "ministers are not over punctual in paying their debts." He saw, also, that the pastor meant something, when, in a late conversation, he said that "salaried men fared worse than any other class in these times."

The result was, Mr. B. said his mind was made up at once, and passing Mr. D——'s store on his way home, he left an X, with instructions to send a barrel of flour, and the remainder in groceries, to their pastor. "And now," said he, "brother A., you may have the benefit of my example, and before the first of January, we will see to it that the whole parish are prepared to wish their minister 'a happy new year' with a clear conscience.

SCRIBE.

A CHRISTMAS TALE.

While the last generation was flourishing, there dwelt in what is now a famous city not a mile from Boston, an opulent widow lady, who once afforded a queer manifestation of that odd compound of incompatibles, called "human nature."

It was a Christmas eve, one of those old-fashioned winters, which were so "bitter cold." The old lady put on an extra shawl; and as she hugged her shivering frame, she said to her faithful negro servant:—

"It is a terrible cold night, Scip. I am afraid my poor neighbor, widow Green, must be suffering. Take the wheel-barrow, Scip. Fill it full of wood. Pile on a good load, and tell the poor woman to keep herself warm an comfortable. But before you go, Scip, put some more wood on the fire; and make me a nice mug of flip."

These last orders were duly obeyed; and the old lady was thoroughly warmed, both inside and out. And now the trusty Scipio was about to depart on his errand of mercy, when his considerate mistress interposed again:

"Stop, Scip. You need not go now. The weather has moderated."

Here is a lesson for all who are lapped in luxury, and who have "more than heart could wish," not to harden themselves against the sufferings of the needy, and become forgetful of the sorrows of the destitute. No selfishness is more hateful than the selfishness of riches in the midst of poverty. [Bost. Recorder.

THE HAPPY MINER.

"Is there not danger in these mines, old man?" I asked of an aged miner, who, with his arms bent, leaned against the side of an immense vault, absorbed in meditation. "It must be a fearful life."

The old man looked at me with a steadfast but somewhat vacant stare, and in half-broken sentences replied—

"Danger! Where is there not?—on the earth or beneath it—in the mountain or in the valley—on the ocean or in the quiet of nature's most hidden spot—where is there not danger? Where has not death left some token of his presence?"

"True," I replied. "The turns of life are various. The sailor seeks his living on the waters, and he knows each moment that they may engulf him; the hunter seeks death in the wild woods; the soldier in the battle-field: and the miner knows not but the spot where he now stands, to-morrow may be his tomb."

"It is so, indeed," replied the old man. "We find death in the means we seek to uphold life. 'Tis a strange riddle; who shall solve it?"

"Have you long followed this occupation?" I asked, somewhat struck with the old man's answer.

"From a boy. I drew my first breath in the mines. I shall yield it up in their gloom!"

"You have seen some of those trials," said, I, "to which you have just now alluded."

"Yes," he replied, with a faltering voice, "I have. There was a time that three tall boys looked up to me and called me father. They were sturdy striplings. Now it seems but yesterday they stood before me, so proud in their strength, and I filled too with a father's vanity. But the Lord chastened the proud heart. Where are they now? I saw the youngest—he was the dearest of the flock—his mother's spirit seemed to have settled on him—crushed, at my feet a bleeding mass! One moment, and his light laugh was in my ear; the next, and the large mass came! There was no cry, no look of terror; but the transition to eternity was as the lightning's flash: and my poor boy lay crushed beneath the fearful load. It was an awful moment; but time, that changeth all things, brought relief; and I had still two sons. But my cup of affliction was yet full. They too were taken from me. Side by side they died—not as their brother,—but the fire-damp caught their breath, and left them scorched and lifeless. They brought them home to the old man—his fair jewels—by whom earth's richest treasures in his sight had no price—and told him he was childless and alone. It is a strange decree that the old plant should thus survive the stripling things it shaded, and for whom it would have died a thousand times! Is it surprising that I should wish to die here in the mines?"

"You have, indeed," I replied, "drank of affliction. Whence did you derive consolation?"

The old man looked up—"From heaven! God gave, and he hath taken away; blessed be his name!"

I bowed my head to the miner's prayer—and the old man passed on.

CHEAP.

"Give me freedom in everything," said a man to us a few days since. "I have been a member of a church for forty years, and up to this time it has not cost me a penny. That's what I call a free gospel."

This reminds us of an anecdote of Rev. Mr. S., a distinguished Methodist preacher well known in the West, who was remarkable for his piety and eloquence, as well as for his occasional eccentricities. He went to his rest a few years since, after having labored long and faithfully in his Master's service.

On one occasion he was preaching with great fervor on the freeness of the gospel, and around him was an attentive congregation, with eager eyes turned to the preacher, and drinking every word into their souls. Among the rest was an individual who had always been more remarkable for opening his mouth to say amen, than for opening his purse. Though he never gave money for the support of the gospel, yet he might be said to support the pulpit, for he always stood by it. He had, on this occasion, taken his usual place near the preacher's stand, and was making his responses with more than usual animation. After a burst of burning eloquence from the preacher, he clasped his hands, and cried out in a kind of ecstacy, "Yes, thank God! I have been a Methodist for twenty-five years, and it hasn't cost me twenty-five cents!" "God bless your stingy soul!" was the preacher's emphatic reply. [Louisville Exam.

EVIL COMPANY.

[Translated from the German.]

Sophronius, a wise teacher, would not suffer even his grown up sons and daughters to associate with those whose conduct was not pure and upright.

"Dear father," said the gentle Eulalia to him one day, when he forbade her, in company with her brother, to visit the volatile Lucinda, "dear father, you must think us very childish if you imagine that we should be exposed to danger by it."

The father took in silence a dead coal from the hearth, and reached it to his daughter. "It will not burn you, my child, take it."

Eulalia did so, and behold her delicate white hand was soiled and blackened, and as it chanced her white dress also.

"We can not be too careful in handling coals," said Eulalia, in vexation.

"Yes, truly," said her father; "you see, my child, that coals, even if they do not burn, blacken. So it is with the company of the vicious."

Zealous men are ever displaying to you the strength of their belief, while judicious men are showing the ground of it.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 20, 1848.

CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Resolutions have been passed by the General Conference, and also by the Missionary Association, recommending that a meeting for prayer on behalf of missions be held in each of our churches on the first Sabbath of every month. The wisdom of the recommendation is generally acknowledged; yet, strange as it may appear, only a small proportion of the churches comply with it. This would not be so if our brethren realized the importance of the monthly concert, and the advantages which would result from a uniform and faithful attendance upon it.

The first object of the monthly concert of prayer should of course be to move God to regard our missionary efforts with favor, and accompany them with his blessing. Such is the depravity of the human heart, and such the degradation of those without the Gospel, that merely to proclaim the truth in relation to God's claims is not sufficient to regenerate men. Hence nearly all Christians acknowledge in theory the necessity of the divine blessing in order to the success of their missionary efforts. But that blessing is not to be expected without the use of appropriate means. God has seen fit to bestow it in answer to the prayers of his people. Though his knowledge and ability are unlimited, yet he will be inquired of by the house of Israel to do those things which they need. Under such circumstances, a faithful attendance upon those meetings appointed for the special purpose of invoking his blessing is of vast importance; and a neglect of them is not only inconsistent with real love for the cause, but is in a high degree criminal.

A faithful attendance upon the monthly concert would greatly encourage our missionary brethren. Deprived as they are of the company and counsel of those who fully sympathize with them, there must be times when heart and flesh almost fail them. They contemplate the vastness of the work to be performed, and the feebleness of the instrumentality employed, and they are ready to inquire who is sufficient for these things? If at such times they can not cast themselves upon God in full confidence of his protection and assistance, they must certainly give way to despondency. There is reason to believe that our brethren have gone forth with the single desire to glorify God by proclaiming to men a crucified and risen Saviour. If so, they may confidently appeal to Him in whose name they have undertaken their work. No doubt they do this, and find in it constant encouragement and consolation. But how much it would add to their consolation to know that their brethren at home are united and earnest in pressing their suit at the mercy-seat.

A faithful attendance upon the monthly concert would exert a salutary influence upon individual Christians and the churches. The complaint of a low state of religion is heard from nearly every part of our country. This can not be attributed to a lack of information in regard to religious subjects. Light is spreading in every direction to an extent heretofore unknown. Theories of religion are plenty enough, and most persons are sufficiently zealous in advocating them. But there is a strange want of earnestness in performing the practical duties of religion. Now the monthly concert brings before the mind a world lying in wickedness—ignorant of God, and of the way of justification before him through Jesus Christ—in such a manner as can hardly fail to arouse the Christian in some degree to a sense of his duty. He sees that there is not only a theory of religion to be believed by himself, but duties to be performed towards others. His thoughts are led away from himself to consider the woes and wants of others. If the contemplation of their condition does not awaken gratitude for the superior light he enjoys, and create in him a desire to do something for the diffusion of that light, he must be a sorry specimen of a Christian. If it does awaken his gratitude and increase his activity, the effect will sooner or later be seen in the upbuilding of the church to which he belongs.

A faithful attendance upon the monthly concert would render it comparatively easy to raise the funds necessary to carry forward the missionary enterprise. One great reason why Christians contribute so sparingly to this cause, is because they think so little of the condition and wants of the heathen. But if the monthly concert were made, as it ought to be, an occasion for spreading before the people a true picture of the condition of the heathen world, this reason would no longer exist. Another reason for the meager contributions of Christians is, that they do not sufficiently understand or feel that it is a duty regularly and systematically to contribute. But let them be called upon regularly to contemplate the subject and pray over it, and if this does not suggest the duty of regularly contributing to carry forward the object for which they pray, then we know not what will. Too much reliance has been placed upon occasional large contributions, which are no doubt necessary at times. But we believe that small contributions, regularly made, according as God has prospered us, would be more effectual in the aggregate, and more consistent with the Scripture rule. At any rate, the experiment ought to be tried, and an opportunity should be given, at every monthly concert, for persons to contribute for the object to which their thoughts and prayers have been directed.

In conclusion, let us ask you, reader, What are you doing to sustain the monthly concert and carry forward the missionary enterprise? If the concert is established where you reside, we entreat you to attend it faithfully and consistently. If it is not established, we entreat you at once to take steps for its establishment, even though it may be attended by only a few. In either case, depend upon it that the prosperity of your own soul is intimately connected with the prosperity of the monthly concert of prayer for the heathen.

SABBATH DUTIES.

Selected for the Sabbath Recorder, from Dwight, Sermon 108.

The New Testament has no where dispensed with any part of the duties of the Sabbath. It has been thought, that Christ has released his followers from some part of the duties of the Sabbath, and in some degree from that strictness of observing it, which were originally required of the Jews. Observations to this amount I have not unfrequently seen and heard; but exclusively of the things observed by Dr. Paley, I have never been informed of the particulars, from which Christians are thus supposed to have been released; nor do I know in what passages of the New Testament they are supposed to be contained. Dr. Paley believes that the Sabbath was never at all obligatory on Christians. According to this scheme, therefore, it was impossible for Christ to release them from these duties; because they were never incumbent upon them. Where those who make this supposition, find their warrant for it in the discourses of Christ, or of his apostles, I confess myself unable to determine. The observations which our Saviour makes, as an exposition of several parts of the Decalogue, in his sermon on the mount, he prefaces with these remarkable declarations: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil; for verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot, or one tittle, shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be purified." After these declarations, it is impossible that Christ should be rationally believed to have altered at all the duties of the Sabbath, much less to have annihilated it, unless he has done it some where in plain, unequivocal language. But no such language on this subject can be found in the New Testament. Until some thing of this nature shall be definitely pointed out, the duties of the Sabbath must be acknowledged to have been left by Christ and his apostles EXACTLY AS THEY FOUND THEM; and all declarations to the contrary must be regarded as merely gratuitous and presumptive.

THE BIBLE SEALED TO SLAVES.

When anti-slavery men at the North assert that the Bible is a sealed book to slaves at the South, it is very common for the advocates and apologists of slavery to deny the assertion. They seem to feel, that withholding the Word of God from any man or class of men is a high crime, and hence their anxiety to prevent the impression that such a thing is done. But southern men themselves, and even ecclesiastical bodies at the South, confess the very thing with which they are charged. Under such circumstances, who shall we believe? We should say, believe those who have the best means of knowing the facts, and are the least likely to misrepresent them. The following testimony is from a "Report on the Religious Instruction of Colored People," published in the Alabama Baptist. It applies particularly to that State, but no doubt exhibits a condition of things which exists extensively in other States:—

> "The slaves are entirely dependent upon us. If we are silent, and speak not to them the words of life, they are lost. The whole horizon to them is dark, save the single spot where southern Christians stand; and if no light comes thence, they will be in darkness indeed. To them the written word of God is a sealed book; other religious books and tracts are placed out of their reach by laws rendered necessary by the blind fanaticism of others; no missionary from another land comes to them, nor if he came would we permit him to go among them. We alone are our colored brethren's keepers, and if their souls die, against us will their blood call to God out of the ground."

◆

Methodist Missions.—The Methodist Missionary Society recently opened their new rooms in New York, with unusually interesting exercises. Dr. Balro delivered an address in which he stated that the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church took its rise in 1819, and at first was both a Bible and Missionary Society. Its Constitution was adopted on the 15th of April, 1819, at a meeting of the Forsyth-st. church. The first President was Bishop McKendree. At the first anniversary, in 1820, the Treasurer's Report showed that $823 04 had been received, and $875 76 expended. In 1821, $2,328 76 were received, and $407 87 expended. The outlay was limited from a fear that larger operations might cripple somewhat the general finances of the Church. Each year, until 1832, there was a balance in the treasury, the largest amount for any one year being $14,176 11. In 1832 the Liberia Mission was commenced, and since then the Society has increasd its resources and operations. The maximum of receipts was in 1839, $135,521 94; and of expenditures in 1840, $146,498 58. Sixty thousand persons at least are estimated to have been converted by the agency of the Society.

Religious Revivals.—The Boston Traveler says that the religious papers from different sections of our widely-extended country, continue to mention the existence of unusual religious interest in their vicinity. In Plymouth, N. H., there is said to be an unusual degree of religious feeling pervading the neighborhood. In Pittsford, and in two churches in Windsor Co., Vt., there is also said to exist an unusual degree of religious feeling. In West Bradford, Mass., there has existed a strong religious interest for several months past. In Ridgefield, Ct., a somewhat extensive revival has been in progress for three months. A revival is reported as in progress at Pickering, Canada West, among the Baptists; and among the Methodist, in Cayuga District, N. Y. We have reports also of the existence of unusual religious interest in Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Tennessee, Indiana, and Mississippi. Indeed, from nearly every section of the country we are receiving intimations of the existence, here and there, of special religious interest at the present time; and this not confined to any particular sect or denomination; and, as would appear, not generally the result of any special exertions, but of the blessing of Heaven on the ordinary means of religious improvement.

◆

Sunday Telegraphing.—The New York Observer expresses its pleasure at learning "that the New York, Albany, and Buffalo Telegraph Company, at their late meeting in Utica, on motion of Prof. Morse, unanimously passed the following resolution:—'Resolved, That after the first day of October, 1847, the telegraph offices shall not be opened for business on Sundays, except one hour from 6 to 7 o'clock, P. M.' Some persons, in view of the Observer's expression of approval, may wonder what difference there is, in principle, between working one hour and several hours on a Sunday. We can not undertake to enlighten them. If Sunday is the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, it will be difficult to justify doing any work upon it. If it is not the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, it will be difficult to show why any amount of work may not be done upon it. In either case, we see but little occasion for an expression of pleasure in view of the facts.

◆

Massachusetts Sunday Laws.—The fifth Section of the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts reads as follows:—"No person shall be present at any game, sport, play, or public diversion, except concerts of sacred music, upon the evening next preceding of following the Lord's day, and every person so offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five dollars for each offence." Eight men were recently brought before a magistrate in Boston, charged with a violation of this statute, they having been taken up by a watchman who found them engaged in playing cards on a Sunday night. The watchman could not say whether they played for anything but their own amusement; yet the magistrate thought they should be fined, and accordingly levied a fine of three dollars and one-eighth of the cost upon John Curran, the keeper of the house. The question has been raised, whether a strict enforcement of this statute, particularly among the higher classes in Boston, would not supply a pretty large amount of business for the magistrates.

◆

Result of Systematic Benevolence.—A correspondent of one of the daily papers says that Dr. Phillips, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in New York, is in the habit of preaching to his congregation, the first Sunday morning of every month, on the duty of contributing liberally to the great benevolent objects of the day, keeping in view, as an object of faith and corresponding effort, the evangelization of the whole world, and taking a contribution after each discourse. The abundant fruit of this labor is seen in the very large annual contributions of his people, exceeding, as appears from the minutes of the Presbyterian General Assembly, $36,000! It might be wished, for the honor of humanity, and for the sake of a world sunk in idolatry and superstition, as well as for the safety of our free institutions, that many other pastors would thoroughly try the experiment of thus preaching, systematically and frequently, on the subject of Christian benevolence.

◆

An End of Perfection.—The community of Perfectionists at Putney, Vt., have been perpetrating scandalous outrages upon law and morals, if we can believe the unanimous testimony of their neighbors, as published in the Windham County Democrat of the 23d ult. John H. Noyes, the founder and leader of the Association, having been arrested for alledged licentious practices, absconded. George Cragin, his principal assistant, has also absconded. "The Spiritual Magazine," however, is still published. It has been denounced as a public nuisance at a meeting of the inhabitants of the village. It was decided at the meeting that "the principles of the Association are evidently disorganizing in their tendency, and adapted, if carried out to their utmost extent, to abolish all law and government, both of church and State, and erect upon their ruins an irresponsible hierarchy."

◆

Missionaries and Rum.—It is said that the bark Catalapa, which recently sailed from Boston for Smyrna, took out several missionaries of the American Board destined to Syria, and a cargo consisting of 30,000 gallons of rum. Rather a heterogeneous cargo, one would think, to be taken in the same ship.

Chinese Translation of the New Testament.—A letter from Rev. Mr. Shuck, dated Sept. 15, 1847, says there was a committee at that time in session at Shanghai, consisting exclusively of Pedobaptist missionaries, engaged in the production of a new edition of the New Testament in Chinese. The missionaries of the various denominations were engaged in a friendly discussion touching the most appropriate Chinese terms to express the words God and Holy Spirit. The subject is a most important one, and the whole body of the missionaries are about equally divided in reference to two terms, so that fortunately the discussion is both narrow and pointed. All the denominations at Shanghai, it was thought, would be upon the same side.

◆

Baptismal Regeneration.—At a late confirmation in Torquay, says an English paper, the Bishop of Exeter, one of the ultra high-church Bishops, took occasion to stigmatize some tracts then in circulation, which denied the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. "If," said his lordship, "any of you have been so unfortunate as to disbelieve this doctrine—nay, if any of you have the least doubt as to the completeness of the gift bestowed in baptism, or that it places you in any other state than that of actual salvation; I entreat you and beseech you, if any such there be, at once rather to leave the church, than to receive the holy ordinance of confirmation under such circumstances. Though to take this honest course may cause you pain, it will reflect shame only on those who have mistaught you."

◆

Slavery in the Northwest Territory.—Richard Mendenhall, a Friend, stationed among the Shawnee Indians, writes to the National Era, under date of "Friends' Shawnee School, Indian Territory, 10th mo. 30th, 1847," that slavery exists in that territory as far north as the 39th degree of north latitude. A few slaves are held by a single Indian chief, who, he says, is the only Indian in that part of the Territory, so far as he knows, who either holds or employs a slave. He says many of the Indians are opposed to slavery, and will not deliver up fugitives; while others will, for a reward, or fearing the fate of the Seminoles, apprehend and give them up; thus proving that they are "receiving the vices, if not the virtues, of civilization." "But," the writer continues:

> "It is white men in the service of the Government of the United States, and missionaries, that have introduced slavery here. And some may be startled at the information that missionaries have slaves; but startling as it may be, such is the fact. I presume that no one will be more surprised than I was on coming here to find such a state of things. There is a very extensive missionary establishment here, under the care of the Methodist Church South, and, strange as it may appear, they have some half dozen or more slaves, to assist in civilizing and Christianizing the Indians. Is not this the climax of inconsistencies? And this system of operations is not without its results; for some of the children who have been at this mission have that aversion to labor which is so common among white people in a slaveholding community; which is a sad state of things, for it is highly important that these Indian children should be trained up to habits of industry."

◆

Giving from Principle and a Sense of Duty.—The Macedonian says that one of the oldest and most faithful of the Baptist missionaries—to whom the suggestion was made that it might be desirable for him to return home, to spend a short time in this country, for the purpose of awakening more interest in his mission—writes to a friend:—

> "In regard to stirring up people at home, and spending a year in hunting up missionaries to help us, I do not consider that as any part of the business for which I came here. It is our business to do the work we were sent to perform; and it is the business of the churches at home to sustain us. And all the 'stirring up' that is talked of so much, beyond what their own sense of duty prompts them to do, is, in my opinion, perfectly useless. It is not excitement or thrilling appeals that is necessary to carry on the work of the Lord; He could open the bowels of the earth, if it were necessary, and fill our houses with gold and silver; it is action from principle, from a sense of duty, that is wanting. Let this be cherished, and there will be no need of such distressing complaints as missionaries are sending home. I hope whatever you say will be on the ground of principle and duty; and if you can succeed in making any of our brethren and sisters feel the importance of these, you will do more for the cause of missions than if you could exhort them with all the eloquence in the world."

◆

Feelings of a Slave.—The following language expressive of the feelings of a noble-minded slave, are put into the mouth of Huon by Sergeant Talfourd:—

> "That I were dead! Oh, what is death compared to slavery! Brutes may bear bondage—they were made for it, when Heaven set Man above them; but no mark, definite and indelible, is put upon one man to mark him from another, that he should live his slave. Oh, heavy curse! to have thought, reason, judgment, feelings, tastes, passions, and conscience, like another man, and not have equal liberty to use them, but call his mood their master! Why was I born with passion to be free—with faculties to use enlargement—with desire that cleaves to high achievements—and with sympathies attracting me to objects fair and noble, and yet with power over myself as little as any beast of burden? Why should I live? There are of brutes themselves that will not tame, so high in them is nature;—whom the spur and lash, instead of curbing, only chafe into prouder mettle;—that will let you kill them ere they will suffer you to master them. I am a man, and live!"

SOUTHERN ODDITIES.

> "Notice.—The subscriber, living on Carroway Lake, on Hoe's Bayou, in Carroll Parish, 16 miles on the road leading from Bayou Mason to Lake Providence, is ready with a pack of dogs to hunt runaway negroes at any time. These dogs are well trained, and are known throughout the parish. Letters addressed to me at Providence will secure immediate attention.
>
> "My terms are $5 per day for hunting the trails, whether the negro is caught or not. Where a twelve-hours' trail is shown, and the negro not taken, no charge is made. For taking a negro, $25, and no charge made for hunting
>
> "JAMES W. HALL."

☞ The above advertisement, says the Liberty Herald, we cut from the Madison Journal, published in Richmond, La., Nov. 26, 1847. It appears in the business department of the paper, surrounded by lawyers' cards, tradesmen's advertisements, notices of legal business, and patent medicines, just as "a house to let," or "a carriage for sale," would be published in a free and Christian country.

In the same paper we find a morning hymn to the praise of God; a labored essay in praise of John Wesley, and an eloquent notice of a superior race-horse, in which there is an appeal "to the Christian and philosopher," and to all who would not be "unmindful of their duty to God and their country," to cherish the breed. The editor gives no intimation of his political, religious, or social opinions, except what may be gathered from these particulars.

There is but one editorial article. In that he apologizes for failing to issue a paper the week before. The cause assigned is, that his journeyman, who had just returned from Mexico, "one of the immortal few who escaped the memorable charge on those masked batteries at Cerro Gordo," was too drunk to work. The paper is issued weekly, when the hands are sober, at $5 per annum. We have given the spirit of "The Madison Journal," and, we suppose, that gives the very "form and pressure" of the people and the times in Madison Parish, Louisiana.

◆

New York Legislature.—There is but little to report in the doings of this body last week. It has, however, we are glad to say, expressed itself averse to the extension of slavery into territory obtained from Mexico at the conclusion of the war. A resolution has also been passed by the Assembly against amendments to the post-office laws made by the last Congress. Mr. Underhill has given notice of a bill to prohibit the use of horses and boys in towing canal boats and to substitute locomotives. In looking over the Standing Committees of the Assembly, we notice the name of Benjamin Maxson, of Jefferson county, on the Library Committee, and that of John T. G. Bailey, of Madison county, on the Charitable Societies Committee.

◆

Missionaries to China.—Rev. Mr. Speer, Missionary of the Assembly's Board, states that within one year there have arrived in China twenty-one Missionaries. Of these, four are Germans, three are English, and the other nineteen are Americans. Mr. S. adds an earnest wish for a large increase of laborers, especially from the Presbyterian Church. The state of feeling toward foreigners was still very unsettled. The Missionaries, however, had not been molested. The printing at Canton, under Dr. Ball's superintendence, has amounted to about a million and a half of pages.

◆

Columbian Magazine, edited by John Inman and Robert A. West. The January number commences the ninth volume of this monthly magazine. It has long been a favorite with the public, and the publisher promises that it shall henceforth be the best magazine of its class in the United States. The number before us justifies the opinion, that his promise is made in earnest. It contains three fine engravings, a fashion-plate, and forty-eight pages of original reading matter. Published by John S. Taylor, 151 Nassau-st., N. Y.

◆

Exclusive Assemblies.—Major Noah, in his Sunday Times and Messenger, says that the only really exclusive assemblies in New York are our aristocratic churches. 'When we pass by them on Sunday, and see the liveried servants waiting outside, while their masters and mistresses are worshiping within, we think that possibly the thing may be reversed in the next world, when the masters will have to stand outside.'

◆

The Consecrated Island.—The island of Pootoo, near Chusan, in China, says an exchange, is remarkable for the number of its Hindoo temples, estimated at one hundred and eight; thirty-six of which are very spacious, where the principal heathen deites are kept. There are only a few inhabitants; but the priests, sometimes to the number of 2,000, here celebrate their orgies.

◆

Missionaries and Bibles.—It is stated that the whole present number of ordained missionaries in the world is estimated at about 1,200; and of male and female assistant missionaries, about 2,400, making a total of 3,600. The Bible has been printed in 138 languages and dialects, and all but thirty of these translations are new.

◆

Lectures on the History of the Sabbath.—Rev. Thomas B. Brown is about to commence a series of lectures on the history of the Sabbath at the Seventh-day Baptist Chapel in Eleventh-st., between Bowery and Third-avenue. The first lecture will be delivered on Sunday evening, Jan. 23, at 7 1-2 o'clock.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Senate.

In the Senate, the principal subject of discussion last week was the Ten Regiment Bill, which seems to open a door for considering every thing connected with the war. Speeches upon it were made by Reverdy Johnson, Clayton, Crittenden, Cass, and others. A petition was presented by Mr. Clayton, from the Friends in New York, Vermont, Michigan, &c., for the adoption of measures for the termination of the war. Mr. Hale presented petitions from Maine, Massachusetts, and Indiana, praying Congress to withdraw the troops from Mexico, and for the immediate termination of the war; one was from 2,931 Unitarians, which he said he was highly gratified in being selected to present. Mr. Hannegan submitted a resolution that no treaty of peace can be made with Mexico, having due regard to the best interests of the United States, which does not establish as the boundary the most suitable line for a military defense; that in no contingency can the United States consent to the establishment of a monarchial government within the limits of Mexico, by the intervention of any European powers; that it may become necessary and proper, and it is within the constitutional capacity of the United States, to hold Mexico as a territorial appendage.

House of Representatives.

The House, in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, listened to several speeches in relation to the war and kindred subjects. Aside from this, most of the time was occupied upon bills of a private or unimportant character.

WAR NEWS.

We last week reported the rumor that Gen. Scott had been recalled from the command of the army. It is now said that a special messenger was dispatched with the order, but that he was stopped at Richmond by a telegraphic communication, and recalled, as intelligence had been received that Gen. Pierce was hurrying on, and it was deemed advisable to take his opinion in the premises.

The following are the principal items of intelligence received from Mexico within a week past:—

Gen Scott had issued orders announcing that the United States army is about to spread over and occupy the whole Republic of Mexico, of which it will hold possession until Mexico sues for peace upon acceptable terms to the United States.

Numerous orders are published relating to taxes. All fines heretofore payable to the Mexican Government are demanded now to support the army. He enumerates various articles for taxation. Lotteries are prohibited.

The Mexican Government is silently taking measures for suppressing the intrigues of foreign monarchies. In consequence of the State Governments not fulfilling their promise to aid the General Government with such resources as they could command, the latter was much cramped for means.

Lieut. McDonnelly, of the 3d Artillery, and two other officers, with a small party, left Puebla for Jalapa, on the 15th, having charge of considerable money. They were attacked in the night by fourteen robbers, and, although only three of our countrymen had arms, they defeated the ladrones, and arrived safe at their destination.

◆

The Lost Found.—Our readers will doubtless recollect, says the Brattleboro' (Vt.) Phœnix, that we published an account of the mysterious disappearance of a stranger, calling himself Dana, who left a valise, containing over $500 in gold and silver coin, at Maj. Smith's Hotel. On Tuesday a man, ragged and emaciated, appeared at the hotel, and asked for his valise; and he gave such a minute and exact description of its contents, as showed him to be the person who left it. He was seen in the village on Monday, and slept in a barn on Monday night. He gave a singular account of himself. He says he is a shoemaker, and earned the money he had with him, working at his trade in Newburyport, Mass., where he has a brother residing, named Aaron Dana. He says he left Newburyport and came into this State. He recollects being in this village in October, 1847, and going out in the morning to some grocery and drinking two glasses of beer. Where he went, or what he did, after that, he has no recollection, until about a month since consciousness returned, and he found himself at Newark, N. J., sick and almost naked. He recollected being here, and started for this place, which he reached on Monday, in the condition above described. Though he exhibited consciousness, his mind is evidently weak, unsound, and his body laboring under disease. It was therefore thought advisable to place him in the Insane Asylum of this place, until his friends could receive information and take charge of him. He consented to go, and is now in good hands. His money is in the Savings Bank.

◆

Important Arrest.—This morning I am informed that the supposed robber of the President of the West Chester Bank has been captured within one mile of Port Deposit. The fellow who is believed to be the robber, was traced from Philadelphia to an old school-house near Dr. Broughton's farm, (about two miles from Port Deposit,) now in the occupancy of a fellow by the name of McDowell, a brother of the supposed robber. A stranger called on Dr. Broughton, and after making inquiries in relation to the residence of McDowell, went there and arrested the suspected individual. In the mean time there were no less than eight men stationed in the woods around the house, which, after the arrest, was searched, but no money found. The police officers, (for so they proved to be,) I presume have taken him to Philadelphia. He is said to have been in the Penitentiary several times, and doubtless is no novice.

[Cor. Delaware Republican Jan. 4.

Cold Weather.—The Albany Argus of Jan. 12, says that the weather of the day before was as cold as the thermometers would admit—some of them being too short to accommodate the decadence of the mercury. On the Troy road, we learn, the mercury stood 24° below zero. At the railroad dépôt at East Albany, it was 22° below zero at 7 A. M. In Troy it marked 18° below, and in Albany it fell to 17°. Monday night is said to have been the coldest since 1840, when on the 17th of February the thermometer stood at 23° below. In '43 its lowest point reached was 14° below on the 17th of February. The Boston Atlas of the same date says that the weather on Monday night was the coldest that had been experienced there for thirteen years. In January, 1835, there being a large body of snow on the ground, the thermometer stood one morning at 13° below zero. Yesterday morning it was at 10 below at sunrise, and at 9 o'clock it stood at 5 below in State-st.

Tuesday, the 11th of January, 1848, will hereafter be recorded in the New England calendar, as the cold Tuesday. We learn that in Bristol, N. H., the mercury fell to twenty-six degrees below zero on that day. At Lyme, N. H., it was thirty-three below; at Hanover thirty-four; at St. Johnsbury, Vt., the mercury fell to forty, and frozen; and at Franconia it froze so hard that it is thought it will require a long spell of moderate weather to thaw it!

◆

The Explosion of the Steamer A. N. Johnston.—The following is an extract from a letter from a clergyman to the Editor of the Western Christian Advocate:—

"I have read descriptions of steamboat disasters which appeared to be highly colored; but I am now satisfied that the most graphic pen cannot begin to give a true idea of the reality. The first thing that arrested my attention was the dead body of the first clerk. It was lying on a board in the corn-field. Next I saw a company of sufferers, partly naked, shivering around a fire which had been kindled for them. Next a waste house literally filled with dead, dying, and most terribly wounded. The physicians had just commenced dressing their wounds. Then arose from that house a wail of woe sufficient to sicken any human heart. One was calling most piteously for his mother, 'Mother, O mother, mother!' But his mother was far away, and unconscious of the sufferings of her son. As I passed on down to the wreck, the dead and dying were strewed along, some on blankets and matresses and some on the naked earth. The boat, after the explosion, had taken fire, and was burned down to the water's edge. They were still fishing for the bodies of the dead out of the wreck.

◆

Steamboat Explosion — Great Loss of Life.—Full particulars have been received of the explosion of the steamboat Blue Ridge. She blew up on the Ohio River, at 1 o'clock on Saturday night, during a severe snow storm, with a tremendous explosion, reducing to a complete wreck the cabin over the boilers. The hull sunk immediately, leaving a portion of the cabin afloat, to which the passengers saved retreated for safety. Before relieved the cabin floated 8 miles down the river. No just conclusion could be arrived at as to the number of persons lost. 70 souls were on board of her, of whom 20 or 30 perished. The passengers were mostly from Kanawha and Gallipolis. Few persons saved any thing, having to go on shore in their night clothes. The cause of the explosion undoubtedly arose from the defective character of the boilers, which had been in use 9 years.

◆

Relief for Ireland and Scotland.—The New-England Committee for the Relief of the distressed poor of Ireland and Scotland, have received contributions as per table below:

Where from.	Cash.	Provisions, &c. Value.	Total for each State
Massachusetts	$99,691 96	$15,950	$115,641 96
Maine	6,315 03	3,566	9,881 03
New Hampshire	10,707 38	7,695	18,401 33
Vermont	2,974 02	1,397	4,371 02
Rhode Island	950 50	80	1,030 50
Connecticut	731 00	337	1,068 00
Indiana	223 16		223 16
Illinois	20 00		20 00
Wisconsin	216 25		216 25
Arkansas	153 75		153 75
Total	$121,982 05	$29,025	$151,007 05

SUMMARY.

The Patterson Intelligencer mentions, on the authority of a private letter from Mexico, that the measles are raging to a frightful extent among the children of Zacatecas and Durango. A singular peculiarity of the disease is, that it is accompanied with severe vomiting and the bloody flux. About four thousand children are supposed to have died in the city of Zacatecas, and about the same number at Durango. Mr. Jas. Major, formerly of Patterson, now in Durango, lost an interesting little boy, about 2 years of age. In the neighborhood where Mr. M. resides there is scarcely a child left, all having died of this disease.

The Ohio State Journal is requested by Gov. Slade to say, that the statement made in the Catholic Telegraph of Cincinnati, that one of the teachers sent out by the Board of National Popular Education had become a Roman Catholic, he has ascertained to be untrue; and that, so far as he can learn, not the slightest disposition to embrace the Roman Catholic faith has been manifested by any teacher sent out by the Board. He requests that this contradiction may find a place in the papers that have given currency to the statement referred to.

The Iowa Observer, a religious newspaper, is already established in this ancient domain of Black Hawk and his prophet. It is less than ten years since the southern representatives in Congress fiercely opposed the formation of a territorial government for Iowa, on the ground that it was not and never would be inhabited by white people, but would doubtless be occupied by Indian tribes.

Dr. Gilbert, assisted by several distinguished members of the Profession, removed a cancer, occupying one entire breast, from a woman residing in Philadelphia, and who was subjected to the action of chloroform. During the operation she manifested no sensibility, and has since stated that she felt no pain, except a little twinge toward the close of the operation, when the effect of the chloroform began to subside. It was immediately readministered, and complete insensibility restored.

By the abstract of the returns of the Overseers of the Poor of Massachusetts for the year ending November 1, 1847, prepared by the Secretary of the Commonwealth, it appears that the number of State paupers is 9,005, that the number of State paupers who are foreigners is 7,035; that the number of paupers from England and Ireland is 6,383; that the number of foreign paupers who have come into the Commonwealth within one year is 2,501; that the proportion of paupers probably made so by intemperance in themselves or others is 8,703; that the nett amount of expense of supporting and relieving paupers is $347,411 19.

We learn from the Bangor Whig of the 12th, that a young man of that city, by the name of C. E. Leighton, about nineteen years old, has been arrested on charge of having robbed the Post Office. Drafts were found in his possession to the amount of $2,400. And though at first he denied having taken any others, he at length confessed that he had taken various letters from the Post Office boxes—one of them containing between $200 and $300, also various drafts and other matters.

A letter from a volunteer, published in the Salem Advertiser, states that "that part of the Massachusetts regiment who were imprisoned (at Vera Cruz) for refusing to take the uniform provided for them, were forced to put it on at the point of the bayonet, and harmony was once more restored to our ranks." What a pleasant sort of harmony must that be, which is brought about at the point of the bayonet.

The Agent of the City Tract Society states, that there are in Brooklyn over 600 places where liquor is regularly sold, being one to about every nineteen families. Supposing the average receipts of each of these grog-shops to be $3 a day, which is a low estimate, we have $1,800 a day spent in Brooklyn for intoxicating drinks, or $657,000 a year.

The steamship Washington, which left Southampton on the 19th of December, arrived at New York on the 16th inst., bringing no later intelligence. She had a tempestuous voyage, broke parts of her machinery, and was obliged to put into Halifax for fuel. The passengers have published a card expressing their confidence in the ship and their high esteem of the Captain.

The Lawrence Courier Extra contains a history and description of that town, with a map on a large scale. The first building was erected in 1845. There are now incorporated companies in the town with capitals amounting to $5,500,000, for manufacturing purposes. In the course of the last year 7,735,000 bricks were laid. There are eight religious societies in the town.

There will be six eclipses in 1848—four of the sun and two of the moon. March 5, a partial eclipse of the sun, visible. March 19, a total eclipse of the moon, partially visible. April 3, eclipse of the sun, invisible. Aug. 28, another eclipse of the sun, invisible. Sept. 12, a total eclipse of the moon, visible. Sept. 27, eclipse of the sun, invisible.

The Milwaukie Sentinel gives the official returns of the recent Census from fourteen Counties of the State of Wisconsin, showing an increase, within the short period of eighteen months, of 35,934—about 30 per cent. The whole population of the State, at the present time, the Sentinel thinks, is about 210,000.

It is just 38 years since Massachusetts gave a Speaker to the House of Representatives, and in the same year in which Jos. R. Varnum, the last Speaker from the State, was elected, Winthrop, the present, was born in Boston.

The steamboats Jewess and Walcott, and two schooners, were totally destroyed by fire at Baltimore, Jan. 11, while lying at the wharves. The Jewess belonged to the Norfolk line, and is a small boat. She was about starting with the great Southern mail.

Mrs. Henrietta Glenn has recovered damages to the amount of $2,000, of Walker Graham, the proprietor of a stage line, in the U. S. Circuit Court for Western Pennsylvania, for injuries she sustained by being upset in one of Graham's stages.

A letter from Washington says: "There are said to be nine thousand applications, resulting from the Mexican War, for bounty lands and treasury scrip, so that the Pension Office is overwhelmed. Hence the necessity for new clerks, and even new buildings."

The following is an extract from the Records of the town of Dedham, Mass., in the year 1674: "The sum of eight shillings is allowed to Nathaniel Heaton for keeping the dogs out of the meeting-house and shutting the door."

The Receivers of the Plainfield Bank have decided to accept the offer repeatedly made by the Beaches, to pay all the liabilities of that institution upon surrender of the assets. We shall now see if the offer was made in good faith.

Three soldiers, belonging to the 82d Reg't, died at Halifax on Christmas night, through excessive drinking, they having gone to bed in a state of intoxication. It is said that two or three others came nigh sharing the same fate—a sergeant having had a pint and a half of spirits pumped from his stomach!

The Postmaster General has decided that letters to the officers and seamen of the navy, as well as the army in Mexico, and on the Mexican coast or the frontier, are free of postage, under the law of the last session.

The magnetic telegraph will, it is now expected, be in complete working order between Washington City and Columbia, S. C., on or about the 15th inst.

The Union publishes a letter from Monterey, which says that 170 mules, laden with gold dust, valued at $70,000, had been captured on their way to San Luis Potosi.

The way-bill from Montpelier, Vt., received in Boston, has an endorsement of the Postmaster, stating that on Friday morning the mercury fell in that place to thirty degrees below zero.

A bill establishing a Common School system has passed both branches of the Legislature of Florida.

$57,711 has been paid to the State of New Jersey by passengers and freight crossing the State within the past year.

The New Hope and Delaware Bridge Co.'s Bank officers, according to the Lambertville Telegraph, (published on the side of the river where the banking-house is located,) have received the chief part of the circulation in that neighborhood in payment of Bank dues, and the few deposits have been either returned or secured. The Bank has a valuable real estate in the bridge, banking-house, and lands in New-York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois. Holders of bills, therefore, had perhaps better not sacrifice them.

The following resolution, introduced by Mr. King of Milwaukie, was adopted in the Wisconsin Constitutional Convention by a decided vote: Resolved, That the Committee on General Provisions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of incorporating into the Bill of Rights an article prohibiting all magistrates, officers holding office by virtue of any law of this State, from issuing any process, or rendering any official assistance for the arrest or imprisonment of any person claimed as a fugitive from slavery.

Mrs. Knightley, a lady of wealth, who died lately at Hampstead, England, has left the whole of her property, on the death of her neice, with the exception of about 300*l.* in legacies, to the Bible and Baptist Missionary Societies.

An Indian has been arrested in the Cherokee country on a charge of having sold as slaves certain free negroes, who were taken off South and again sold. The Advocate states that companies of negro dealers overrun every section of that country at pleasure.

During the year, 1847 there were in New-York, 264 fires and 68 false alarms. Eight persons were burned to death, and five or six others were injured. The amount of property destroyed was not far from $400,000. In December there were 16 fires and 3 alarms.

The Lowell Courier says a new canal recently completed for the use of the factories in Lowell, cost $580,000. The canal commences at the Pawtucket Dam, and ends at the Western Canal, near the Tremont Mills. Its length is about 5,000 feet, or a little less than a mile. The water way is 100 feet wide, and 15 feet deep.

The Emperor of Russia recently sent over to England ten bakers to teach gratuitously her Brittanic Majesty's subjects. One of these bakers, says the North British Mail, having been employed by the parochial board of Glasgow, a specimen of his manufacture was exhibited at a meeting of that body, lately and contrasted with a loaf baked from the same grain by a Scotchman.

There appears to be a prospect that a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt, will be passed during the present session of the Legislature of Maryland—a bill in the Senate for that purpose having been made the order of the day for Thursday. Should it pass the Senate, it is thought it will receive the sanction of the House of Delegates.

The Esperance, a French vessel, laden with a cargo valued at 100,000 francs, was entirely destroyed by fire at Cette. One of the crew had tapped a cask of brandy, with a lighted candle in his hand. The brandy flew out and came in contact with the candle; the result was the destruction of both vessel and cargo.

On Staten Island, Jan. 11, at sunrise, the mercury in the thermometer stood two degrees above zero. This is said to be the lowest since the great fire during the winter of 1835.

A school for gipsies has been opened at Farnham, England. It is intended for the education of orphan gipsy children, and for the children of those gipsies who have large families. The religious education of the children is to be particularly attended to.

The Nortern Exchange Bank suspended redemptions at Albany, Monday, Jan. 10. The notes of the Bank are secured by the stock of the State, and the loss on them cannot be much.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, JAN. 17.

ASHES—Pots $5 75 with small sales; Pearls 7 00.

FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 37; Western New York and Michigan 6 12; Oswego 6 00. Meal 3 12 to 3 37. Rye Flour 4 25.

GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 40; Ohio 1 33; Long Island 1 28. Corn 64 to 70c. Rye 90c. Oats 50c. for Northern, 47 for Southern.

PROVISIONS—Old Prime Pork 6 75; old Mess 10 50; new 11 75. Mess Beef 8 50. Butter, Ohio, 12c.; State 14 to 23, according to quality. Cheese 7 a 7½c.

DIED,

At Mystic Bridge, Conn, on the 25th ult., of congestion of the brain, Albert G. Lanphear, only son of Ethan and Elizabeth F. Lanphear, aged 8 years, 11 months, and 18 days.

"Weep not for those that early rest
From sin and pain; they 're soonest blest."

LETTERS.

A. D. Titsworth, John Green, Wm. Tew, J. Joslin, E. Lewis, Isaac Brock, E. H. Coon.

RECEIPTS.

I. Brock, Coudesport, Pa.	$3 50	pays to vol.	4	No. 30
I. Babcock, Townsend, O.	3 00	"	5	" 26
J. Crandall, Fall River, Mass.	2 00	"	4	" 52
E. Lewis, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	"	4	" 36
W. M. Rogers, Brooklyn, L. I.	2 00	"	4	" 52

☞ There are at this office two small boxes containing curiosities from China—one directed to David Clarke, Brookfield; the other to W. C. Kenyon, Alfred. We shall retain them until an opportunity occurs to send by private conveyance, unless directed how to send by public conveyance. We have also on hand a box of books, with Minutes of the Missionary and Tract Societies for the Western Association, which we wish to send to Maxson Green, of Alfred. Will he inform us if they could be conveniently obtained from Rochester, in case they were sent to that place by Express.

RECEIPTS FOR MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association has received the following sums since his report as published in the Minutes:—

Church in Hayfield, Pa., by A. A. F. Randolph,	$9 20
Francis Wilcox, Whitestown, N. Y.	3 00
Joseph Burdick, Scott,	1 00
John Saunders, Clarence,	1 00
John D. Collins, New Orleans,	50

A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

Metuchin, N. J., Jan. 11, 1848.

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION — EXECUTIVE BOARD.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held in New York, on the evening of secondday, Feb. 7, at 7 o'clock. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the members of the Board, and that those having business to present will make the same known to the Corresponding Secretary, Thomas B. Brown, previous to the meeting.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, gilt edges, $1 25; ditto, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman New York, will be promptly attended to.

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.

CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, Proprietor.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First commencing Wednesday,	Aug. 25, and ending	Dec. 1
Second " "	Dec. 15, "	March 22
Third " "	April 5, "	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold th reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!

Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. Complete in two imperial octavo volumes, of more than fourteen hundred pages of double column letter-press: and upwards of three hundred elegant illustrations. Price $5 00

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact a whole English Library fused down into one cheap book.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

In addition to the great number of pictorial illustrations in the English edition, the American publishers have greatly enriched the work by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron, a full length portrait of Dr. Johnson, and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson.

These important additions to the American edition, together with a better paper and binding than the English, must give this a decided preference with the American reader.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem —David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Cla

Miscellaneous.

WINTER CALCULATION—FUEL.

Every farmer knows that a green stick of wood is much heavier than a seasoned one. If a stick of beach or maple, or any other wood commonly used for fuel, be weighed when first cut, and again when thoroughly seasoned, it will be found to have lost about one third of its weight, which is, of course, the water in the wood, evaporated by drying. How much water is there, then, in a single cord of wood? There are 128 cubic feet; deducting two-fifths for the interstices between the sticks, leaves 77 solid feet of wood. One-third, or 26 cubic feet of this is water, which is equal to more than six barrels, the quantity in every cord of green wood. The teamster, then, who draws in one winter a hundred cords of wood to market, loads, draws, and unloads, more than 600 barrels of water, which he need not have done, had the wood been cut a year sooner and properly seasoned. How much would he charge for drawing those 600 barrels, in water, separately?

Again—In burning green wood, the water in the wood, being cold, is heated from freezing to boiling. In the consumption of every cord of wood, therefore, six barrels of water are thus made to boil, the heat of the wood passing into the water, instead of being liberated and becoming available, as would be the case if the wood was dry, and no water to heat. Many of our villages, containing two or three thousand inhabitants, consume each year five thousand cords of wood, one-third of which, at least, or sixteen hundred, is green. Hence, the people of such vilages are at the needless expense of boiling about ten thousand barrels of cold water yearly. How many village taxes would the expense of doing this pay?

Again—It is ascertained that the heat required to evaporate a barrel of water, after it is heated to boiling, is more than five times that required for the heating. That is,—if a vessel of cold water be placed over a fire, and a half hour be required to heat it from the freezing to the boiling point,—then it will be found to require five more half hours to evaporate all the water. Consequently, in burning a cord of green wood, the heat required to drive off the six barrels of water in steam, which must be done while the wood is burning, is five times as great as the mere boiling of the water, or equal to heating thirty barrels to boiling. Hence, the farmer who burns twenty cords of green wood in winter, as many do, also performs the needless task of evaporating sixty barrels of water, which is equal to heating to the boiling point no less than six hundred barrels.

Is there any mistake or error in these calculations? Then let it be pointed out. The weight of water in a green stick, may be easily known by first weighing it, then seasoning it by the stove a few weeks, and then weighing it again. In this way the quantity of water in a cord may be determined without mistake. The heat required for evaporating cun be ascertained by experiment. All the otber calculations follow as a matter of course, and contain no material error. Now is the time for every one to have his wood cut a year in advance, and if possible, two years, so as to season one year under shelter.

Again—It has been found that in a common fire-place, the loss of heat which escapes through the chimney, is nine-tenths of the amount caused by the consumption of the wood; that is, nine-tenths are lost. This has been determined by comparing the quantity of wood needed to heat the same room equally, where a fire-place, and stove with forty feet pipe, were each used Hence, the village which burns a thousand cords of wood in fire-places, expends nine-tenths of this amount, or nine hundred cords, in heating the air above the chimney-tops. Through the chimney of a large fire-place, there is a current of hot air, a foot square, and moving four feet a second. That is, four cubic feet of hot air are sent out into the wide atmosphere every second, which is equal to eighty-six thousand cubic feet in twenty-four hours, the amount which every farmer who uses an open fire-place, contributes to the winds. [Cultivator.

◆

PROVIDENTIAL ESCAPE FROM A TIGER.

Wolves having done much mischief at Grœnekloof, where they even entered a yard and took away a sheep, and in the fields worried several beasts belonging to the Hottentots, an attempt was made, on the 6th of August, to find out their haunts, and, if possible, to destroy them. For that purpose the missionaries, Bonatz and Schmitt, with about thirty Hottentots, set out early in the morning towards the Lanweskloof hill, where they are mostly met with. One of these animals was seen, and lamed by a shot, but escaped, and entered the bushes. The Hottentots followed; but the missionaries, not expecting to succeed, were returning, when the party called to them that the wounded wolf w[illegible] in the thicket. Brother Schmitt rode back, and alighting, entered with a Hottentot of the name of Philip Moses. The dog started some animal, which those within the bushes could not see; but the Hotenttots, remaining on the outside, perceiving it to be a tiger, called aloud to the missionary to return. He, therefore, with Philip, began to retreat backward, pointing his gun, and ready to fire in case the animal should make his appearance. Suddenly a tiger sprang forward, but from a quarter not expected, and by a flying leap over the bushes, fastened on the Hottentot, seizing his nose and face with claws and teeth. I measured the distance of the place from whence the tiger made his spring to that on which the Hottentot stood, and found it full twenty feet, over bushes from six to eight feet high. Brother Schmitt observed, that if it had not been for the horror of the scene it would have been a most amusing, sight, to behold the enraged creature fly like a bird over that length of ground and bushes, with open jaw and lashing tail, screaming with the greatest violence. Poor Philip was thrown down in the conflict, and lay now upon and then under the tiger. The missionary might easily have effected his escape, but his own safety never entered his thoughts. Duty and pity made him instantly run forward to the assistance of the sufferer. He pointed his gun, but the motion of both the Hottentot and the tiger, in rolling about and struggling, were so swift that he durst not venture to pull the trigger lest he should injure Philip. The tiger perceiving him take aim, instantly quitted his hold, worked himself from under the Hottentot, and flew like lightning on brother Schmitt. As the gun was of no use in such close quarters, he let it fall, and presented his left arm to shield his face. The tiger instantly seized it with his jaw, brother Schmitt with the same arm catching one of his paws to prevent his out-stretched claws from reaching his body. With the other paw, however, the tiger continued striking toward his breast, and tearing his clothes. Both fell in the scuffle, and providentially in such a position that the missionary's knee, without design, came to rest on the pit of the tiger's stomach. At the same time he grasped the animal's throat with his right hand, keeping him down with all his might. The seizure of his throat made the tiger instantly let go his hold, but not before brother Schmitt had received another bite nearer the elbow. His face lay right over that of the tigers, whose open mouth, from the pressure of the wind-pipe, sent forth the most hideous, hoarse, and convulsive groans, while his starting eyes, like live coals, seemed to flash fire. In this situation brother Schmitt called aloud to the Hottentots to come to his rescue, for his strength was fast failing, rage and agony supplying to the animal extraordinary force in his attempts to disengage himself. The Hottentots at length ventured to enter the thicket, and one of them snatching the loaded gun which lay on the ground, presented it and shot the tiger under the missionary's hand, right through the heart. His death was instantaneous, his eyes shut, his jaw fell, and he lay motionless. Had any life been left, his dying struggles might yet have proved fatal to some of his assailants. [Travels in Africa.

◆

THE SILVER CUP.

The palace of the Duke de Montre was decorated for a banquet. A thousand wax lights burned in its stately rooms, making them bright as mid-day. Along the walls glowed the priceless tapestry of the Gobelius, and beneath the foot lay the fabrics of Persia. Rare vases filled with flowers stood on the marble stands, and their breath went up like incense before the life-like pictures shrined in their golden frames above. In the great hall stood immense tables covered with delicacies from all lands and climes. Upon the sideboard glittered massive plate, and the rich glass of Murano. Music, now low and soft, now bold and high, floated in through the open casement, and was answered at intervals by tones of magic sweetness.

All was ready. The noble and gifted poured into the gorgeous saloons. Silks rustled, plumes waved, and jeweled embroideries flashed from Genoa velvets. Courtly congratulations fell from every lip, for the Duke de Montre had made a new step in the path to power. Wit sparkled, the laugh went round, and his guests pledged him in wine that a hundred years had mellowed. Proudly the duke replied; but his brow darkened, and his cheek paled with passion, for his son sat motionless before his untasted cup.

"Wherefore is this?" he angrily demanded. "When did my first-born learn to insult his father?"

The graceful stripling sprang from his seat, and knelt meekly before his parent. His sunny curls fell back from his upturned face, and his youthful countenance was radiant with a brave and generous spirit.

"Father," he said, "I last night learned a lesson that sunk into my heart. Let me repeat it, and then, at thy command, I will drain the cup. I saw a laborer stand at the door of a gay shop. He held in his hand the earnings of a week, and his wife, with a sickly babe and two famishing little ones, clung to his garments, and besought him not to enter. He tore himself away, for his thirst was strong, and but for the care of a stranger, his family would have perished.

"We went on, and, father, a citizen of noble air and majestic form descended the wide steps of his fine mansion. His wife put back the curtains, and watched him eagerly and wishfully as he rode away. She was very, very lovely, fairer than any lady of the court, but the shadow of a sad heart was fast falling on he beauty. We saw her gaze around upon the desolate splendor of her saloon, and then clasp her hands in the wild agony of despair. When we returned, her husband lay helpless on a couch, and she sat weeping beside him.

"Once more we paused. A carriage stopped before a palace. It was rich with burnished gold, and the armorial bearings of a duke were visible in the moonbeams. We waited for its owner to alight, but he did not move, and he gave no orders. Soon the servants came crowding out. Sorrowfully they lifted him in their arms, and I saw that some of the jewels were torn from his mantle, and his plumed cap was crushed and soiled, as if by the pressure of many footsteps. They bore him into the palace, and I wondered if his duchess wept like the beautiful wife of the citizen.

"As I looked on all this, my tutor told me that it was the work of the red wine, which leaps gaily up and laughs over its victims, in demon merriment. I shuddered, father, and resolved never again to taste it, lest I too should fall. But your word is law to me. Shall I drain the cup?"

The duke looked wonderingly upon his first-born, and then, placing his hand gravely yet fondly upon his head, answered:

"No, my son, touch it not. It is poison, as thy tutor told thee. It fires the brain, darkens the intellect, destroys the soul. Put it away from thee, and so shalt thou grow up wise and good, a blessing to thyself and to thy country."

He glanced around the circle. Surprise and admiration were on every face, and, moved by the same impulse, all arose while one of their number spoke.

"Thou hast done nobly, boy," he said, "and thy rebuke shall not soon be forgotten. We have congratulated thy father upon the acquisition of honors which may pass with the passing season. We now congratulate him upon that best of all possessions, a son worthy of France and of himself."

The haughty courtiers bowed a glowing assent, and each clasped the hand of the boy. But the father took him to his heart; and even now, among the treasured relics of the family is numbered that silver cup.

◆

A tradesman wrote to his customer, who was in his debt—"Sir, if you will let me have the amount of my bill, you will oblige me—if not, I must oblige you!"

THE GIPSY CHILD.

BY ELIZA COOK.

He sprung to life in a crazy tent,
Where the cold wind whistled through many a rent;
Rude was the voice, and rough were the hands,
That soothed his wailings and swathed his bands.
No tissue of gold, no lawn was there,
No snowy robe for the new-born heir;
But the mother wept, and the father smiled,
With heartfelt joy o'er the Gipsy Child.

He grows like the young oak, healthy and broad,
With no home but the forest, no bed but the sward;
Half naked, he wades in the limpid stream,
Or dances about in the scorching beam.
The dazzling glare of the banquet sheen
Hath never fallen on him, I ween;
But fragments are spread, and the wood-fire piled,
And sweet is the meal of the Gipsy Child.

He wanders at large, while maidens admire
His raven hair and his eyes of fire;
They mark his cheek's rich tawny hue,
With the deep carnation flushing through;
He laughs aloud, and they covet his teeth,
All pure and white as their own pearl-wreath;
And the courtly dame and the damsel mild,
Will turn to gaze on the Gipsy Child.

Up with the sun, he is roving along,
Whistling to mimic the blackbird's song;
He wanders at nightfall to startle the owl,
And is baying again to the watch-dog's howl;
His limbs are unshackled, his spirit is bold,
He is free from the evils of fashion and gold;
His dower is scant and his life is wild,
But kings might envy the Gipsy Child.

◆

HABITS OF QUEEN ISABELLA OF SPAIN.

The Queen rises very late, as she seldom retires to bed before three or four o'clock in the morning. She takes her supper regularly at 2 o'clock in the morning. In the public audiences given by the Queen, one is almost sure of having to wait one or two hours beyond the time appointed; this is even the case with her ministers, who have to wait as well as others. They are, indeed, sometimes sent away after waiting a long time without seeing her Majesty at all, and are sometimes called up in the middle of the night to an audience. She listens attentively to her ministers when they are speaking to her, and is especially delighted with an opportunity proposed of performing some act of benevolence. Though possessed of deep sensibilities, she is nevertheless bold and fearless. She boldly drives a team of four horses, and on horseback such is her intrepidity, that she ventures to ride the most spirited horses, such as no one but herself would venture to bestride. Her cousin, the Infanta Donna Josefa, riding out with her one day, said, "My dear, your horses know that you are Queen, and obey you perfectly."

The Queen is very fond of music, and does not confine herself merely to hear, but she herself sings and takes a part in the concerts which she gives, singing Spanish airs with all the grace of an Andalusian. One of her greatest passions, however, is the toilette. She is fond of talking on this subject with her ladies of honor, and shewing them the new dresses from London and Paris. The active life led by the Queen gives to her youthful person all the appearance and charms of robust health. The cares of royalty do not oppress her much; she affects to care little about being Queen, and to desire most the welfare of her country.

◆

A Lion's Remorse.—In the beginning of the last century, there was in the menagerie at Cassel, a lion that showed an astonishing degree of tameness towards the woman who had the care of him. This went so far that the woman, in order to amuse the company that came to see the animal, would often rashly place not only her hand, but even her head, between his tremendous jaws. She had frequently performed this experiment without suffering any injury; but having once introduced her head into the lion's mouth, the animal made a sudden snap, and killed her on the spot. Undoubtedly, this catastrophe was unintentional on the part of the lion; for probably, at the fatal moment, the hair of the woman's head irritated the lion's throat, and compelled him to sneeze or cough: at least the suggestion appears to be confirmed by what followed; for, as soon as the lion perceived that he had killed his attendant, the good-tempered, grateful animal, exhibited signs of the deepest melancholy—laid himself down by the side of the dead body, which he would not suffer to be taken from him—refused to take any food, and in a few days pined himself to death.

◆

Boot Heels.—A revolution is very much needed in the manufacture of boots—the modern fashion of high heels being positively injurious to the frame-work of the feet. If the foot is tilted upon the top of a high-heeled boot, the toes are pressed forward, down an inclined plane, which distorts them, and leads to the formation of corns. In multitudes of young men, the pressure is so great forward, that the large toe-joint and the little toe metatarsal articulation are affected with bunions, swell, and sometimes remain permanently enlarged and sensitive. All beauty and symmetry are forever lost—and to the last days of an extreme old age, a foot thus tortured into a state of disease will be both sore and distorted. Something might also be said of ladies' shoes, with high heels; but as they are victims to other and even worse effects on the chest from a determination to improve upon nature, their case is deferred for another occasion. [Med. & Surg. Jour.

◆

The Hindoo Girl.—The following interesting fact was stated in a recent lecture by Mr. Pierpont:

At the present day, the uneducated Hindoo girl, by the use of her hands simply, could surpass the delicacy and fineness of texture, productions of the most perfect machinery, in the manufacture of cotton and muslin clothes. In England, cotton had been spun so fine that it would require a thread of 490 miles in length to weigh a pound—but the Hindoo girl had, by her hands, constructed a thread which would require to be extended 1,000 miles to weigh a pound; and the Deccale muslins of her manufacture, when spread on the ground and covered with dew, are no longer visible.

◆

A young soldier of the 7th infantry, describing his first fight, at the National Bridge in Mexico, says:—"My feelings at the first fire I am unable to describe. I did not feel inclined to run, yet was afraid to fire for fear of killing somebody—but after two or three rounds it was all over, and I fired away with the rest of them."

VARIETY.

The editor of the Albany Evening Journal says: We had occasion yesterday to telegraph a friend whom we believed to be in Philadelphia. The communication was left in the office in this city about 10 o'clock—sent to New York, where it was received, copied and carried to Jersey City, where it was forwarded to Philadelphia. The person addressed was hunted and reported at Carlyle, within thirty miles of St. Louis! The lightning was again called into requisition, the communication forwarded, the person found, and an answer received at 12 o'clock! Thus was a message, under these disadvantageous circumstances, transmitted 2,500 miles in two hours!

Two sons of Mr. William Moyer, one aged ten and the other twelve years, undertook to walk over the ice on the dam at Port Carbon, Pa., but had proceeded but a short distance before the ice gave way, and sinking into the water, they were both almost instantly drowned. A person passing by at the time endeavored to rescue them, and seizing a plank which he threw on the ice, had almost grasped one of the boys, when the ice gave way, and rendered all subsequent efforts futile.

A letter from Dublin, in a Boston paper, states, that, "in the Court of Chancery, Master Murphy called upon the Receiver in the cause of O'Sullivan vs. O'Sullivan, to account, when that gentleman stated the appalling fact that during the last year three hundred of the tenants had died, and were interred in one trench! The Receiver added, that the holdings of those persons are now unoccupied. The estate lies in the County of Cork."

Major W. W. Morris, of the 4th Artillery, has received a letter from his brother, Captain Gouveneur Morris, 4th U. S. Infantry, dated Jalapa, September 15th, in which he states that the command to which he was attached, consisting of between seven and eight hundred men, in marching from Vera Cruz to Jalapa, lost in conflict with the guerillas, in killed and wounded, one hundred and fifty men—one fifth of the whole force engaged.

The Attica Telegraph of the 29th ult., says that the Printing Press on which Morgan's Exposure of Masonry was printed, was destroyed at the fire in that village, with the exception of the bed of the press, which bed was of stone. The press was moved from Batavia to Le Roy soon after the publication of the book, and in 1831 was removed to Attica, and was used in printing the Attica Republican, the first paper in that village.

The Northampton Courier mentions the death of Mrs. Phebe Clapp, of Easthampton, aged 97. She was married 82 years ago, and was the mother of 15 children, 13 of whom became heads of families. One daughter at the age of 79, followed her to the grave. She had about 70 grand-children, and about the same number of great-grand children.

The Portland Argus says that in the action, Webster vs. Abbot, before their Supreme Judicial Court last week, a question was started whether marriage contracts entered into on Sunday were valid. The Judge and counsel, however, all agreed that they would be valid as coming under the head of "works of necessity or charity!"

As an evidence that an advanced state of science, and the improvement in the condition of the various classes of society, tend to prolong life, the following statement is made. It has been found that the average length of life of persons borne in Geneva was, in the 16th century, less than 9 years, in the 17th the average arose to 13; in 1760 it had increased to 27; in 1800 it was 21; in 1813, 40; in 1832, 45.

Hon. Tristram Burgess is publishing letters in the Prov. Jour. on the boundary of R. I., in which he admits that six towns—Cumberland, Barrington, Warren, Bristol, Tiverton, and Little Compton—should be transferred back from Rhode Island to Massachusetts. As if "little Rhodey" was not small enough already!

The Nantucket Inquirer draws a discouraging picture of the prospects of the whaling business in that place. Since 1843, the whaling fleet has been diminished fifteen sail by shipwreck, sales, &c. The voyages are said to be one third longer than they were twenty years ago, and the number of arrivals and departures are constantly growing less and less.

M. D. Tiszkiewies, the richest man in Russian lithuania, died a short time since. The St. Petersburgh papers inform us, that he has left to his three sons 2,060 villages, containing more than 60,000 serfs; and in ready money, 10,000,000 of crowns. It was this gentleman who was said to have refused the hand of his daughter to Duke Alexander of Wirtemburg, who afterwards married the Princess Maria d'Orleans.

John Quincy Adams is said to be 80 years old—Henry Clay 70—Webster, Cass, Van Buren, and Johnson, 65—Gen. Scott nearly the same—Gen. Taylor 60—John Tyler 57—Dallas 55, and Polk 54. Buchanan is an old Bachelor, whose age cannot of course be told.

The West Jersey Telegraph says that Mr. Joseph L. Harris, of Greenwich, raised a calf, this fall, that will favorably compete with some of the large growth of Monmouth county. At 4 months old it weighed 400 lbs., being 100 lbs. per month, or about 3 1-2 lbs. per day.

The intrinsic value of the shipping (not including steamships, steamboats nor schooners) belonging to the United States, is put down at 120,000,000 dollars, as a moderate estimate. The number of persons immediately interested is said to be, at a fair calculation, 1,175,000.

We learn from the Albany Argus, that the Directors of the Bank of Auburn present as a New Year's gift to the stockholders of that institution an extra dividend of $100,000, or 50 per cent. on the capital stock of the Bank.

Rev. Mr. Kimbro, of the Baptist Church, reports that he has raised, during the past year, from that denomination of Christians in Tennessee, the sum of $50,000 to endow Union University.

Two youngsters, of fifteen, belonging to Covington, Kentucky, went out to fight a duel, the other day, but were taken back to their parents, who, no doubt, satisfied the honor of the young belligerents.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT
NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to
George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 32. NEW-YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JANUARY 27, 1848. WHOLE NO. 188.

The Sabbath Recorder.

IMMUNITIES OF CONSCIENCE

IN REFERENCE TO THE DUTY OF

OBEDIENCE TO THE CIVIL MAGISTRATE.

Religious Rights and the Immunities of Conscience have attracted much attention within a few years past, in both hemispheres, and have brought out some of the most powerful pens of Europe, as well as of our own country, in their defense against the encroachments of the Legislative and Executive Powers; among whom we are happy to find the honored Head of Brown University, (Providence, R. I.,) the profound Dr. Wayland, a man distinguished throughout the land as one of the most correct thinkers and authoritative writers on Moral Philosophy and Political Economy, and one who deservedly exercises a very extensive and beneficial influence among the wise and good of the nation.

When a man like Wayland speaks, he commands the most attentive hearing. In this instance, he has grappled with a most delicate, as well as all-important subject, but he has grappled it with the fearlessness and the confidence of a master-spirit, and has, by his cogent reasoning and irresistible deductions, settled, most conclusively, the principle, that no government, especially a republic—a government of restricted and delegated powers—has any right whatever to exercise any authority over the relations which subsist betwixt man and his Maker; that the law of conscience, implanted in the soul of man by the Creator, to whom alone he is amenable, is above all civil legislation—all civil judicature.

The subject referred to, as discussed by President Wayland, in three sermons, is based on the passage of Scripture, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cesar's, and unto God the things that are God's;" from which we extract the following pertinent remarks.

W. M. F.

"This sentence was spoken by our Lord, in reply to a question of casuistry presented for his decision by the Pharisees and Herodians of Jerusalem. It teaches us, that a disciple of Christ is under a moral obligation to obey the civil authority, but that there are limitations within which that obligation is restricted. I propose to ascertain the meaning of the passage, and then to derive from it such instruction as may be appropriate to the condition of a Christian citizen at the present day.

At the time when the conversation was held, of which the text forms a part, Judea was a Roman province. Its king was an Idumean, who held his authority under the Emperor Tiberius. Every important city through the Holy Land was garrisoned by Roman soldiery. The common currency of the nation was Roman coin. The law which transcended every other law, and to which every citizen had a right to appeal, was Roman law. The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, was worshiped only by sufferance. Everything bore testimony to the fact, that the independence of the kingdom of David had passed away, and that Judea lay prostrate at the feet of the mistress of the world.

It was under these circumstances that the Pharisees and Herodians, waiving for the present their differences of opinion, agreed upon a question to be submitted to our Lord, for the sake of entangling him in his talk. They were unable to conceive how he could possibly answer it, without embroiling himself either with the people or the government. 'Master,' said they, 'we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man, for thou regardest not the person of men. Tell us, therefore, what thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cesar, or not?'

The question thus artfully proposed was intended, I presume, to suggest some such considerations as the following: This land was given to Abraham and to us his posterity for an everlasting possession. The family of David was selected by the Most High to be our hereditary rulers. We are the worshipers of the true God, while all other nations are senseless idolaters. The payment of tribute is an acknowledgment of submission to an authority which we believe to be usurped. By doing it we profess to receive as magistrate, and reverence as sovereign, a man who has never been appointed by God to govern us; nay, more, we acknowledge the right of unclean idolaters to bear rule over the chosen worshipers of Jehovah. Coming to Jesus,—as a teacher sent from God, a personage incapable of being swayed by the fear of man, who in a matter of right would look unawed upon the whole power of the Roman empire,—they ask him what, under these circumstances, they shall do. Can persons of as tender consciences as we, say they, pay this tribute without sin? or, must we refuse, and bring upon ourselves all the consequences of resistance to the civil authority?

This was not the first, nor has it been the last time in which the rights of conscience have been pleaded as an excuse for deliberate wickedness. All this our Lord knew perfectly well. The question, however, in itself was one of grave importance. Our Lord proceeded to answer it just as though the motive which prompted it had been ever so innocent. He, in very few words, announces the rule by which his disciples in all ages should be directed in their relations to the civil government. Let us proceed to examine this rule.

Show me a penny, said he. Whose image and superscription hath it? That is, whom doth this piece of money testify to be the actual sovereign of this country. They say unto him, Cesar's. They thus acknowledge that their actual sovereign is Cesar. Render, therefore, said he, unto Cesar the things that are Cesar's; and, unto God, the things that are God's. Cesar, you perceive, is here put for the chief magistrate of the nation, the organ of civil government, the agent of civil society. The precept of our Lord then is, render to the civil government whatever is due to the civil government, and, to God, whatever is due to God. And you will observe that, in this connection, the precept to render unto God the things that are God's, is not absolute, but relative. It is not the simple command to worship, revere, and love our Father who is in heaven. It has special reference to the case in which there may seem to arise a collision between these two duties. Whenever such a case occurs, we, as beings responsible for all our acts to God, are bound deliberately to consider it. We are to determine precisely what belongs to the civil government, and then, as citizens and as Christians, we are under moral obligation to render it. But, then, in this, as in every other case, we are bound to consider also what belongs unto God. Nothing must either tempt or affright us from obedience to him. His claim over us transcends that of the civil magistrate. We ought to obey God, rather than man. And we may be confident, that, in obeying him, we shall never violate any duty which we owe to the magistracy, for if the magistracy commands us to disobey God, it has transcended its proper powers, its commands are of no authority, and a Christian may not obey them.

There can be no doubt, however, that our Lord intended to direct them to pay the tribute money. He knew that they would be called upon for it, and he offers no reason why they should not pay it. But he goes farther. Show me, said he, the tribute money. Whose image and superscription hath it? They say unto him, Cesar's. Holding it up before them, or pointing to it, as I presume he did, he replies, render unto Cesar Cesar's things. That is to say, this tribute money, on which his image is engraved and his name is written, belongs to Cesar, and to him let it be paid. Now, this decision, if I mistake not, throws some light upon another question which in this connection is very likely to be raised. It teaches us that Christianity has nothing to do with the forms of human government. The people were at this time living under an absolute monarchy. The reigning sovereign was a tyrant of atrocious wickedness. And yet our Lord directs that the government be respected and the tribute paid. He neither inquires into the title of Tiberius to the throne of the empire, nor the right of the empire to rule over Judea. He simply asks whose is this image and superscription, that is, what is the government actually established; and he commands them to render to that government its due. I do not say that Christianity forbids us to entertain preferences in regard to the forms of government. I do not say that Christianity does not create a tendency to free institutions. I firmly believe that it does. Teaching universal equality of right, it could not do otherwise. All the true freedom on earth springs essentially from the Gospel. It is intended, however, to improve the condition of civil society, not by revolution and bloodshed, but by instilling into our bosoms a spirit of piety towards God, and of justice and mercy towards men. While Christianity is doing this, it is rendering good government necessary, and bad government impracticable. In the mean time it treats every existing government in obedience to the precept given in the text. The civil authority is established. The image is stamped and the superscription is engraved. The evidence of the actual existence of this authority is in the hands of every man. Its precept then is, render to society, as represented by the magistracy of its choice, whatever society can rightfully claim. Such I understand to be the teaching of Jesus Christ.

This is however only a part of our Saviour's precept. The remainder is at least equally important. 'Render unto God the things that are God's.' That is, Cesar may claim things which belong to God, and these must never be rendered to Cesar. While the Lord expressly teaches the duty of obedience to the civil magistrate, he forewarns his disciples that cases may arise in which such obedience would be treason against God. 'Thus,' saith he, 'they will deliver you up to the councils, and will scourge you in the synagogues, and you shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the gentiles. What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in the light, and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house-tops. And fear not them that kill the body but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him that is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.' And the manner in which the apostles understood this commandment of our Lord, we may learn very clearly from their conduct immediately after his resurrection. When Peter and John were forbidden by the Sanhedrim to speak at all or to teach in the name of Jesus, they answered, 'Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye, for we cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard.' And when they were discharged from arrest, the burden of their prayer was: 'And, now, Lord behold their threatenings, and grant unto thy servants that with all boldness they may speak thy word.' A few days afterwards they were again arrested, and the High Priest asked them saying, 'Did we not strictly command you, that ye should not teach in this name, and behold ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood upon us.' To this accusation, the noble reply of the apostle was merely this, 'We ought to obey God rather than men;' and he forthwith began to preach to the High Priest himself the same gospel which he had been forbidden to preach among the people.

Here, then, the disciple of Christ seems to be furnished with two apparently opposite rules of conduct. By the first he is commanded to obey the civil magistrate, without asking many of the questions which men are commonly disposed to ask on this subject. By the second, he is commanded to pay no respect to the civil magistrate whatever; but to act just as he would if such a magistracy did not exist. How then are we to harmonize these two apparently conflicting precepts? When are we to obey, and when are we to disobey?

This seeming contradiction can only be explained by supposing that the authority of society and of government, which is its agent, is a limited authority. This is intimated in the words of the text, render unto Cesar the things which are Cesar's; that is, there are certain things which are not Cesar's, and to which he can claim no right. The authority of the magistracy is conferred for definite and specified objects, and it must accomplish these objects by innocent means. So long as it confines itself to its appropriate objects, and seeks to accomplish them by innocent means, Jesus Christ commands us to yield to it implicit obedience. When, on the other hand, it undertakes to accomplish objects for which no authority has been conferred upon it, or attempts to accomplish them by means which Christ has forbidden, the gospel imposes upon us no obligation to obey it, nay, it may command us to disobey it.

This distinction renders it necessary for us to inquire what are the legitimate objects for the accomplishment of which civil government is established. To this question let us briefly direct our attention.

The great object for which civil government is established among men, I suppose to be, to protect every man in the enjoyment of those rights which have been conferred upon him by his Creator.

Every man is conscious that he is an independent moral agent, responsible to God for the use of the powers with which he is endowed, and at liberty, so far as man is concerned, to use them as he will, provided he do not interfere with the correspondent rights of his neighbor. The muscles, the sinews, the senses, the whole body of a man, are his own; and, provided he use them without injury to another, he may use them as he will. He has a perfect right to the natural results arising from the labor of his body, in what manner soever that labor may have been employed. His mind is his own. He may acquire with it such knowledge as he chooses, and, under the limitation above suggested, may disseminate that knowledge as he pleases among his fellow-men. He has a right to obey with perfect freedom the dictates of his conscience, that is, to worship God in such manner as he pleases, or not to worship him at all. The worshiping or the not worshiping cannot come under the cognizance of the civil magistrate, so long as the man refrains from infringement upon the rights of his neighbor.

But, it is found, that men are not naturally disposed to obey these obvious dictates of justice. Every man is more or less disposed to appropriate to himself the property or labor of another, to restrict him in the use of his mind, or to control the exercise of his conscience. As the indulgence of these dispositions would lead to universal war, society is ordained by God to prevent it. Its object is to oblige every man to use the means of happiness which God has conferred upon him, in such a manner that he shall not interfere with any of the correspondent means of happiness which God has conferred upon his neighbor. Though every man might be willing to encroach upon the rights of his brother, no man is willing himself to suffer encroachment, nor is he willing to tolerate encroachment in another. Hence, men instinctively unite in societies for the purpose of mutual restraint. They naturally place themselves under the protection of society, that thus the rights of the individual may be guaranteed to him by the combined power of the whole. Every man turns to society as the umpire whenever he believes that his rights have been invaded by his neighbor. Society, on the other hand, assumes the office, pronounces the award, and pledges its whole power to carry it into execution.

It is for the accomplishment of these purposes that the various forms of the civil magistracy are ordained. The Legislature enacts the laws; that is, it declares what are the rights of the individual, and what shall be the penalty if they be violated. The Judiciary ascertains whether or not a law has been violated, and pronounces the sentence which the law has affixed to the transgression. The Executive carries into effect the decision of the Judiciary. Here the great function of civil society ends. This is, I think, the view of the subject entertained by the authors of the Declaration of Independence. 'We hold these truths to be self-evident: that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men.' Such then is the paramount object for which the magistracy is appointed of God.

* * * * *

But we may carry this principle a single step farther. I have shown that it is the duty of the society to protect the individual against injury from another member of the same society. But suppose that he is exposed to injury from a member of another society, is he not entitled to the same protection? It seems to me that he is; and that the society to which he belongs is bound to protect him, whether he be assailed by one or by many. It is the duty of the society to which he belongs to restrain him from inflicting injury upon all other men, and to prevent all other men from inflicting injury upon him. Here, however, it is to be remarked, that the use of force can only be justified when employed for the prevention of injury, when directed towards the injurious person alone, and when employed to no greater extent than the accomplishment of the purpose renders necessary.

But besides this, the great object for which civil government is established, there are various other objects which, for the sake of convenience, are, by common consent, committed to its care. Thus, for instance, it is found that common education can be much more successfully conducted by public than by private effort. The care of highways, of harbors, and many of the most important aids to civilization, are most properly left to the same agency. Every man receives the benefit of such arrangements, and hence every man may properly be obliged to bear his portion of the burden.

The cost of conducting all these departments of government must be defrayed by taxes, or some other form of imposition. Our share of this cost belongs properly to Cesar, and a Christian is bound, by the principles not only of common honesty, but also of his religion, to render it even to the uttermost farthing. The blessings of a good government are absolutely incalculable. Shall any man ask to be a partaker in these blessings, and be unwilling to pay his portion of that expense, by which they are procured? Can that man be honest, who would send his children to a public school, and refuse to pay his proportion of the tax for the support of education? Can he be a disciple of Christ who shrinks from bearing his part of the cost of repairing a road which he uses in common with his neighbors, or of lighting a public lamp, of which he enjoys with them an equal and common benefit?

The apostolic precept on this subject is clear and explicit. 'For this cause,' (that is, for consciences' sake,) 'pay ye tribute also, for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing. Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honor to whom honor.' * * * * *

I have thus endeavored to show what are the legitimate objects of civil government, and what are the duties which the ordaining of this government imposes upon a disciple of Christ. It is proper, however, that I remark, before closing this part of the subject, that a government, in carrying forward these objects, is ever amenable like an individual to the law of right. The goodness of the end will never justify wickedness in the means. Societies as much as individuals are bound to yield obedience to the commands of God. It is only when the objects of a government are right, and the means by which they are accomplished are innocent, that it can demand, on the principles of the gospel, the aid, and coöperation of the disciple of Christ. Acting in obedience to these principles the magistracy may claim the obedience of the Christian citizen, not from fear, but for conscience's sake, and from the love which he bears to the Saviour, who loved him and gave himself for him. * * * * *

So much as this then the gospel commands, in respect to our obedience to civil government. Beyond this I know not that it utters any command whatever. The acts, therefore, the laws, the requirements of civil society, like the acts, the laws, the requirements of the church, or of any other society, are amenable to the tribunal of reason and conscience and the Word of God. The Christian is at liberty to inquire whether any act of the government transgresses the limit within which its action is, by reason and revelation, restricted; and yet more to determine concerning every one of its actions whether it be right or wrong. At liberty, did I say? He is more than at liberty, he is obliged thus to inquire and to determine. He is a party to every act of the society of which he is a member. He is an intelligent moral agent, responsible to God for his actions, whether they be personal or associated, and therefore he must think about civil government and act about it, according to the light which God has given him, all things else to the contrary notwithstanding.

I therefore, as a Christian citizen, look upon the civil government and the civil magistracy with as unblenching an eye as I look upon any thing else. In simplicity and godly sincerity, not in the spirit of strife or partisanship, I may pronounce my opinion upon its enactments and measures, just as I would express my opinions in any other case. I see in Presidents, Cabinets, Senators, Representatives, and all the array of the civil magistracy, nothing but men, fallible men, of like passions with myself. Every page of the history of the past has shown that men placed in such situations have been exceedingly prone to err and to do wickedly. I cannot, therefore, worship men in power. In so far as they are virtuous men I love them. In so far as they are able men I respect them. In so far as, with an honest and true heart, they labor to discharge the solemn duties to which they have been appointed, I honor and I venerate them. I will pay all due deference to the offices which they hold, and will bow with seemly respect to the men who hold them. These men are to me the representatives on earth of eternal justice and unsullied truth; and may my arm fall palsied from my shoulder-blade when I refuse to raise it in token of respect to him who is called of God to minister under so solemn a responsibility.

But all this veneration is due, not to the man, but to the magistrate, and it is due to him therefore, only so long as he confines himself to the duties of his office, and discharges them with pure and patriotic intentions. I have a right to inquire whether his actions in his office conform to the principles of justice. He must claim for himself no immunity from scrutiny on account of the dignity of his station. If he use the power committed to him for any other purpose than that for which it was committed; if he prostitute his official influence to pander to the wishes of a political party; if he sacrifice the gravest interests of his country for the sake of securing to himself the emoluments of office; if he trample the national honor in the dust in order to minister to the grasping selfishness of a contemptible clique,—that moment every vestige of his sacredness, is gone forever. He stands before me like Samson from the lap of Delilah. Shake himself as he may, it matters not to me, his strength is departed from him. But is this all? No, nor half; not only is his official sacredness departed, he has become to me the most odious of despicable men. He has sacrificed his country to his lusts. He has bartered away the well-being of millions for food to nourish his vices. Whether in office or out of it, whether powerful or powerless, I can look upon him henceforth with no other feelings than those of pity and disgust.

But this may become a yet more practical matter. The magistrate may not only do wrong himself, but he may command me to do wrong. How shall I regard this command? I will regard it as I do any other command to do wrong, I will not obey it. I will look the magistracy calmly and respectfully in the face, and declare to it that in this matter I owe it no allegiance. I will have nothing to do with its wrong-doing. I will separate myself as far as possible from the act and its consequences, whether they be prosperous or adverse. It is wickedness; it has the curse of God inwrought into it, and I will have nothing to do with it. From the beginning to the end I will eschew it and the rewards that it offers. The magistracy may punish me; I cannot help that. I will not resist, but I will not do wrong, nor will I be a party to wrong, let the magistracy or aught else command me.

In saying this I hope that I arrogate to myself nothing in the least peculiar. I am only in the plainest and simplest manner stating the rights and obligations of an intelligent moral being, accountable to God for his actions, and bound to reverence his Creator above all else in the universe. Created under such a responsibility, can I transfer the allegiance which I owe to God, to legislative assemblies, to political caucuses, to mass meetings, to packed or unpacked conventions representing or pretending to represent the assumed omnipotence of public opinion. My whole moral nature with loathing forbids it. I could not do it without feeling that I had become a despicable slave. I could not do it without knowing that I had exchanged the glorious and incorruptible God for an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds and four-footed beasts, and creeping things, and worshiped the creature more than the Creator who is blessed forever. My fellow-citizens must not ask this of me; I will surrender for my country, my possessions, my labor, my life, but I will not sacrifice my integrity; and that is unworthy of being the country of a good man which shall ask it. * * * * *

I have said that the great end for which civil society is established, and the magistracy appointed is, to secure to man the enjoyment of those rights with which he was endowed by his Creator. If society or the magistracy interfere with those rights, it is tyranny. If its acts transcend the limits of the authority committed to it, it is guilty of usurpation. In neither of these cases does the Gospel of Jesus Christ command us to render to it obedience.

The civil magistrate has frequently persecuted men even unto death for believing the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Here he not only does not secure the enjoyment of an inalienable right, he goes farther and actually prohibits it. He demands of the conscience that it bow down to him rather than to its Maker. I need not repeat here the precepts of Christ which I have already quoted in reference to this subject. You all know that we are commanded under such circumstances, on the peril of our souls, to pay no respect to the precepts of the magistracy. Fear not, saith our Lord, those that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him that is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. Here then is a plain case, in which the magistrate, by inhibiting instead of securing the rights conferred on man by his Creator, has forfeited his claim to obedience; I do not say to all obedience, but to obedience in just so far as his commands interfere with the rights of man or the commandments of God.

* * * * *

When men unite in the establishment of a government, they mutually promise, in all their relations with each other, to yield obedience to certain fundamental principles. The object of these principles is to define and limit the power of the magistracy, and to prescribe the manner in whice this power shall be exerted. The enunciation of these principles forms what is called a constitution. This being once established, it binds all and it protects all. It is a solemn and mutual contract between every individual on the one part, and the whole community on the other part. Upon the faithful fulfillment of this contract, depends the freedom of every individual and the security of his rights, whether civil or religious. We can neither assume powers not conferred upon us by this instrument nor refuse to carry its provisions into practice, either ourselves or by our agents, without a violation of our solemn obligations. It matters not how overpowering the majority by whom the outrage is committed, nor how small the minority whose rights are infringed, nor how elevated the position of the functionary by whom the act is performed; it is a crime of the deepest dye, and merits and should meet the sternest reprobation of every virtuous man. If, then, such be the responsibility assumed by every citizen of a free government, it surely becomes him to understand the provisions of that instrument by which this responsibility is created."

Golden Thoughts.—I never yet found pride in a noble nature, nor humility in an unworthy mind. Of all trees, I observe that God hath chosen the vine—a low plant that creeps upon the helpful wall: of all beasts, the soft and patient lamb: of all fowls, the mild and guileless dove. When God appeared to Moses, it was not in the lofty cedar, nor the spreading palm; but a bush, an humble, slender, abject bush. As if he would by these selections check the conceited arrogance of man. Nothing produceth love like humility; nothing hate, like pride.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, January 27, 1848.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

Although this subject occupies a large place in the present number of our paper, we do not think the circumstance requires any apology. Many persons, it is true, are accustomed to regard the times of persecution as past, and hence they see no particular necessity for insisting in these days upon liberty of conscience and the right of private judgment in matters of religion. But facts are constantly developing which show that there is now in man, even though nominally reformed and christianized, the same spirit which in times past led to the imprisonment and execution of those who dissented from the popular creed. Indeed, there is great reason to fear, that the possession of the same superiority in numbers and political influence, would transform the popular religious sects of this country into as great persecutors as they who hunted down the Anabaptists of England in the seventeenth century. One circumstance, fresh in the memory of our readers, will suffice to show that this fear is not groundless. We allude to the fining and imprisonment of the peaceable German Sabbath-keepers in Pennsylvania. Here was a religious society, noted for their general integrity and uprightness, who happened to differ from a majority of the people around them in relation to the day of the week which ought to be kept for the Sabbath. Availing themselves of this difference, a few restless spirits who held a personal grudge against them, took occasion to complain of their working on Sunday, and to insist on their being fined or imprisoned according to an old and well-nigh obsolete law. The result is well known. Several fines were imposed, and the society has been harrassed with a suit in court from that time to this. What a spectacle to be exhibited in a country which boasts of the political equality and religious freedom of all its citizens—a country in which liberty of conscience is guarantied, and the preference of one sect over another forbidden, by the National Constitution!

But the question is sometimes raised, whether such liberty of conscience as we require is not inconsistent with any care of religion on the part of the magistracy. We think not. It is the duty of the magistracy to protect the citizen in the exercise of his religious opinions, so far as their exercise is not inconsistent with the rights of others, and no farther. In regard to this matter of the Sabbath, all we ask is to be set free from the necessity of violating our consciences by the discharge of duties on that day which are inconsistent with keeping it holy. In regard to the Sunday, all we ask is to be left free to engage in our ordinary labors on that day. This is what we claim as our right, and what we cheerfully award to others. For the magistracy to refuse this to us, or grant more to others, is to transcend its powers, and so endanger the interests of religion.

Many are the evil consequences which have resulted from an undue exercise of authority, on the part of Christian magistrates, over the consciences of men. It has led to the persecution and death of thousands of the best men who have ever blessed the earth. It has encouraged infidels and pagans to pursue and destroy those who have attempted to preach to them the Gospel of peace and good-will. It has multiplied divisions in the world, and diminished the chances of a future union. It has placed obstacles in the way of doing right, whereby vast numbers have been kept from it, to the wreck of faith and a good conscience, and to the loss of their souls. Its influences are all bad, and could they be fully traced out would justly alarm those who have given it countenance.

YUCATANESE ROMISH PRIESTS.

John L. Stevens, Esq., in his "Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas, and Yucatan," gives some rather curious accounts of his interviews with the priests or padres of those countries. He had often heard it remarked, that two padres could not meet without playing cards. Whether this be true or not, he saw very satisfactory evidence of their fondness for that game, as is shown by the following incidents. Mr. Stevens was at the village of Palenque, in Yucatan, in the neighborhood of which he was examining the remains of an ancient city, when the place was visited by three distinguished padres of other and somewhat distant places. The "cura" of Palenque was absent when they arrived. What followed his return is thus described :—

"The reception given him showed the good feeling existing among the padres; and, after some general conversation, the chocolate cups were removed, and one of the padres went to his chest, whence he produced a pack of cards, which he placed upon the table. He said that he always carried them with him, and it was very pleasant to travel with companions, as, wherever they stopped, they could have a game at night. The cards had evidently done much service, and there was something orderly and systematic in the preliminary arrangements, that showed the effect of regular habits and a well-trained household. An old Indian servant laid on the table a handful of grains of corn, and a new bundle of paper cigars. The grains of corn were valued at a medio. I declined joining in the game, whereupon one of the reverend fathers kept aloof to entertain me, and the other three sat down to Monte, still taking part in the conversation. Very soon they became abstracted, and I left them playing as earnestly as if the souls of unconverted Indians were at stake."

Mr. Stevens then gives some account of what took place on the following day, which was Sunday. The three padres, dressed in their gowns and surplices, assisted in the ceremonies of the mass, and at twelve o'clock, pursuant to invitation, they all went to the house of Don Santiago to dine. The cura did not arrive in time, and was sent for :—

"As soon as he appeared, the other padres rallied him upon his forgetfulness, which they insisted was all feigned; they had won sixteen dollars of him the night before, and said that he was afraid to come. He answered in the same strain, that he was a ruined man. They offered him his revenge, and forthwith the table was brought out, cards and grains of corn were spread on it as before, and while the padre of Tumbala played the violin, the other three played Monte. Being Sunday, in some places this would be considered rather irregular; at least, to do so with open doors would be considered setting a bad example to children and servants; and, in fact, considering myself on a pretty sociable footing, I could not help telling them that in my country they would all be read out of church. The 'Congressman'—one of them had been an officer in the army, and was now a member of Congress—had met an Englishman in Mexico, who told him the same thing, and also the manner of observing Sunday in England, which they all thought must be very stupid."

WASHINGTON ON THE RIGHTS OF CONSCIENCE.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As every thing tending to illustrate or enforce the rights of conscience is of the deepest interest to Sabbath-keepers, who are, at present, suffering under unjust and invidious State Statutes, in this land of vaunted freedom, I send, for publication in the Recorder, the correspondence between the Quakers and President Washington, on his accession to the Chief Magistracy of our Union, 1789; which was republished in the North American and United States Gazette, on Monday, January 3d, and which, the editors say, they "take from the original published copy, printed by David Humphreys, Front-st., near the draw-bridge, Philadelphia."

The reply of "the father of his country," breathes the same catholic sentiments he avowed to the Baptist Church in Virginia, already spread before your readers, and is a severe rebuke to the contracted littleness and sectarian intolerance of the degenerate patriots of the present day. It cannot fail to exercise a wholesome influence on the populace, for, degenerated as we confessedly have since the days of the Revolution, they have not lost all respect for the opinions of that great and good man; than whom there was none purer or more worthy of being cherished and imitated—none more capable of being the exponent of our rights and immunites. W. M. F.

January 7th, 1848.

Address of the Friends of 1789 to President Washington.

To the President of the United States. The Address of the Religious Society called Quakers, from their Yearly Meeting for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and the western parts of Virginia and Maryland :—

Being met in this our Annual Assembly for the well-ordering the affairs of our Religious Society, and the promotion of universal righteousness, our minds have been drawn to consider that the Almighty, who ruleth in Heaven and in the kingdoms of men, having permitted a great revolution to take place in the government of this country, we are fervently concerned that the rulers of the people may be favored with the counsel of God, the only sure means of enabling them to fulfill the important trust committed to their charge, and in an especial manner that Divine wisdom and grace vouchsafed from above, may qualify thee to fill up the duties of the exalted station to which thou art appointed.

We are sensible thou hast obtained great place in the esteem and affections of people of all denominations, over whom thou presideth; and many eminent talents being committed to thy trust, we much desire they may be fully devoted to the Lord's honor and service, that thus thou mayest be an happy instrument in his hand, for the suppression of vice, infidelity, and irreligion, and every species of oppression on the persons and consciences of men, so that righteousness and peace, which truly exalt a nation, may prevail throughout the land, as the only solid foundation that can be laid for the prosperity and happiness of this or any conntry.

The free toleration which the citizens of these States enjoy in the public worship of the Almighty, agreeable to the dictates of their consciences, we esteem among the choicest of blessings; and as we desire to be filled with fervent charity for those who differ from us in faith and practice, believing that the general assembly of Saints is composed of the sincere and upright hearted of all nations, kingdoms, and people; so we trust we may justly claim it from others, —and in a full persuasion that the Divine principle we profess, leads into harmony and concord, we can take no part in carrying on war on any occasion, or under any power, but are bound in conscience to lead quiet and peaceable lives in godliness and honesty amongst men, contributing freely our proportion to the indigencies of the poor, and to the necessary support of civil government, acknowledging those "who rule well to be worthy of double honor," and if any professing with us are, or have been, of a contrary disposition and conduct, we own them not therein, having never been chargeable, from our first establishment as a Religious Society, with fomenting or countenancing tumults or conspiracies or disrespect to those who are placed in authority over us.

We wish not improperly to intrude on thy time or patience, nor is it our practice to offer adulation to any; but as we are a people whose principles and conduct have been misrepresented and traduced, we take the liberty to assure thee, that we feel our hearts affectionately drawn towards thee, and those in authority over us, with prayers that thy Presidency may, under the blessing of Heaven, be happy to thyself and to the people; that through the increase of morality and true religion, Divine Providence may condescend to look down upon our land, with a propitious eye, and bless the inhabitants with a continuance of peace, the dew of Heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and enable us gratefully to acknowledge his manifold mercies. And it is our earnest concern, that he may be pleased to grant thee every necessary qualification to fill thy weighty and important station to his glory; and that finally, when all terrestrial honors shall fail and pass away, thou and thy respectable consort may be found worthy to receive a crown of unfading righteousness in the mansions of peace and joy forever.

Signed in and on behalf of our said meeting, held in Philadelphia, by adjournment, from the 28th of the 9th mo. to the 3d day of the 10th mo. inclusive, 1789. NICHOLAS WALN,
Clerk of the meeting this year.

President Washington's Reply.

The Answer of the President of the United States to the Address of the Religious Society called Quakers, from their Yearly Meeting for Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and the western part of Maryland and Virginia :—

GENTLEMEN—I receive with pleasure your affectionate address, and thank you for the friendly sentiments and good wishes which you express for the success of my administration, and for my personal happiness.

We have reason to rejoice in the prospect that the present national government, which, by the favor of Divine Providence, was formed by the common counsels, and peaceably established with the common consent of the people, will prove a blessing to every denomination of them;—to render it such, my best endeavors shall not be wanting.

Government being among other purposes instituted to protect the persons and consciences of men from oppression,—it certainly is the duty of rulers, not only to abstain from it themselves, but according to their stations to prevent it in others.

The liberty enjoyed by the people of these States, of worshiping Almighty God agreeable to their consciences, is not only among the choicest of their BLESSINGS, but also of their RIGHTS. While men perform their social duties faithfully, they do all that Society or the State can with propriety demand or expect, and remain responsible only to their Maker for the religion or mode of faith which they may prefer or profess.

Your principles and conduct are well known to me; and it is doing the people called Quakers no more than justice to say, that, (except their declining to share with others the burthen of the common defense,) there is no denomination among us who are more exemplary and useful citizens.

I assure you very explicitly, that in my opinion the conscientious scruples of all men should be treated with great delicacy and tenderness; and it is my wish and desire, that the laws may always be as extensively accommodated to them, as a due regard to the protection and essential interests of the nation may justify and permit.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

LEGAL PROTECTION OF SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

We are indebted to Eld. Eli S. Bailey for a copy of the following Act for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists, passed by the last Legislature of the State of New York. We agree with him, that although better than nothing, it still does not cover the whole ground :—

CHAP. 349.

AN ACT in relation to proceedings against persons observing as the Sabbath the day commonly called Saturday.

Passed November 10, 1847.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows :

Section 1. No person whose religious faith and practice is to keep the seventh day of the week, commonly called Saturday, as a day set apart by divine command as the Sabbath of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God, shall be subject to perform military duty or jury duty in a justice's court, on such day, except that such persons shall be subject to perform military duty on such day in case of invasion, insurrection, or in time of war.

§ 2. Any person who shall knowingly and maliciously cause or procure any process isssued from a justice's court, in a civil suit, to be served on said day upon any such person, or who shall serve any such process which shall be made returnable on said day, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, or both.

§ 3. Any person who shall in like manner procure any such suit, pending in such court, against any person of such religious faith and practice, to be adjourned, to be tried on said day, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and subject to like punishment.

§ 4. The act entitled, "An act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists," passed May 7, 1839, is hereby repealed.

PHENIX, R. I., Jan. 20, 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

DEAR BROTHER,—My heart was cheered last evening, on reading in the Recorder the account of revivals of religion in different parts of our beloved country. I could but hope, that the time was near when we might witness a general revival of God's work in all our churches throughout the length and breadth of the land. You know we have had a great and long day of adversity. I am happy to inform you that there is a precious revival in this village, and very flattering prospects of a general outpouring of the Holy Spirit in this region of country. It is about two weeks since I commenced labor in this village. The members of Baptist churches have gradually come up to the work; many who had backslidden have taken the alarm; and this is followed with an awakening among the unconverted, who are coming forward every evening to the altar for prayer. Some have already expressed a hope in Christ. Surely the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Yours in Christ.

JOHN GREENE.

PREJUDICE AGAINST COLOR NOT INVINCIBLE.—The printers of Rochester had a grand celebration on the 17th of January, in honor of the birthday of Franklin. Among the persons who sat down with the gentlemen of the quill, was Frederick Douglass, once a slave, but now a freeman and an editor. A toast was given to him by one of his white brethren, that "we recognize in the genius and cultivation of this orator and philanthropist good augury of the elevation of his race." Mr. Douglass made a very happy response, and gave the following sentiment: "Gentlemen of the Rochester Press—Promoters of knowledge, lovers of liberty, foes of ignorance, despirers of prejudice, may you continue to give to the world noble examples by a free and intelligent union of black with white." Another colored man, the publisher of the North Star, was also present and offered a toast. Such a reception of colored men by the editors and printers of Rochester speaks well for their intelligence and liberality, and indicates that the common prejudice against color is not altogether invincible.

APPEAL FROM THE AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.—The Secretaries of the American Tract Society have published an appeal, dated Jan. 1, 1848, setting forth their claims and wants. It seems that they now employ more than 200 colporteurs, including those speaking the German, French, Danish, Spanish, and Welsh languages. They also employ 170 persons in the bindery and printing office, who, with the facilities of steam presses and machinery, produce not far from three thousand books daily, besides other publications. Books and tracts to the value of $136,000 have been issued in eight months of the past year, and the tendency is to increase. But the Treasury of the Society is empty and embarrassed, and operations must be curtailed unless there is immediate relief. It is estimated that in order to pay the notes due for printing paper, and keep the wheels of the Society in motion, not less than $57,000 must be received in donations, in addition to the ordinary receipts from sales, previous to April 1, 1848, being within three months.

JEWISH DISABILITIES IN ENGLAND.—A motion was passed in the British Parliament, on the 17th of December last, for a committee on Jewish Disabilities. The resolution agreed to set forth, "that it is expedient to remove all civil disabilities at present existing, affecting her Majesty's subjects of the Jewish religion, with the like exceptions as are provided with reference to her Majesty's subjects professing the Roman Catholic religion." Thus the Catholics and the Jews are to be placed on the same footing. Lord John Russell, Lord Morpeth, and Sir G. Grey, were ordered to bring in a bill in accordance with the vote of the House, which, it is believed, will be promptly passed.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—We have received a Catalogue of the Union Theological Seminary, in the City of New York, for 1848. The present number of students is 103, of whom 30 are in the Senior Class, 37 in the Middle, and 36 in the Junior. There are also three resident licentiates. A list is given of the Alumni during the ten years since the Institution was established. They number 211. This Seminary is open for the admission of students from every denomination of Christians. Persons applying for admission must produce a certificate of good standing in some evangelical church; and must either present testimonials of having had a regular college education, or submit to an examination by the Faculty on the branches usually taught in such a course.

MADISON UNIVERSITY.—A Catalogue of the Officers and Students of Madison University, for 1847–8, has been sent us, from which we learn that there are 41 students in the Theological Department, 140 in the Collegiate Department, and 35 in the Grammar School, making a total of 216. The course of studies in the Collegiate Department differs in no essential particular from that of colleges generally. An acquaintance with the Hebrew language is requisite for admission into the Theological Department. Candidates for this department are required to furnish letters from their respective churches, either licensing them to preach, or approving of their studying with a view to the ministry. They are also examined by the Faculty in relation to their Christian experience and call to the ministry.

VISIT OF DR. KING TO THE POPE.—Rev. Dr. King, the heroic missionary of the American Board in Greece, it is known, has for two years past been persecuted, in various ways, by the ecclesiastics of the Greek church, for publishing a little volume of extracts from their most venerated Fathers, against the worship of the Virgin Mary and images. At length, judging it expedient to leave the country for a time, he went over to Switzerland, and from thence to Rome, from whence he has recently written a letter to the American Board at Boston, of which the following is an extract :—

"I have just been presented to the much celebrated Pope Pius IX., who is a very dignified and interesting man; I neither kissed his toe nor his hand, nor did he kiss mine, but he bowed to me very politely, and I to him. Several who were presented at the same time with me, being Roman Catholics, knelt down very devoutly and kissed the cross on his foot. He has much benignito marked in his countenance, and I should judge from his appearance, that he had a good degree of decision and firmness. He was born the thirteenth of May, 1792, and is, of course, about two months older than myself. He is certainly a very remarkable man; but I think that we must wait a little longer, before giving a decided opinion with regard to his object in certain measures he is adopting."

THE CHOLERA.

Dr. Bloomfield, Lord Bishop of London, has addressed a Pastoral Letter to the clergy of his diocese, relative to the approach of the cholera, in which he says :—

"There is every reason to expect, as far as human judgment can look forward to coming events, that the cholera, that fearful and mysterious disease, which is again traversing the surface of the globe, will, before long, make its appearance on our shores. It is stated in the first report of the Sanitary Commission, just presented to Parliament, that, according to information received from the English Consuls abroad, this pestilence is steadily advancing upon precisely its former track of 1832."

According to the Bishop's letter, it appears that the English Health Commisioners are of opinion that the Asiatic Cholera is not contagious; that no one will be infected by the dead bodies of cholera patients; that want of cleanliness is the greatest predisposing cause; that habitual respiration of an impure atmosphere is a powerful predisponent; that where people live filtbily and irregularly, they run the greatest possible risk; and that in places where a great degree of cleanliness is maintained, poor and rich are exempt. Dr. Bloomfield therefore calls on the parochial clergy to visit the houses of the poor, and to urge the people to take every possible precaution. He says :—

"The extreme closeness and inconvenience of the miserable tenements or apartments occupied by the poorest classes, at rents, the excessive amount of which cripples their means of comfort and cleanliness, the inadequate supply of water, the want of all provision for ventilation, the absence of all conveniences for personal ablution and household washing—these, and the disgraceful state of the sewerage in the most crowded parts of the metropolis, are causes which engender or aggravate disease, and hurry great numbers of our fellow-creatures and neighbors to an untimely grave."

DRESS OF MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

Most of our readers probably know, that Rev. I. J. Roberts, the southern Baptist missionary stationed at Canton, China, has assumed the dress and adopted many of the customs of the Chinese, with a view to secure thereby more complete access to the people. In his journal, under date of May 12th, 1847, he gives the following account of a company of German missionaries who intend to follow his example :—

"Four German missionaries have just arrived in China, and are now at Hongkong, who intend to go into the country. One of them came to my house on the 6th instant, and introduced himself to me by the German name, Genhehr but since he arrived at Hongkong he has taken the Chinese name, IP; much better than the other one, too, for I am sure that a Chinaman nor an American either, would ever know how to pronounce his German name; and hence I shall call him IP, his Chinese name. He informed me that he wished to spend a few days among the people of this vicinity, making excursions into the country around, and that he wished to start out the next day. He has been at Hongkong about a month. I invited him to make my house his home, and join me in eating rice with chop-sticks—rather a requisite qualification for living or traveling among the people. He gladly accepted the invitation, and I went with him to procure a boat for the morrow. We got a suitable boat at one dollar per day to start the next morning among the villages in the country. On our return he proposed going through the process of becoming an initiated Chinaman; and yet he had very few of their characteristics—with a very fair complexion, blue eyes, light hair, foreign garb, German twang, and only one month's knowledge of their language. But he had already bought himself some China clothes and a tail, a most requisite appendage of Chinese costume. He sent for a barber, sat down and had his head shaved all over, except a small spot on the crown, to which, after being blacked, the tail was plaited. He took off his foreign garb, and put on his Chinese dress, and we took dinner together with chop-sticks. 'Thus ended the first lesson.'"

In his journal, a few days later, Mr. Roberts makes the following remarks, which are no doubt worthy of consideration, although many persons will differ from the conclusion to which he comes :—

"I feel persuaded that if foreign missionaries would condescend to wear the Chinese costume and tail; and perhaps suffer a robbing and beating now and then, they might publish the gospel extensively in the country! And are we any better than the apostles? They suffered many beatings, and went on preaching as if they had not been beaten at all! And as to wearing the Chinese costume and tail, that would soon become easy from habit. I speak from experience! The Emperor, though a foreigner, yields to this custom—shaves his head, and wears a tail; and doubtless the apostle Paul would do so if here, who 'became all things to all men, that by all means he might gain some.' I think it will be absolutely requisite to wear the Chinese costume and tail if a missionary would travel extensively among the people, and preach to them unmolested. The Catholic missionaries do so, and go where they please. And these German missionaries are arranging their matters to do so, and expect to be allowed to go where they please. Dr. Medhurst did so a year or so ago, and went far into the country. Mr. Milne did so, and came through the interior of the country from Ningpo to Canton—a journey of several hundred miles, which took him thirty-eight days to perform! And, indeed, the Chinese say, that teacher Ip might almost go where he pleases now, without detection, notwithstanding his un-Chinese appearance at first; how much more readily will he be able to do so when he shall have acquired the language, and become somewhat sunburnt. It strikes me rather forcibly, that it is through this means that we are now to find the whole country accessible to us."

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

In the SENATE, last week, several petitions were presented for the speedy termination of the war. Petitions were also presented for pensions to be granted to various individuals dependent upon persons who have been killed in the Mexican war—a kind of petition which will no doubt be plenty enough for years to come. The principal matter before the Senate was the Ten Regiment Bill, which was spoken to at length by several of the leading members. In the course of debate, Mr. Butler stated that the troops already in the field form the basis of an army of 30,000 regulars and 30,000 volunteers. Of these about 45,000 are available. The President has power to raise this force to the full complement of 60,000. The bill now before the Senate gives 10,000 regulars, and another bill has been reported authorizing 20,000 volunteers. Add to these the seamen and marines who are engaged in the service, and there may be an army of 100,000 men, and this great military force is placed at the power of the President for the purpose of invading the only Republic on this continent except our own.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, much time was spent in considering, in Committee of the Whole, the annual message of the President. While discussing this general topic, speeches were made upon slavery, the boundary of Texas, the causes of the war, &c. Mr. Tompkins offered a series of resolutions calling on the President to state the specific objects for which the war is to be prosecuted, and the means of accomplishing the same. Mr. Turner offered a joint resolution for the annexation of New Mexico and California. Both resolutions were laid over.

On Monday, Jan. 17, in the House, Mr. Giddings offered the following resolution, which was laid on the table by a vote of 98 to 88:—

Whereas, it is represented that on Friday last, three armed persons engaged in the internal slave trade, entered a dwelling in this city, and violently seized a colored man, employed as a waiter in the boarding-house of several members of this body, and in the presence of his wife, gagged him, placed him in irons, and with loaded pistols, forced him into one of the slave-prisons of this city, from which, it is reported, he has since been dispatched for the slave-market of New-Orleans:

And whereas said colored man had been employed in said boarding-house for several years, had become well and favorably known to members of this House, had married a wife in this city, and, under a contract to purchase his freedom for the sum of $300, had by great industry paid that sum within about $60:

And whereas outrages like the forgoing have been of common occurrence in this District, and are sanctioned by the laws of Congress, and are extremely painful to many of the members of this House, as well as in themselves inhuman, Therefore

Resolved, That a Select Committee of five members be appointed to inquire into and report upon the facts aforesaid; also, as to the propriety of repealing such acts of Congress as sustain or authorize the slave trade in this District.

Speaking of the transaction alluded to above, the editor of the New York Tribune, who was in Washington at the time, says:—

The outrage could not have been more abominable if the Slave Coast of Africa had been its theatre and the most atrocious savages its authors. The victim had made himself respected by all who knew him, by his quiet industry and diligence in his vocation. He had fairly bargained for his freedom, and had paid four-fifths of the stipulated purchase-money, as appears by receipts from his miscreant-owner on the books of his trustee; but his wife states that he had actually paid the whole price except $11, (having made payments when his trustee was away, and no credit could be recorded,) and had $6 of this little balance in his pocket when the pirates jumped upon, shackled and kidnapped him. Two weeks more, and he would have been out of the house of bondage; now he is torn from all he holds dear, and is on his way in chains to wear out the wretched remnant of his life in the cane-fields of Louisiana.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

The business before this body at present is principally of a local character. There are some items, however, in which all will feel an interest. The Assembly has had under consideration a bill to regulate the sale of Patent Medicines. Before it passed to the third reading, an amendment was made that regular physicians should write prescriptions in full, and that the name of the medicines shall be stated. A resolution was offered in the Assembly, that the Judiciary Committee inquire into the expediency of declaring Magnetic Telegraph Companies common carriers, subject to the laws regulating common carriers, and of regulating their rates of toll.

In the Senate, the following bill to punish adultery was passed, with debate, on Monday, 27 voting for it, and 1 against it:—

§ 1. Every male person of full age, who shall commit adultery with a married woman of previous good character, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof in a Court of Record, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail, for a term not exceeding one year.

§ 2. No conviction shall be had under this act, unless the indictment be found within one year from the commission of the offense, nor unless there be evidence confirming the testimony of the adulteress.

The New York Tribune, speaking of the occupations of the legislators of New York, says:

"The present is the first House of Assembly which has been elected under the single District system; and one effect has been the return of an unusually small number of practicing lawyers. The House contains but one member of our craft, Mr. James Brooks, Editor of the New York Express. There are 50 farmers; 16 mechanics; 17 merchants; 2 sailors or navigators, one of them being a 'ferryman' and t'other a 'mariner;' 4 manufacturers; 20 lawyers, including the Speaker; 1 clerk, and 5 gentlemen; 1 lithographer; 1 engineer, and 1 hotel-keeper. They are described as active, business men, able and willing to transact to advantage the public affairs given them in charge. We understand that one or two Europeans by birth are in the House, and the rest are citizens by birth. Of the 2,600,000 inhabitants of this State, it has been estimated that full one-fifth were not born within the limits of the republic.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

Two steamers, the Missouri and the Cambria, have arrived at New York since our last, bringing foreign papers to Jan. 1.

The commercial intelligence brought by the Cambria is very favorable. There had been an improvement in the money market, and a slight advance in cotton and breadstuffs.

The Arabs of Tripoli are in revolt. At Ghereau and at Gebel they rose en masse against the Turks, and killed the Governor of Gebel, Ahmed Effendi, and above a hundred of his people. They rose against him on account of the tyranny exercised by him. During the period of thirteen years that he has been Governor, he has done nothing but plunder the people, take away their children, and massacre the men. Those families who, in the time of Geramanli, the former Governor, paid twenty dollars annual tribute to the Turks, are now compelled to pay one hundred dollars. This is the reason why the people of Bengazy, to the number of 30,000, fled to Egypt and Smyrna. More than 40,000 have fled from Tripoli unto the regency of Tunis. Those actually in Tripoli are living a life of misery. The war-schooner Sajah Cattera had sailed for Malta with dispatches for the Sultan, in which the Governor requested the Sultan to send immediately five or six thousand troops to exterminate the rebels.

The late Parliament, during the last session, sanctioned 160 railway bills, for the construction of 1,353 miles of railway. The capital stock of the various companies amounted to £25,695,257; the capital subscribed, to £11,702,951; and the amount empowered to be borrowed to £13,764,871.

The cheese which won a gold medal at the Fair of the American Institute, in New York, has been on view at the warehouse of Messrs. Leech, Harrison & Co., Liverpool. It weighed gross 575 lbs., nett 572 lbs., and was made from the milk of 350 cows. It has been sent from Leech & Co.'s warehouse into Yorkshire.

A meeting of deputies of the "Three Denominations," (Independents, Presbyterians, and Baptists,) has been held in London. The report stated, that through their exertions, there were at present not less than sixty-two Members of Parliament who were opposed to all grants of public money for religious endowments.

The Earl of Winchelsea has published a letter in the London Standard, calling upon his fellow-countrymen to resist, in the most strenuous manner, the attempt now being made by Her Majesty's Government to admit Jews Members of the British Parliament.

A striking evidence of the extent to which distress prevails at the present moment in London, will be found in the annual report of the Mendicity Society. The year 1846 was a sad one enough for destruction, yet the number of applications for relief to the Society was less than 80,000, while in the present year they have amounted to nearly 54,000.

A meeting has been held in London for the purpose of petitioning Parliament for the repeal of the window tax, as it proved detrimental to the health of the metropolis, and should be immediately abolished. This is not the opinion of the inhabitants of London alone, but of the country generally.

M. Guizot has ordered a Pole to quit France within twenty-four hours, because of a speech against the Emperor of Russia, at a Polish dinner.

MEXICAN NEWS.

There are rumors from Mexico, to which the New Orleans papers give credit, that Great Britain has commenced negociations with a view to effecting a peace. We hope these rumors may be speedily confirmed.

It is reported in the Mexican papers, that Santa Anna had embarked at Acapulco, for the port of San Blas.

Advices have been received from Mazatian to the 30th ult. The guerrillas under Migares had made an attack upon the Cape, but were completely routed, and Migares and many other Mexicans killed.

An expedition was dispatched on the night of the 21st against Cholula to apprehend some Mexican officers. A skirmish took place—three Mexicans were killed and three wounded.

A number of American prisoners, who had been taken at various times by the Mexicans, had been sent to Col. Childs from Zacatlan by Izunsia, the former Mexican Governor of Puebla, asking an exchange for Col. Pavor. If not admissable, an equal number of Mexicans was requested, and if neither proposition should be accepted, they might be considered voluntarily restored. Col. Childs replied that he could not comply with either proposition, and that the Mexicans were indebted for a great number of prisoners released during the war. He returned sincere thanks for kindness shown to the prisoners now voluntarily restored, and would with pleasure emulate the enemy's kindness toward all Mexicans who might become prisoners.

◆

A BAND OF BROTHERS.—Hon. William B. Calhoun, recently elected Secretary of this Commonwealth, is a brother of Hon. Charles Calhoun, Secretary of the Senate of Massachusetts, and of Hon. John H. Calhoun, Secretary of the Senate of New York. Another brother, Jas. Calhoun, is candidate for the VIIth District in Illinois, where he holds a highly incrative post as Clerk of the Courts. Another brother resides in Cincinnati, another in New York, both merchants, we believe, and still another, Rev. Simon H. Calhoun, is the eminent and devoted missionary to Syria.

A. J. DANA, THE LOST MAN.—It seems, says the Brattleboro' (Vt.) Gaz., that the man calling himself by the above name, who so mysteriously disappeared from this village in October last, leaving behind a valise containing over $500 in gold and silver coin, and whose reappearance in a miserable condition was mentioned two weeks since, is something of a rogue as well as a lunatic. His brother was here on Tuesday, and visited Dana at the Asylum, in company with two or three of our citizens. He pretended for a long time not to know his brother, but finally confessed the relationship between them. The brother's name is Samuel Dodge, who lives in Hamilton, Mass., and has two brothers residing in the same town. He says that Dana's true name is Antipas Dodge, which Dana at once admitted. He says that Dana, alias Dodge, left Hamilton on the 28th of September last, and took with him about $1,000 of his (Samuel Dodge's) money—$600 in gold and silver coin, and $400 in bank bills, of which the $500 found in the valise is a part. The money is still in the possession of Maj. Smith, and Dana remains at the Asylum. He has been a dissipated man, but was never known to be deranged, except from excessive use of liquor.

◆

A DESTITUTE SOLDIER.—There is at present in Brooklyn a soldier by the name of William Tompkins, late of Company F of the New York State Volunteers, who was at every battle, from the storming of Vera Cruz to the capture of the City of Mexico. At the battle of Churubusco he very narrowly escaped death, a musket ball grazing him on his breast: and at the storming of Chapultepec he fought by the side of Capt. Pearson of Brooklyn, and saw him fall and was with him during his last moments. In the taking of the Capital a ball from the Garita del Belau, took off Tompkins' left arm above the elbow. After remaining for some time in the hospital, he was sent to Vera Cruz with the train commanded by Col. Harney, and thence to this port, where he arrived entirely penniless and destitute of clothing.

SUMMARY.

The Mayor of Louisville gives notice, dated Jan. 14, that after 20 days from that time, the act of the Legislature passed in the session of 1845–6, will be enforced against free negroes in that city. That act provides that any free negro who shall come into the State and remain thirty days, shall be liable to arrest, and upon conviction of the fact, shall give a recognizance with two sufficient sureties in the sum of $500, to leave the State within ninety days, and never return; and upon failure so to give recognizance, shall be sold into slavery, to the highest bidder, for one year. An atrocious law.

The Western Railroad earnings in the year ending November 30 were: From passengers $502,322; freight, $785,346; mails, rent, &c., $37,668; total, $1,325,336. The expenditures were, $196,549 for repairs of road; $52,050, repairs of engines; $72,061, repairs of cars; $34,631, for buildings, &c.; $280,623, expenses of transportation; and $40,776, for general expenses. Total $676,690—leaving a net income of $648,646.

In a late Newburgh paper appears an advertisement offering at private sale, "cheap," the celebrated and valuable property known as Washington's Headquarters. "The lot contains about three acres, and is one of the handsomest lawns in the village, commanding a view of the Hudson from West Point to Dans Kamer. On this lot is the 'Old Stone House,' occupied in 1782–3 by Gen. Washington."

A gentleman residing in Yates Co., N. Y., in writing to his friend under date of Jan. 14, says that in the town of Dundee, in the same county, the small pox is prevailing to such an extent that business is nearly stopped, the schools closed, and the churches have not been opened for several weeks.

AUBURN, 'loveliest village of the plain,' has taken it into her head to become a city. The Trustees, with entire unanimity, have appointed a Committee to draft a city charter, and will soon make an application to the Legislature for city privileges.

By the late census, Texas contains, of slaves, slaveholders, and others, 140,000 persons, being one human being to each three square miles, or 2,000 acres. Probably some 5,000 persons, heads of families, have been allowed to rivit slavery on a territory of 400,000 square miles in extent, which the United States have annexed, with a virtual perpetual prohibition to free settlers. So says the Tribune.

The Massachusetts girls, last year, made 1,046,944 straw bonnets and hats, worth $1,057,892; also, palm leaf hats worth $480,387; and straw braid, value $102,367. What a purse, $1,640,596 was to divide among them! In 1846, the Old Bay State made nearly 21,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes, value nearly $15,000,000.

The State Bank at Saugerties and the Bank of Cayuga Lake have suspended redemptions. These are free banks, and the circulation, which has been reduced to $50,000 each, is secured entirely by New York State Stocks. There can not be much loss to the bill-holders who wait redemption from the Controller's Office. The general opinion among the uncurrent-money brokers is, that these are the last failures which will take place.

Ohio is moving for an amendment to the Post Office laws to reduce the postage on transient papers, and to permit them to be carried in the mails without a pre-payment of postage. A resolution instructing her Senators and Representatives in Congress to favor such an amendment has been introduced and referred in the Legislature.

The ship Kedron, Capt. Howes, from Cronstadt, on the 5th inst. in lat. 43 40, lon 45 30, lost overboard from the jib-boom, while stowing the jib, three seamen, viz: Jas. Gillis, of Virginia: Geo. Meadon, of Louisiana; and Laurens Daniels, of Denmark. All efforts to save them were unavailing.

Accounts from Yucatan state that thirty-seven Indians were executed agreeably to sentence on the 20th, for their participation in the horrors of Valladolid, Teple, &c. The execution took place in the interior of the citadel, to spare the citizens the sight of such an effusion of blood.

The Paris Commerce has calculated, that during the last seventeen years no less than 1,129 prosecutions had been directed against the French journals in the name of King Louis Phillippe, who had inaugurated his accession to the throne by a formal promise that no prosecution should be in future instituted against the press. During that period, 57 journals were obliged to suspend their publication, in consequence of the severity of the penalties. The writers were sentenced to 3,141 years and 8 months imprisonment, and the journals to 7,110,500f. fine.

The Frankfort (Ky.) Commonwealth contains an advertisement offering for sale the splendid family carriage of the lamented Gen. Harrison. It was presented to Gen. H. by the young men of Baltimore; the original cost was $2,500, and it is now very nearly as good as when new; though it will be sold for greatly less than cost. The circumstances of the family of the lamented hero, are not such as will permit them to keep it, and they have advertised, in the hope that they may find in Kentucky, among their tried friends, a purchaser.

A large proportion of the members of the Legislature of Massachusetts, with the Governor at their head, are associated in a Temperance Society. This Society held its anniversary on Wednesday evening of last week, Gov. Briggs in the chair, when addresses were made by him and other prominent individuals, including Lieut. Gov. Reed and the President of the Senate, Mr. Scudder.

The British ship India arrived from Liverpool, after a passage of 57 days. Capt. Thompson died of the ship fever on the 14th inst., and during the passage thirty-nine of the passengers died of the same disease. The first officer of the ship, and a large number of the passengers, are now sick. When the India left Liverpool she had two hundred and seventy passengers.

Mr. Hornbeck, a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, died at Allentown, Pa., on the 16th of January. He was not well when he went to Washington at the opening of Congress, and soon afterwards returned home with little or no hope of recovering.

The important question whether the translation of a work constitutes or not a "counterfeit" of the original, has just been decided in the affirmative by the criminal tribunal of the first resort in Berlin, Prussia. The question was raised on a German translation of Sir E. L. Bulwer's novel of Lucretta. There is an appeal before the Court of Berlin.

The American Messenger says:—Beside the generous donations previously announced, an anonymous contributor has sent to the treasury $250, and an "Episcopalian" (a lady) has sent $150, "to aid in sending colporteurs to Mexico, or any destitute portion of the United States."

Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh, affirm, that of $75,000 recently expended in paper, $26,000 were exacted by the Queen as her taxes thereon, being far more than their own yearly profits.

The Deutsche Schnellpost says that six of the Jesuits expelled from Switzerland are now in this City.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, JAN. 24.

ASHES—Pearls $7; Pots 5 87 to 6 00.——FLOUR AND MEAL—Troy, Oswego, strait Genesee, Rochester, and Michigan Flour sold for 6 06. Jersey Meal 3 25. Rye Flour 4 25.——GRAIN—Genesee Wheat 1 40. Corn 64 a 70c. Rye 90c. Oats 45 a 50c. Barley 90c.——PROVISIONS—Prime Pork 6 75; Mess 11 37. Prime Beef 5 75; Mess 8 50. No change in Butter and Cheese.

MARRIED,

In Leonardsville, N. Y., on the 10th inst., by Rev. Wm. B. Maxson, Col. CHARLES S. BENSON, of New York City, to Miss PHEBE H. B. MAXSON, of the former place.

In Brookfield, N. Y., January 12th, 1848, by Eld. Eli S. Bailey, Mr. HENRY DENISON to Miss JULIA ANN PALMER, both of Brookfield.

DIED,

In Onondaga, Ingham Co., Mich., Oct. 23, after a lingering illness, ANNA CHURCH, consort of Silas Church, in the 77th year of her age. Sister Church became a believer in Christ at the early age of nine years, and since that time has been noted for her piety and Christian deportment. About sixteen years ago she embraced the Bible Sabbath, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Otselic, Chenango Co., N. Y. During the past summer she, with her now bereaved companion, moved to Onondaga, purposing to spend their last days with the few lonely Sabbath-keepers in this place; and though her days with us have been few, yet we feel that we have been bereft of a mother in Israel. She has left an aged companion and a large circle of relatives to mourn her loss, but they "mourn not as those without hope."

A. P. S.

In the town of Hopewell, Cumberland Co., N. J., on the 16th inst., of creeping palsey, SAMUEL THOMAS.

LETTERS.

Samuel Davison, Maxson Green, Wm. Utter, James Summerbell, Joseph Goodrich, C. S. Hall, Benjamin Maxson, S. P. Stillman, Wm. B. Maxson, Eli S. Bailey, A. P. Stillman, S. S. Griswold, Samuel Ruggles, A. C. Babcock, (the money will be invested in articles for which they have written, and the letter will be sent with the articles by the first ship.)

RECEIPTS.

W. D. Wells, Westerly, R. I.	$2 00	pays to vol.	4	No.	52
Sanford Noyes, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Lester Crandall, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
J. D. Babcock, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
M. Johnson, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
J. Fenner, 2d, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Thomas Clarke, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
J. C. Nash, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Geo. S. Barber, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Jared Barber, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Simon Kenyon, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
W. F. Prosser, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Paul Babcock, "	2 00	"	5	"	52
Geo. W. Noyes, "	2 00	"	4	"	26
A. Collins, Lippitt, R. I.	2 00	"	4	"	52
Jos. Goodrich, Milton, W. T.	2 00	"	4	"	52
E. Burdick, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
H. W. Green, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
John Stillman, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
Geo. S. Burdick, "	2 00	"	5	"	52
Eli Davis, Shiloh, N. J.	2 00	"	4	"	52
Jos. Swinney, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
E. A. Crossley, "	2 00	"	4	"	52
M. & E. B. Ayers, "	2 00	"	5	"	7
Abel S. Randolph, "	2 00	"	3	"	52
A. P. Stillman, Onondaga, Mich.	2 00	"	4	"	31
D. R. Potter, Almond,	2 00	"	4	"	52
Chauncy Green, "	1 00	"	4	"	52
Moses Maxson, Richburg,	2 00	"	4	"	52
Amos Crandall, Philips' Creek,	1 00	"	4	"	9
Benj. Maxson, Hounsfield,	2 00	"	4	"	52
Witter & Babcock, U. Forks,	2 00	"	4	"	52

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held in New York, on the evening of second-day, Feb. 7, at 7 o'clock. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the members of the Board, and that those having business to present will make the same known to the Corresponding Secretary, Thomas B. Brown, previous to the meeting.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman New York, will be promptly attended to,

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.

CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, PROPRIETOR.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS. R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music.

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing	Wednesday,	Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	"	Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	"	April 5,	"	July 12

TUITION, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
EXTRAS—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare, to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!

Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. Complete in two imperial octavo volumes, of more than fourteen hundred pages of double column letter-press: and upwards of three hundred elegant illustrations. Price $5 00

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the tasto, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton—by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

In addition to the great number of pictorial illustrations in the English edition, the American publishers have greatly enriched the work by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron, a full length portrait of Dr. Johnson, and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson.

These important additions to the American edition, together with a better paper and binding than the English, must give this a decided preference with the American reader.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J P Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—L. T. Rogers,
" Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem—David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
New Salem—J. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Cla

Miscellaneous.

SHELLY'S DIRGE FOR THE OLD YEAR.

Orphan hours, the year is dead,
Come and sigh, come and weep!
Merry hours, smile instead,
For the year is but asleep:
See, it smiles as it is sleeping,
Mocking your untimely weeping.

As an earthquake rocks a corse
In its coffin in the clay,
So White Winter, that rough nurse,
Rocks the dead-cold year to-day!
Solemn hours! wail aloud,
For your mother in her shroud.

As the wild air stirs and sways
The tree-swung cradle of a child,
So the breath of these rude days
Rocks the year:—be calm and mild.
Trembling hours—she will arise
With new love within her eyes.

January gray is here,
Like a sexton by her grave;
February bears the bier,
March with grief doth howl and rave,
And April weeps—but O, ye hours!
Follow with May's fairest flowers.

◆

From the Charleston Courier.

THE BEAUTIFUL MANIAC.

"The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone as some volcanic isle,
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile!"

In the morning train from Petersburgh, there was a lady closely veiled, in the same car with ourselves. She was dressed in the purest white, wore gold bracelets, and evidently belonged to the higher circles of society. Her figure was delicate, though well developed, and exquisitely symmetrical; and when she occasionally drew aside her richly embroidered veil, the glimpse of her features, which the beholder obtained, satisfied him of her extreme loveliness. Beside her sat a gentleman in deep mourning, who watched over her with unusual solicitude, and several times when she attempted to rise, he excited the curiosity of the passengers by detaining her in her seat.

Outside the cars all was confusion; passengers looking to their baggage, porters running, cabmen cursing, and all the usual hurry and bustle attending the departure of a railroad train. One shrill warning whistle from the engine, and we moved slowly away.

At the first motion of the car, the lady in white started to her feet with one heart-piercing scream, and her bonnet falling off, disclosed the most lovely features we ever contemplated. Her raven tresses fell over her shoulders in graceful disorder, and clasping her hands in prayer, she turned her dark eyes to heaven. What agony was in that look! What beauty, too, what heavenly beauty, had not so much of misery been stamped upon it. Alas! that one glance told a melancholy tale.

"————she was changed
As if by the sickness of the soul; her mind
Had wandered from its dwelling, and her eyes,
They had not their own lustre, but the look
Which is not of the earth; she was become
The queen of a fantastic realm; her thoughts
Were combinations of disjointed things;
And forms, impalpable and unperceived
Of others' sight, familiar were to hers."

Her brother, the gentleman in black, was unremitting in his efforts to soothe her spirit. He led her back to her seat; but her hair was still unbound, and her beauty unveiled. The cars rattled on, and the passengers in groups resumed their conversation. Suddenly a wild melody arose; it was the beautiful maniac's voice, rich, full, and inimitable. Her hands were crossed on her heaving bosom, and she waved her body as she sung with touching pathos:—

"She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps,
And lovers are around her sighing,
But coldly she turns from their gaze and weeps,
For her heart in his grave is lying.

"She sings the wild songs of her dear native plains,
Every note which he loved awaking—
Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,
How the heart of the minstrel is breaking!"

Her brother was unmanned, and he wept as only man can weep. The air changed, and she continued—

"Has sorrow thy young days shaded
As clouds o'er the morning fleet?
Too fast have those young days faded,
That even in sorrow were sweet?
If thus the unkind world wither
Each feeling that once were dear;
Come, child of misfortune! come hither,
I'll weep with thee, tear for tear."

She then sung a fragment of the beautiful hymn—

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

Another attempt to rise up was prevented, and she threw herself on her knees beside her brother, and gave him such a mournful, entreating look, with a plaintive, "Save me, my brother! save your sister!" that scarcely a passenger could refrain from weeping. We say scarcely, for there was one man (was he a man?) who called on the conductor to "put her out of the car." He received the open scorn of the company. His insensibility to such a scene of distress almost defies belief; and yet this is in every particular, an "ow'er true tale." Should he ever read these lines, may his marble heart be softened by the recollection of his brutality!

Again the poor benighted beauty raised her bewitching voice to one of the most solemn sacred airs:—

"Oh where shall rest be found,
Rest for the weary soul!"

And continued the melancholy chant until we reached the steamer Mount Vernon, on board of which we descended the magnificent James river, the unhappy brother and sister occupying the "ladies' cabin." His was a sorrow too profound for ordinary consolation; and no one dared intrude so far upon his grief as to satisfy his curiosity.

We were standing on the promenade deck, admiring the beautiful scenery of the river, when at one of the landings, the small boat pulled away for the shore with the unhappy pair, en route for the asylum at ——. She was standing erect in the stern of the boat, her head still uncovered, and her white dress and raven tresses fluttering in the breeze. The boat returned, and the steamer moved on for Norfolk. They were gone! that brother with his broken heart, that sister with her melancholy union of beauty and madness.

◆

The Maid and the Magpie in Real Life.—A magpie flew in at the open window of a dressing-room at Skene House, and ingeniously contrived to pick a ring, belonging to Lady Agnes Duff, from the upright stalk of a ring-stand, and fly off with it in his bill. Lady Agnes' maid, who was alone in the room at the time, and witnessed the theft, without being able to prevent it, was filled with consternation. The ring she knew was a valuable one—worth forty guineas—and she naturally feared that the story of the magpie would hardly be accepted as a satisfactory account of its disappearance. A workman, to whom she communicated the alarm, had seen the bird fly out, and observed that it first perched on the top of a rack of wood. By great good fortune, they found, on going to the place, that the ring had been dropped and was lying on the ground.

◆

MARRIAGE MODES IN CHINA.

A Chinese woman spends her time at home, and if poor, works at the loom. Ladies prepare embroidery, and are fond of gaudy dress. Girls get little or no education, and boys are sent to school at an early age. Matchmakers are in much repute, as ladies are not allowed to make a selection for themselves. The marriage vow is said to be strictly observed on the female side, but the same cannot be said of the men. A small foot and a pale complexion are the tests of beauty. Celibacy is only known to a poor man who cannot buy a wife; all parents expect a dowry for their daughters, to repay them the expense of bringing them up.

The suspicion of the Chinese character is manifested even in their marriages. The wedding day being fixed on, the bridegroom sends a sedan, (a particular kind is made for this purpose.) The mother of the bride puts her into the sedan, securely locks the door, and sends the key to the mother-in-law. On the arrival at the bridegroom's house, his mother unlocks the door, and delivers her to her intended husband, when both repair to the chapel of the idols, where are kept the names of their ancestors. In the outer temple they bow themselves four times upon their knees, and then enter the inner temple, where their parties are sitting; to whom they make the same reverence. All parties then retire to the bridegroom's house, where a private room is set apart for the bride, into which no male relative can ever enter, not even the father of either parties. Should the father have occasion to chastise his son, which is not uncommon, the son contrives to get into this private apartment, and is safe.

Marriage appears to have been a formal ceremony in use from the earliest time. There are two kinds of marriage; the first is called a true marriage, and lasts for the life of both parties, unless causes of divorce can be shown, which are numerous and trivial. The second marriage is permitted by the laws in case they have no sons; these concubines, or second wives, are regularly purchased from their parents or some other person who has brought them up from childhood with that object. The price obtained for an accomplished female is very considerable. As soon as she brings forth a son she is probably parted with, and disposed of to another; the first wife takes the son, and the real mother never sees it again. There is no prohibition against widows marrying; but the higher classes never do.

◆

THE CHOLERA TREATED BY ETHER.

Translated from the Courrier des Etats Unis, for the Mercantile Journal.

At the present time, when the Asiatic Cholera is advancing with rapid strides towards Western Europe, the following fact, mentioned by the Gazette des Hospitaux, is worthy the serious attention of the medical faculty.

M. Bruno-Taron, a surgeon major in the Ottoman army, and formerly inspector of health in Bulgarie, Syria, &c., was a physician at Marseilles at the time of the second invasion of the cholera in that city, in 1837. He devoted himself assiduously to the care of his patients, and his duties at the hospital, and was at length attacked by the epidemic, the symptoms of which were of course well known to him. M. Taron describes his condition in the following words: "It was midnight. I had been in bed about an hour, when suddenly I was seized with cold chills. This cold was soon accompanied with copious vomiting and discharges of a whitish matter, accompanied with a cold sweat. An hour after, violent cramps manifested themselves in the thoractic and abdominal cavities." These are the usual symptoms of cholera.

M. Taron was alone. His family had fled from the scourge, and he had no domestic. He consequently found himself at midnight, without succor, oppressed as much by pain, as by the terrible certainty of a speedy death. "No medicine was to be had," said M. Taron, "except a large flask of sulphuric ether, which by chance happened to be in the chamber.

"Having no other resource," continued M. Taron, "I seized upon this flask, and took copious respirations of the gas. Soon my respiration, which had been difficult and oppressed, became more free, and I immediately became relieved from pain, which was followed by a sensation very agreeable. The sweats, which had been cold and exhausting, became warm and pleasant. The functions of sense and feeling were finally entirely suspended, and I slept soundly. All these happy ameliorations of the disease, were the prompt results of the respiration of sulphuric ether. I slept without intermission for eight hours, at the end of which time I awoke with a sensation of great feebleness throughout my whole body. I had, unconsciously, perspired freely during the whole night. That day and the day following, I had some evacuations of a blackish matter. My strength returned to me by degrees, and I found myself completelycured."

In conclusion, M. Taron states that he knew not at the time the power which sulphuric ether exercises over the nervous system, and he consequently did not attribute to that agent the honor of effecting so sudden a cure, but referred it entirely to one of those whims and caprices of nature which it is impossible to explain.

It it unfortunate, adds the Gazette des Hospitaux, that the case of our brother is isolated and alone. But it is important, as furnishing a hint on which to base farther experiments.

The Gazette du Midi says, a physician of Marseilles has confirmed the statements of M. Taron, and that experiments of this kind have been made with success in the countries of the East, where this malady commenced its ravages.

It should be the duty of the academies of medicine to investigate this matter fully, and to order new experiments, with all the minuteness which can render them decisive for science.

THE SISTERS.

The following account of a scene in the slave market of Constantinople, is taken from a work entitled "Wayfaring Sketches:"

A most interesting group presented itself before us; two young female slaves, both with most pleasing countenances, stood together, closely embraced, the arm of the one round the neck of the other; their attitude, as well as the strong likeness between them, pointed them out at once as sisters. By their side was an African slave-dealer, in whose ferocious countenance it seemed impossible to discern a trace of human feeling; he was armed with a large, heavy stick, with which he drove them to and fro, literally like a herd of animals. Three or four Turks were discussing with tolerable animation the price of one of the women; but the bargain had been struck just before we came in, and one of the party, a stout, good-looking man, was paying down the money. When this was completed, with an imperious movement of the hand he motioned to his newly-purchased slave to follow him. It was the youngest and most timid of the two sisters whom he had selected. Nothing could have been more painful than to watch the intense and terrified anxiety with which both of them had watched the progress of the sale; and now it was concluded, and they knew that the moment of separation had arrived, she whose fate had been sealed, disengaged herself, and turning round, placed her two hands on her sister's shoulders, with a firm grasp, and gazed into her eyes. Not words, nor tears, could have expressed one-half of the mute, unutterable despair that dwelt in that long, heart-rending gaze. It was hard to say which face was most expressive of misery; but the Turk was impatient; he clapped his hands together. This was a well-known signal. A slight tremor shook the frame of the young slave; her arms fell powerless at her side, and she turned to follow her master. The voiceless but agonized farewell was over. In another moment we could just distinguish her slender figure threading its way through the crowd, in company with other slaves belonging to the Turk. Her sister had hid herself behind her companions, and now sat on the ground, her head sunk upon her folded arms.

◆

Gates.—Every field on the farm should be entered by a good self-shutting and self-fastening gate. Farmers, who are too busy in summer to make them or get them made, should see to it now. How long does it require to take dawn and put up a set of bars? At least two minutes; which, if repeated three times a day for a year, amounts to thirty hours or three days of working time—which would yearly pay for a good gate. Or, examine it in another point of view—three times a day, is eighteen hundred times a year; now is there any man between Halifax and California, who would take down and replace a set of bars eighteen hundred times in succession, in payment for a farm gate? Hardly—yet this is the price yearly paid by those who use bars that are constantly passed, and the gate is not obtained by it. Again, how much better is a well-hung gate than one half hung?—or one with a good self-fastening latch, than one with a pin crowded into an auger hole? Try it by dragging a badly hung gate over the ground, eighteen hundred times in succession, securing it each time with a pin, and see if you do not think this labor would pay for good hinges and a latch. [Albany Cultivator.

◆

A Great Tunnel.—A tunnel two and a quarter miles in length, is in the course of construction, under the town of Liverpool, designed to connect the railroad depot at Edgehill with the North Docks at the water's edge, where the foreign shipping centers. This great tunnel is to be called the Victoria Tunnel, and when it is completed, ships' cargoes will be taken direct to the depot at Edgehill, without the present heavy cost for cartage. The tunnel undermines in its course many churches, which will be only 60 feet above the roll of the locomotive. The railroad company (London and Northwestern,) have to pay compensation to the owner of every house and building under which the tunnel passes. Two thousand men are employed on this great work, the operations of which are very dangerous, shaking sometimes the foundations of some of the houses above.

◆

To Measure Stone in a Wall.—Measure the wall in the clear, and add the thickness of the wall; then find the circumference, which is the length of the wall, and divide by 24.75.

To Measure Grain in a Bin.—Multiply the length of the bin by the width, and that by the depth; this gives the cubical feet in a bushel.

To Measure Corn in a Crib.—Multiply the length and breadth of the house together, and that by the depth, which will give the cubic feet; divide the last product by 12, which will give the barrels of shelled corn in the crib, 5 bushels in a barrel.

To Find the Cubic Feet in a Grindstone.—To the whole diameter add half of said diameter, and multiply by the same half, and this product by the thickness, and divide by 1,728, the number of cubic inches in a foot.

◆

Paper from the Forest.—Doctor Stremme, Professor of Architecture in the Imperial University of Dorpat, Russia, has recently invented a method of drawing from the leaves of the Pine a cotton-like substance, to which he has given the name of forest wool. It is extremely well fitted for the fabrication of coarse stuffs, as well as for pasteboards and wrapping paper. The cloth made of the forest wool retains, it is true, an odor of rosin, but as this odor drives off troublesome insects, the cloth may be used with advantage in bedding, such as matress covers, blankets, &c., especially for barracks, hospitals, and other establishments, where many are crowded together.

◆

The Burning of Water.—Two centuries since, a man would have been drowned for witchcraft had he hinted at such an idea. Sir Humphrey Davy first suggested that men might be driven, from failure of other fuel, to separate the hydrogen in water for consumption. The gas for burning consists of hydrogen and carbon. Mr. Jobard, of Brussels, has by a decomposition of water secured the hydrogen, and by an ingenious process mingled with it the proper quantity of carbonic acid gas, thus forming a burning fluid. He says that a very trifling quantity of oil may thus be made to yield a light for twenty hours, equaling that of ten tallow candles.

VARIETY.

In 1830, seventeen years since, the first passenger-car on a railway made its first experimental trip. It had been calculated that it could safely accomplish twenty miles an hour; and the London Quarterly derided the expectations of those who intended such awful conveyances for the people. The directors modestly thought that half of those who journeyed in coaches might be induced to "take the cars." Mark the result! The first year there were 445,000 passengers carried over the road; and in 1845 the number had risen to 897,000! One member had calculated that their speed could only be three and a half miles per hour, and thus they could not compete with coaches. On that road there has been a speed of seventy miles per hour.

A gentleman in Penrith, whose house was much infested with cockroaches, got out of bed, and after killing several, lay down again. He had scarcely got into a slumber, when he found under his head some thing that he imagined to be a beetle, which he seized with a shudder, and threw across the room with great violence. He then discovered, but too late, that the supposed beetle was his watch-seal, and that he had broken his watch to pieces by throwing it against the wall.

Gibbon says of his famous history of the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," "I will add two facts which have seldom occurred in the composition of six, or at least five quartos. My first rough manuscript, without any intermediate copy, has been sent to the press. Second—not a sheet has been seen by any human eye excepting those of the author and the printer; the faults and merits are exclusively my own."

It is an important fact that the Moravian settlement of Sarepta, on the river Volga, has again, for the second time, escaped the visitation of the cholera, whilst the disease has prevailed all around it. This is supposed to be the result of the well-known temperance and cleanliness of the Moravians, who rival the Society of Friends in both these qualities.

According to the calculations of philosophers, a spherule or little globe of water, only one inch in diameter, expands, in freezing, with a force superior to the resistance of the weight of thirteen and a half tons. This power, it is said, has been applied with success in Sweden and France, to the splitting of rocks.

The Scientific American says that there is exhibiting in Broadway, this city, at the present moment, a number of canary birds that have been trained to draw carriages, wear cocked hats and coats, fire off small cannons, dance on the tight rope, stand on their heads, and perform various other feats, that display a capacity to learn and be trained which no one could imagine the feathered race possessed.

Wise men say nothing in dangerous times. The lion called the sheep to ask her if his breath smelt; she said, 'Ay,' and he bit off her head for a fool. He called the wolf and asked him. He said, 'No,' and he tore him to pieces for a flatterer. At last he called for the fox, and asked him. 'Truly,' said he, 'I have got a cold, and cannot smell.'

The average passages from Liverpool of the Cunard Steamers during the past year, was 15 days 5 hours. The shortest passage was made by the Britania, (12 days,) and the longest by the Hibernia, (20 1-2 days.) They brought to this country 1,804 passengers, and left at Halifax 247; and took to Europe 1,486 passengers, 253 at Halifax.

A young man named Jacob Grubb, whilst playing billiards in New Orleans, on the 7th ult., suddenly fell down a corpse. He was standing at one of the tables, and had a billiard cue in his hands; just as he was about striking one of the balls, he fell to the floor. In less than three minutes he was dead.

A young apprentice to the shoemaking business asked his master what answer he should give to the often repeated question, 'Does your master warrant his shoes?' 'Answer, Thomas,' said the master, 'that I warrant them to prove good, and if they don't, I'll make them good-for-nothing.'

A traveler in England observing a peasant at work, and seeing that he was taking it remarkably easy, said to him, 'My friend, you don't appear to sweat any.' 'Why, no, master; seven shillings a week ain't sweating wages.'

A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says that Wyman B. S. Moor, of Bangor, Me. has been appointed by the Governor to supply during the recess of the Legislature the vacancy in the U. S. Senate, created by the death of Hon. John Fairfield.

A drop or two of honey well rubbed on the hands while wet, after washing with soap, prevents chapping, and removes the roughness of the skin—it is particularly pleasant for children's hands and faces in cold weather.

The St. Louis papers are talking of extending the magnetic telegraph from that place to the Pacific. The distance is 2,000 miles, which, at $150 a mile, would make the total cost $300,000.

The physician who has the best practice in London stated his yearly earnings at $160,000, and was taxed accordingly—other doctors returned their incomes at $72,000 to $25,000 a year each.

A writer in the Post says that no less than 700 ships have been built in New England the year just closed; registering not less than 150,000 tons.

Macready, on being once importuned for alms, is said to have presented a sixpence to the pauper, observing, 'Friend, we give but seldom, but when we do give, we give like a prince."

The city of Detroit is no longer the capital of Michigan. The various State offices have been moved off to Lansing.

Esteem is the mother of love, but the daughter is often older than the mother.

In Ohio, the quantity of tobacco raised this season is supposed not to be over 6,000 or 8,000 hhds., against 20,000 last year.

A colored woman died in Baltimore the other day in the one hundred and second year of her age.

THE DAILY NATIONAL WHIG is published in the city of Washington, every day, at three o'clock P. M., Sundays excepted, and served to subscribers in the City, at the Navy Yard, in Georgetown, in Alexandria, and in Baltimore, the same evening, at six and a quarter cents a week, payable to the sole agent of the Whig, G. L. Gillchrist, Esq., or his order. It is also mailed to any part of the United States for $4 per annum, or $2 for six months, payable in advance. Advertisements of ten lines or less inserted one time for 50 cents, two times for 75 cents, three times for $1, one week for $1 75, two weeks for $2 75, one month for $4, two months for $7, three months for $10, six months for $16, one year for $20, payable always in advance.

The "National Whig" is what its name indicates. I speaks the sentiments of the Whig party of the Union on every question of public policy. It advocates the election to the Presidency of Zachary Taylor, subject to the decision of a Whig National Convention. It makes war to the knife upon all the measures and acts of the Administration deemed to be adverse to the interests of the country, and exposes without fear or favor the corruptions of the party in power. Its columns are open to every man in the country, for the discussion of political or any other questions.

In addition to politics, a large space in the National Whig will be devoted to publications upon Agriculture, Mechanics, and other useful arts, Science in general, Law, Medicine, Statistics, &c. Choice specimens of American and Foreign Literature will also be given, including Reviews, &c. A weekly list of the Patents issued by the Patent Office will likewise be published—the whole forming a complete family newspaper.

The "Weekly National Whig," one of the largest newspapers in the United States, is made up from the columns of the Daily National Whig, and is published every Saturday, for the low price of $2 per annum, payable in advance. A double sheet of eight pages will be given whenever the press of matter shall justify it.

The Memoirs of General Taylor, written expressly for the National Whig, are in course of publication. They commenced with the second number, a large number of copies of which have been printed, to supply calls for back numbers.

CHAS. W. FENTON,
Proprietor of the National Whig.

P. S. All daily, weekly, and semi-weekly papers in the United States are requested to insert this advertisement once a week for six months, noticing the price for publishing the same at the bottom of the advertisement, and send the paper containing it to the National Whig office, and the amount will be duly remitted. Our editorial brethren are also requested to notice the National Whig in their reading columns.

July 15.—6m—$10 C. W. F.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers,—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trus

Alfred, June 23, 846.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT
NO. 9 SPRUCE STREET, NEW YORK

TERMS.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance.

$2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should directed, post paid, to
George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce St., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." PRINTED BY EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN.

VOL. IV.—NO. 33. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1848. WHOLE NO. 189.

The Sabbath Recorder.

☞ The following Call for an Anti-Sabbath Convention, appeared originally in "The Liberator," published at Boston. We copy it, not because we approve of all the sentiments it contains, but because we think the measure it proposes is destined to have an important bearing upon the Sabbath controversy, and therefore desire that our readers may be fully informed in relation to it.

ANTI-SABBATH CONVENTION.

To the Friends of Civil and Religious Liberty :—

The right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience is inherent, inalienable, self-evident. Yet it is notorious, that in all the States, excepting Louisiana, there are laws enforcing the religious observance of the FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK AS THE SABBATH, and punishing as criminals such as attempt to pursue their usual avocations on that day,—avocations which even Sabbatarians recognize as innocent and laudable on all other days. It is true, some exceptions are made to the rigorous operation of these laws, in favor of the Seventh-Day Baptists, Jews, and others who keep the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath; but this freedom is granted in condescension to the scruples of particular sects, as a privilege, and not recognized as a natural right. For those, (and the number is large and steadily increasing,) who believe that the Sabbath was exclusively a Jewish institution,—'a shadow of good things to come,' which vanished eighteen hundred years ago before the light of the Christian dispensation, and therefore that it constitutes no part of Christianity,—there is no exemption from the penalty of the law; but, should they venture to labor even for bread on that day, or be guilty of what is called 'Sabbath desecration,' they are liable either to fine or imprisonment! Cases of this kind have occurred in Massachusetts, Vermont, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, within a comparatively short period, where conscientious and upright persons have been thurst into prison, for an act no more intrinsically heinous than that of gathering in a crop of hay, or selling moral or philanthropic publications. There is, therefore, no liberty of conscience allowed to the people of this country, under the laws thereof, in regard to the observance of a Sabbath day.

In addition to these startling facts, within the last five years a religious combination has been formed in this land, styling itself 'THE AMERICAN AND FOREIGN SABBATH UNION,' whose specific object it is to impose the Sabbatical yoke yet more heavily on the necks of the American people. In a recent appeal made for pecuniary assistance by the Executive Committee of that Union, it is stated that 'the Secretary (Rev. Dr. Edwards) has visited twenty of the U. States, and traveled more than thirty thousand miles, addressing public bodies of all descriptions, and presenting reasons why, as a nation, we should keep the Sabbath—all secular business, traveling and amusement be confined to six days in a week—and all people assemble on the Sabbath, and worship God.' A 'permanent (?) Sabbath document' has been prepared by the Secretary; and 'what has already been done will put a copy of this document into more than three hundred thousand families.' Still greater efforts are to be made by the 'Union' for the furtherance of its object.

That this combination is animated by the spirit of religious bigotry and ecclesiastical tyranny—the spirit which banished the Baptists from Massachusetts, and subjected the Quakers to imprisonment and death, in the early settlement of this country—admits of little doubt. It is managed and sustained by the same spirit which has secured the enactment of penal laws against Sabbath-breaking, (all that the genius of the age will allow,) and the disposition of the combination manifestly is, if they can increase their power, to obtain the passage of yet more stringent laws against those who do not 'esteem one day above another,' but esteem 'every day'—who are not willing that any man shall judge them 'in respect to a holy day, or the new moon, or the Sabbath'—and who mean to 'stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free, and not to be entangled again with the yoke of bondage.' Its supporters do not rely solely upon reason, argument, persuasion, but also brute force—upon penal law; and thus, in seeking to crush by violence the rights of conscience, and religious liberty and equality, their real spirit is revealed as at war with the genius of republicanism, and the spirit of Christianity.

Believing that the efforts of this 'Sabbath Union' ought to be baffled by at least a corresponding energy on the part of the friends of civil and religious liberty;—

That the Sabbath, according to the Jewish Scriptures, was given to 'the children of Israel,'—AND TO NO OTHER PEOPLE,—as 'a sign' between them and God, and terminated, with all the other Mosaic rituals belonging to the 'ministration of death, WRITTEN AND ENGRAVEN IN STONES,' on the introduction of 'THE MINISTRATION OF THE SPIRIT,' and the substitution of 'A BETTER COVENANT, which was established upon better promises';—

That Christianity knows nothing of a holy day, but only of a holy life,—the possession of a spirit which works no ill to any one, and is 'THE FULFILLING OF THE LAW';—

That the worship of God does not pertain to any particular day—is not a special, isolated performance—and cannot come by observation,—but is purely spiritual in its nature, and comprehended in a cheerful obedience to the will of the Father, as far as it is made known;—

That the distinction made between sacred and secular acts, by the advocates of Sabbath keeping,—the sacred being the strict performance of religious observances, and the secular such as undoing heavy burdens, letting the oppressed go free, reclaiming the drunkard, laboring in the field or in the workshop, public traveling, transporting the United States mail,—is a distinction not based upon reason or Christianity, but calculated to lower the tone of individual and of public morality, and to depress the immutable standard of moral obligation;—

That the Sabbath, as now recognized and enforced, is one of the main pillars of Priestcraft and Superstition, and the stronghold of a merely ceremonial Religion;—

That, in the hands of a Sabbatizing clergy, it is a mighty obstacle in the way of all the reforms of the age,—such as Anti-Slavery, Peace, Temperance, Purity, Human Brotherhood, &c. &c.,—and rendered adamantine in its aspect towards bleeding Humanity, whose cause must not be pleaded, but whose cries must be stifled, on its 'sacred occurrence;—and believing, especially,

That all penal laws respecting the religious observance of any day as the Sabbath are despotic and anti-christian, and ought to be immediately abrogated;—

That the interference of the State, in matters of religious faith and outward observances, is not only unwarrantable, but a usurpation not to be tolerated;—

That they who are for subjecting to pains and penalties, all who do not construe the Scriptures in their light, in regard to a religious observance, are actuated by a mistaken or malevolent spirit, which is utterly at variance with the spirit of Christ, which in various ages has resorted to the dungeon, the rack, the gallows, and the stake, for the accomplishment of its purpose, and which ought to be boldly confronted and rebuked;—

We, the undersigned, therefore, invite all who agree with us essentially in these views of the Sabbath question, to meet IN CONVENTION, in the city of Boston, on THURSDAY and FRIDAY, the 23d and 24th of March next, to confer together, and to decide upon such measures for the dissemination of light and knowledge, on this subject, as may be deemed expedient.

In publishing this call for an ANTI-SABBATH CONVENTION, we desire to be clearly understood. We have no objection either to the first or the seventh day of the week as a day of rest from bodily toil, both for man and beast. On the contrary, such rest is not only desirable, but indispensable. Neither man nor beast can long endure unmitigated labor. But we do not believe that it is in harmony with the will of God, or the physical nature of man, that mankind should be doomed to hard and wasting toil six days out of seven, to obtain a bare subsistence. Reduced to such a pitable condition, the rest of one day in the week is indeed grateful, and must be regarded as a blessing; but it is wholly inadequate to repair the physical injury or the moral degradation consequent on such protracted labor. It is not in accordance with the law of life, that our race should be thus worked, and only thus partially relieved from suffering and a premature death. They need more, AND MUST HAVE MORE, instead of less rest; and it is only for them to be enlightened and reclaimed—to put away those things which now cause them to grind in the prison-house of Toil, namely, idolatry, priestcraft, sectarianism, slavery, war, intemperance, licentiousness, monopoly, and the like—in short, to live IN PEACE, obey the eternal law of being, strive for each others' welfare, and 'glorify God in their bodies and spirits which are his'—and they will secure the rest, not only of one day in seven, but of a very large portion of their earthly existence. To them shall be granted the mastery over every day and every hour of time, as against want and affliction; for the earth shall be filled with abundance for all.

Nor do we deny the right of any number of persons to observe a particular day of the week as holy time, by such religious rites and ceremonies as they may deem acceptable to God. To their own master, they stand or fall. In regard to all such matters, it is for every one to be fully persuaded in his own mind, and to obey the promptings of his own conscience; conceding to others the liberty he claims for himself.

The sole and distinct issue that we make is this:—We maintain that the seventh-day Sabbath was exclusively Jewish in its origin and design; that no holiness, in any sense, attaches to the first day of the week, more than to any other; and that the attempt to compel the observance of any day as 'THE SABBATH,' especially by penal enactments, is unauthorized by Scripture or reason, and a shameful act of imposture and tyranny. We claim for ourselves, and for all mankind, the right to worship God according to the dictates of OUR OWN CONSCIENCES. This right, inherent and inalienable, is cloven down in the United States; and we call upon all who desire to preserve civil and religious liberty to rally for its rescue.

By that infallible test of conscious rectitude which Jesus gave to his disciples—'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them'—let those who sabbatize on the first day of the week be measured. At present they constitute the majority, we the minority, in this country;—hence, the legislative power is in their hands, which they do not scruple to use for the purpose of binding and coercing our consciences. Now let the case be reversed. Suppose this power were in the hands of those who do not sabbatize, and they should proceed to enact penal laws, forbidding the observance of any day as the Sabbath—would not the sabbatarians cry out against such laws as vexatious and tyrannical, destructive of the rights of conscience, and a disgrace to the statute book?

We are aware that we shall inevitably be accused, by the chief priests, scribes, and pharisees of the present time, as was Jesus by the same class in his age, as 'not of God,' because we 'do not keep the Sabbath day;' but we are persuaded, that to expose the popular delusion which prevails on this subject, is to advance the cause of a part of Christianity, to promote true and acceptable worship, and to inculcate strict moral and religious accountability, in all concerns of life, ON ALL DAYS OF THE WEEK ALIKE. If we are 'infidels' or 'heretics' for this belief, we are content to stand in the same condemnation, on this point, with Tyndale, Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Roger Williams, John Milton, Penn, Fox, Priestly, Belsham, Paley, Whitby, Archbishop Whateley, and a host of others, who are everywhere lauded by the various sects with which they are identified as among the brightest ornaments of the Christian church, and who are essentially agreed with us in the opinion, that the Sabbath was a JEWISH INSTITUTION.

W. L. GARRISON, Boston, Mass.
FRANCIS JACKSON, " THEODORE PARKER, "
EDMUND JACKSON, " CHARLES HOVEY, "
JOHN W. BROWNE, "
MARIA W. CHAPMAN, " CHARLES K. WHIPPLE, "
SAMUEL PHILBRICK, Brookline.
LORING MOODY, Lynn.
STEPH. S. FOSTER, Worcester.
ABBY KELLEY FOSTER, "

EDMUND QUINCY, Dedham.
G. W. BENSON, Northamp'n.
A. ROBESON, New Bedford.
P. PILLSBURY, Concord, N.H.
JAS. MOTT, Philadelphia, Pa.
LUCRETIA MOTT, "
EDWARD M. DAVIS, "
CHAS. C. BURLEIGH, "
HENRY C. WRIGHT, "
J. MILLER McKIM, "
J. C. HATHAWAY, Far'n, N.Y.
T. McCLINTOCK, Waterloo.

LINES:

WRITTEN ON SEEING THE MONUMENT OF DAVID HUME, AT EDINBURGH.

I never looked upon the tomb
Erected there to DAVID HUME,
Without reflecting. Did not he,
With all his deep philosophy,
Deliberately try to load
The minds of men with doubts of God;
To poison, at the fountain's source,
The stream of life throughout its course;
To dash from suffering mortal's lip,
The cup of comfort he would sip;
To substitute for future life,
A present scene of anxious strife;
To tell us the oblivious wave
Will roll upon the new-made grave;
To steal from man those brilliant hopes
  Which through life's darkenss sweetly shine,
Exalting our imperfect state
  Into a character divine?
He did: and with his latest breath,
Proclaimed an everlasting death!
Like Eden's serpent, would destroy
What he himself could not enjoy.
Yet, strange to say, that very HUME
Was honored with a splendid tomb. [Blackwood.

DR. YATES' LAST VOYAGE TO INDIA.

There had been a birth on board, which was followed by a christening. The captain stood god-father, and gave a supper on the occasion. But while they were feasting, and singing indecent songs, the wind began to rise, and soon awakened the waves from their previous slumber, while the darkened horizon portended a coming storm. Most of the carousers became dreadfully ill from their previous revelry, and the whole ship's company betrayed symptoms of an extraordinary panic. This raging tempest continued to increase for two nights and two days, and at length became a tremendous hurricane. The wind seemed to rush from all points of compass at once—the sea and sky were mingled in a common mass—the waves around the ship were lashed into foam as white as snow—and rain fell in fearful torrents. Five men were stationed at the helm, but, through the thick darkness of the atmosphere, they could not see the compass, and the most awful thunder prevented their hearing the voice of command. A violent sea swept away their boats—the vessel would not answer the helm. Such was the strength of the wind, it was with difficulty an axe could be lifted, or a single blow given to cut away the mizen-mast; but when, at length, the shrouds and ropes were severed, the strong teak mast snapped like a stick, about half a yard from the poop, and carried ruin with it! The main-top-mast split, and the main-mast sprung in two places. The fore-top-mast and jib-boom broke, and the deck was strewn like a wreck—when, as if no longer of any service, the tiller broke, and left them to the absolute mercy of the winds and waves! The hinder and side cabins were now knocked down to fix another tiller, and the water was ancle deep in the cabin between the decks; while the females, with frequent cries and shrieks, endeavored to resign themselves to their fate, expecting every moment to be their last. All faces were pale with fright—every one exhausted with fatigue—and most hearts quailed before the terrors of such a death. In this awful extremity, Mr. Yates, with two others, who knew the value of prayer, called upon God in their distress: "To him, most solemnly, we committed our souls. Never before did I so feel the value of the atonement, and never shall I forget with what feelings I uttered the words—

'Nothing in my hands I bring—
Simply to the cross I cling.'"

A strong persuasion then came over him that God would interpose for their deliverance; and while the hearts of others melted within them, he was enabled to plead with his Father in heaven for preservation. Just as they had finished prayer, a voice was heard proclaiming an unusually rapid rise in the barometer—a sure presage of the subsiding of the storm. "I did not believe that we should sink, and prayed in faith that the storm might cease; and the first words we heard after prayer were those which announced the rise in the glass. I was enabled to sing with composure, the hymn—

'Begone, unbelief, my Saviour is near,
And for my relief will quickly appear;
By prayer let me wrestle, and he will perform;
With Christ in the vessel, I smile at the storm.'"

The "perfect peace" evinced by Mr. Yates during the tempest, and his serene and heavenly aspect when he came forth from communion with God, to contemplate the terrific scene, struck so powerfully on the mind of a Mr. Hunt, one of the passengers, as to lead ultimately to his conversion. He described himself as, at that time, a worldly and thoughtless young man—was going to India to seek some musical engagement—and, but for the tempest, would, in all probability, have pursued his gay course till interrupted by death. A gracious God had decreed otherwise; and when overwhelmed with consternation, by means of the contrast which true religion produced in his fellow-voyager, effectually turned his heart.

[Hoby's Memoir of Yates.

LEARNED YANKEE SEA-CAPTAIN.

We have, in this city, says the New York Journal of Commerce, a captain of a ship, that has been trained to the sea from ten years of age until this day, who is not only acquainted with the popular languages of Europe—French, Spanish, German, Danish, and Dutch, with some other minor dialects, but is also a scholar in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. Last winter, 'this inhabitant of the mountain billow' held a public debate, four different evenings, in the city of Rotterdam, in the French and German languages, with a learned (Jew) Professor of Languages, on the divinity of the New Testament, and Jesus Christ the Messiah of God, 'the end of the Law for Righteousness to all that believe.' The Old Testament was read in Greek; while the fidelity of Protestant interpretation was shown from the prophecies in six different languages. The Professor acknowledged to the American captains, 'Your countryman, the captain, is better acquainted with the Old Testament, than any man we ever conversed with; and his knowledge of the Books of Moses, with the customs of our people, is scarcely equalled by any Jew in Rotterdam. Really, there are some things that he is better acquainted with, having seen them practiced on the coast of Africa, by the Jews, which the laws of Holland, indeed of Christian Europe, and our sense of decency, will not permit us to practice.' It was the report among the common Jews, that the captain was a Jew. The captain weekly attends, including English and the Synagogues, the worship of God in five different languages in this city. He says, 'I attend the Synagogue to hear their new German Hebrew Readers, as an American or Englishman cannot read Hebrew with any probable degree of its original pronunciation.' He was asked what induced him to attempt an acquaintance with Greek and Hebrew. He answered, 'When young my mind was seriously impressed with the import and sublimity of the Christian religion, but my knowledge and delight in astronomy made me a skeptic in its reality and divinity, contrary to all the internal evidence that forced itself on my soul, in conviction of sin or joy of redemption. My mind was continually crowded by—'It is impossible that God would take upon himself the likeness of human flesh, to make an atonement for such a contemptible pebble as this, the most inferior of all planets, (except the moon,) when he is the adorable Creator of innumerable worlds of splendor, that excel in glory and magnitude our very sun.' I doubted all interpretations, and external evidence of every kind I dare not venture upon. I was resolved to attempt the Greek. I surmounted its difficulties to my peace and satisfaction. Then I grappled Hebrew as for life or death, until I understood it sufficiently for the removal of all my doubts, and establishment in the fullest confidence and belief in the Divine Mission of him that emphatically claims the appellation of Christ, the Son of God, the Saviour of the world.'

DR. CHALMERS AND HIS DAUGHTER.

The Rev. Dr. Chalmers was, on a certain occasion, invited to address the children of the church in St. John's, Glasgow, on an anniversary occasion. But the mind of the Rev. Dr., so accustomed to lofty periods, and investigations in metaphysics, was but ill calculated to impress the hearts and arouse the attention of the children. The consequence was, they yawned, and gaped, and some of them slept. The Dr. felt that, which all knew, his effort was a decided failure.

The Rev. Dr. Fletcher, of London, styled the prince of preachers for children, was invited to address the children of Glasgow, which address Dr. Chalmers came to hear. Being highly delighted himself, and seeing the children also exceedingly enchanted with the address, Dr. C. stepped into the vestry, and spoke to Dr. F. as follows: "Sir, I am Dr. Chalmers. I have been very much delighted with your interesting discourse, and would be pleased if you could take breakfast with me in the morning." Dr. Fletcher acceded with pleasure to the invitation.

In the morning, after breakfast and family worship, Dr. Chalmers thus addressed Dr. Fletcher: "Sir, it was not an invitation founded on a mere compliment that I gave you last evening, to meet with me this morning; nor was it to enjoy your conversation. I have a daughter who appears still to have no part nor lot with the people of God. If there be any human instrumentality under God which can impress her mind, I believe it must be wielded by yourself. I will call her in; and while you are speaking to her, an agonized father will be speaking to his God."

The result was, her hopeful conversion to the Lord.

PICTURE OF WAR.

To my own knowledge, for example, there dwell and toil in the British village of Dumdrudge, usually some five hundred souls. From these, by certain "Natural Enemies" of the French, there are successively selected, during the French war, say thirty able bodied men. Dumdrudge, at her own expense, has suckled and nursed them; she has, not without difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood, and even trained them to crafts, so that one can weave, another build, another hammer, and the weakest can stand under thirty stone avoirdupois. Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing, they are selected; all dressed in red; and shipped away, at the public charge, some two thousand miles, or say only to the south of Spain; and fed there till wanted. And now to that same spot in the south of Spain, are thirty similar French Artisans, from a French Dumdrudge, in like manner wending, till at length, after infinite effort, the two parties come into actual juxta position: and Thirty stands fronting Thirty, each with a gun in hand. Straightway the word "Fire!" is given; and they blow the souls out of one another; and in place of sixty brisk useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcases which it must bury, and anew shed tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the Devil is, not the slightest! They lived far enough apart; were the entirest strangers; nay, in so wide a Universe, there was even, unconsciously, by Commerce, some mutual helpfulness between them. How then? Simpleton! Their Governors had fallen out; and, instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot. Alas! so it is in Deutschland, and hitherto in all other lands; still, as of old, "what deviltry soever Kings do, the Greek must pay the piper." [Thomas Carlyle.

PROCRASTINATION DANGEROUS.

The late Dr. Clark, of Philadelphia, in one of his sermons, illustrates the absurdity of deferring the work of salvation by the following striking fact. He was present on an occasion when a most solemn appeal was made to the young, to seek God without delay; the preacher, urging as a motive, that, should they live to be old, difficulties would multiply, and their reluctance to attend to the subject would increase with their years. As the preacher descended from the pulpit at the close of the service, an aged man came forward, and extending his hand to him, with much emotion, remarked, "Sir, what you said just now is unquestionably true. I know it from my own experience. When I was young, I said to myself, I cannot give up the world now, but I will by and by, when I have passed the meridan of life, and begun to sink into the vale of years; then I will become a Christian; then I shall be ready to attend to the concerns of my soul. But here I am, an old man. I am not a Christian. I feel no readiness nor disposition to enter upon the work of my salvation. In looking back, I oftentimes feel as though I would give worlds if I could be placed where I was when I was twenty years old. There were not then half as many difficulties in my path as there are now." But though the big tears coursed down his cheek as he gave utterance to these truths, the emotions that were then stirred within him, like the early dew, soon passed away. He did not turn to God.

METHOD.

A lady was complimenting a clergyman on the fact that she could always recollect and recite more of the matter of his sermons than those of any other minister she was in the habit of hearing. She could not account for this; but she thought the fact was worthy of observation. The reverend gentleman remarked that he thought he could explain the cause. "I happen," he said, "to make a particular point of classifying my topics—it is a hobby of mine to do so; and therefore I never compose a sermon without first settling the relationship and order of my arguments and illustrations. Suppose, madam, that your servant was starting for town, and you were obliged hastily to instruct her about a few domestic purchases, not having time to write down the items; and suppose you said, 'Be sure to bring some tea, and also some soap, and coffee too, by the by; and some powder-blue; and don't forget a few light cakes, and a little starch, and some sugar; and, now I think of it, soda'—you would not be surprised if her memory failed with regard to one or two of the articles. But if your commission ran thus: 'Now, Mary, to-morrow we are going to have some friends to tea, therefore bring a supply of tea and coffee, and sugar and light cakes; and the next day, you know, is washing day, so that we shall want soap, and starch, and soda, and powder-blue;' it is most likely she would retain your order as easily as you retain my sermon."

[Smith's Irish Diamonds.

A HAPPY MAN.

A zealous divine, who had prayed earnestly that God would teach him the perfect way of truth, was directed, in a dream, to go to a certain place, where he would find an instructor. When he came to the place he found a man in ordinary attire, to whom he wished a good morning. "I never had a bad morning," replied the man. "That is very singular; I wish you may always be so fortunate." "I was never unfortunate," said he. "I hope you will always be as happy," said the divine. "I am never unhappy," said the other. "I wish," said the divine, "that you would explain yourself a little." "That I will cheerfully do," said he. "I said that I never had a bad morning: for every morning, even if I am pinched with hunger, I praise God. If it rains, or snows, or hails, whether the weather is serene or tempestuous, I am still thankful to God, and therefore I never have a joyless morning. If I am miserable in outward circumstances, and despised, I still praise God. You wish that I might always be fortunate; but I cannot be unfortunate, because nothing befals me but according to the will of God; and I believe that his will is always good, in whatever he does, or permits to be done. You wished me always happy; but I cannot be unhappy, because my will is always resigned to the will of God."

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE.—The American Messenger says: "Only let the people, rich and poor, correspond at reasonable rates, and communications will fly by millions between parents and children, friend and friend, throughout the land: binding society together, fostering kindly feelings, the diffusion of knowledge, and the best interests of morality and religion. It is well known that the system of cheap postage in England was urged upon the public attention by Rowland Hill, with a primary view to the moral and religious interests of the country. We look for farther reductions in this country, with a consequent increase of the blessings enjoyed."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, February 3, 1848.

THE ANTI-SABBATH CONVENTION.

The Call for an Anti-Sabbath Convention, which will be found on our first page to-day, is an important and instructive document. Every careful reader will perceive at once the occasion and design of the movement which it proposes. For a few years past, the self-styled "friends of the Sabbath" in this country, headed by the Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, have made a great noise about the extent to which the first day of the week is desecrated by traveling and pleasure-seeking, and have held numerous conventions to check it. It is notorious, however, that in these conventions every thing deserving the name of discussion has been studiously avoided. If a Seventh-day Baptist happened to be present to raise the question whether the first-day had any claim to be called the Sabbath, he was silenced by a decision from the chair that to discuss such a question was no part of the convention's business. If a person happened to be present who doubted the existence of any Sabbath under the gospel dispensation, he was not only refused a hearing in explanation of his views, but was assured that he was entirely out of his place in attending the convention at all. Thus the friends of free discussion have been gagged, and the leaders of this sabbatic movement, so-called, have had things their own way. Even this would not be so very objectionable, if they would content themselves with simply holding meetings, making speeches, and passing resolutions all on one side. But instead of that, they must needs parade the proceedings of such meetings before the public as expressive of the feelings and opinions of "evangelical" Christians throughout the land—of nearly all, indeed, except the ignorant and vicious, who despise every wholesome restraint. Nor do they stop here; but having obtained what they call an expression of opinion from the pious and influential members of community, they next resort to the civil authorities, and ask for power to enforce this opinion—to compel men to observe the first day of the week by fines and imprisonment. The result is, that in nearly every State of the Union, there are laws to enforce the observance of Sunday. In view of such a state of things, this Anti-Sabbath Convention is proposed; the real design of which, we think, is not so much to do away with the observance of one day in seven, as to abolish those laws which specify a particular day to be observed, and forbid, under pains and penalties, the performance of any secular labor on that day.

To the members of the American Sabbath Union, then, more than to any other body of men, belongs the credit of this anti-Sabbath movement. In their zeal to promote what they no doubt regard as one of the best of objects, they have set in motion causes which are certain to produce what they will probably regard as the worst of effects. It is another illustration of the tendency over-action to produce a reäction—a reäction, often, which leaves things in a far worse condition than they were at first. Whether that will be the result in this case, remains to be seen. For our own part, we do not feel particularly apprehensive, because we desire nothing but truth, and that, we believe, will never suffer from thorough investigation.

The Call sets forth very clearly the issue which the anti-Sabbatarians make. "We maintain (say they) that the seventh-day Sabbath was exclusively Jewish in its origin and design; that no holiness, in any sense, attaches to the first day of the week, more than to any other; and that the attempt to compel the observance of any day as 'THE SABBATH,' especially by penal enactments, is unauthorized by Scripture or reason, and a shameful act of imposture and tyranny." With the last two of these propositions we fully agree, believing that no peculiar holiness attaches to the first day, and that there is no reason for a compulsory observance of any day. But from the first proposition we dissent, denying, without fear of successful contradiction by those who receive the Bible as a true record, that the Sabbath is exclusively Jewish in its origin and design. As to the origin of the Sabbath, we hold, with a great majority of the ablest writers upon the subject, that it was given to Adam in Paradise, while he stood as the representative of the whole race, so that it cannot with any show of propriety be spoken of as a Jewish institution. In regard to the design of the Sabbath, we hold that it was given to commemorate the completion of the work of creation, and so to be a standing monument against atheism and idolatry. If so, there can be no reason whatever in calling its design Jewish, since the Jews have no more interest in the work of creation, and are no more bound to commemorate it, than all the rest of God's creatures. It is true that some of the early Reformers, whose names are now venerated by all Protestants, did represent the Sabbath as a Jewish institution. But in estimating their opinions upon this subject it is necessary to take into account the influences under which they wrote. When they separated from the church of Rome, that church claimed that all of her festival days, including Sunday, were holier than other days, not only in relation to the use made of them, but to a natural and inherent holiness wherewith they thought them to invested. Besides, many hurtful restraints had been imposed upon the consciences of God's people, until Sabbaths were days of punishment rather than of holy pleasure and profit. Seeing the day thus perverted from its real design, and made a means of strengthening the papal power, it is not surprising that they regarded it with suspicion, and finally declared it to be Jewish, and not necessarily binding. Other Reformers there were, equally distinguished, who took entirely a different view. But whatever might have been their opinions, we are at liberty to investigate for ourselves, and have probably as good means of judging as they. Our investigations, as we have before said, satisfy us that there is no ground for this assertion that the Sabbath is peculiarly and exclusively a Jewish institution.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

In a business letter of one of our correspondents, we find two questions, of a somewhat practical character, to which he no doubt desired, even if he did not expect, an answer. And although we do not claim a very great amount of skill in casuistry, we will venture to say a few words upon the subjects to which the questions refer.

The first question is: "If a Seventh-day Baptist joins the Society of 'Odd Fellows,' ought he to be excommunicated unless he will renounce Odd-Fellowship?" We must confess ourselves not sufficiently acquainted with the minutiæ of Odd-Fellowship to express a definite opinion upon this question. What we do know of it, however, is by no means favorable. The principle of secrecy, upon which it is based, is one for which we can see no good reason in an organization professing such enlarged benevolence. It is calculated, no doubt, to excite the curiosity of the young and unthinking; but we are yet to learn, that it is adapted to improve their morals or increase their desire to engage in those unostentatious acts of faith and labors of love which the Gospel requires. Indeed, there is much reason to believe, that its effects are in most cases directly the opposite, inducing a state of feeling quite inconsistent with engaging in such acts and labors. We question whether a church member, while in the exercise of a very high degree of spirituality, could be induced to join a secret association, and pledge himself to keep secrets of the nature of which he can at the time know but very little. But should he, under any misapprehension or untoward influences, be induced to join, we should expect to see one of two results—either that he would, after farther consideration and information, withdraw; or, failing to do this, that he would gradually, and perhaps almost imperceptibly to himself, lose his interest in those duties which are expected of him as a church member, such as attending the prayer meeting and the public assembly, and engaging in efforts to diffuse the knowledge and influence of religion. If the latter should be found to be its effect, his brethren, after taking private labor with him, would have an undoubted right to call him to account before the church, recommend a change of practice, and excommunicate him if he refused. But we question whether it would be wise in a church to adopt a rule excluding all who had become members of secret societies, without reference to the actual effects of such societies in individual cases. Though such a course might possibly be right in itself, we think there is a more excellent way.

Our correspondent's second question runs thus: "Is voting for a slaveholder sufficient ground for excommunicating a brother, if persisted in, not with a view to support slavery, but for other reasons which he considers justifiable?" For our own part, we can scarcely conceive of reasons which we should regard as justifying us in voting for a slaveholder. Nevertheless, this question supposes that a person may see such reasons, independent of supporting slavery. To exclude him from a church, under such circumstances, for voting as supposed, would be to exclude him for an opinion which need not affect his religious character one way or another. Whether it would be advisable to do so, we may safely leave the reader to answer.

REVIVAL.—A letter from Bro. Rowse Babcock, dated Jan. 15, says: "In the town of Amity, [Allegany Co., N. Y.,] we have recently enjoyed a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. The members of the little church in that place have for some time past hung their harps on the willows, and sat in a mournful condition. But recently we put forth an effort for the revival of God's work, holding meetings in the evenings and on Sabbath days, and the Lord has appeared for the deliverance of his people. Last Sabbath eight were added to the church, four by baptism, and four by letter, and it may be expected that others will follow soon. The work is progressing."

NEW ANTI-SLAVERY MOVEMENT.—A paper published at Shelbyville, Ky., says that there is a novel Anti-Slavery movement in Virginia. It seems that in Western Virginia, where there are only comparatively a few slaves, the inhabitants have been for years in favor of gradual emancipation, but have been outvoted by the people of Eastern Virginia, where the proportion of slaves is much larger. They are now advocating a law to permit counties to legislate for themselves in the matter, and thus permit a majority of the people in any one county, to meet at the polls, and declare whether slavery shall be longer permitted therein, or not. This idea finds many advocates, and not in Virginia only, but it has supporters in Georgia, and in other States. It certainly contains a pure democratic principle—the majority should rule!

SABBATH LEGISLATION.

Bro. James Bailey sends us a copy of the Act of the New York Legislature for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists, (which we published last week,) and appends to it the following suggestions:—

It will be seen at once, that this is not the thing we petitioned for, nor should we be satisfied with it. We have asked for equal protection with Sunday observers, and in doing so we asked for what our Constitution guaranties. The great difficulty of securing the passage of a just law, has dictated another course of action. The Central Association, at its last session, recommended the propriety of securing the election of some of our brethren to the Legislature, so that our interests could be fairly represented in that body. Accordingly, John T. G. Bailey, of Brookfield, and Benjamin Maxson, of Hounsfield, have been elected, and are now ready to carry out the wishes of the denomination. We should therefore immediately present our petitions for equal protection. And in the meantime our Members can offer a bill that shall meet our wants, and urge its passage. I submit the following as the substance of the petition we should present.

To the Honorable the Legislature of the State of New York:—

WE, your petitioners, inhabitants of ——— county and vicinity, respectfully petition your honorable body to pass a law that shall protect all persons who observe the seventh day of the week, inthat observance, the same as they are protected who observe the first day as a Sabbath.

The above, or some other form of petition, should be immediately signed and presented. Our cause is just and righteous, and if we do not succeed in it, we at least keep the Sabbath in notice by this constant agitation; and we may cause the Sabbath to be honored, if we are not protected in its observance. J. BAILEY.

DE RUYTER, Jan. 26th, 1848.

THE REVIVAL IN WATERFORD, CT.

WATERFORD, Ct., Jan. 24, 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Thinking it may be gratifying to many of your readers to hear of the prosperity of Zion in this place, I would say, that a few weeks since Bro. A. B. Burdick held a series of evening meetings with us, during which the Lord was pleased to visit us by the special outpouring of his Holy Spirit. Many of the youth have been made to bow to the mild sceptre of Prince Immanuel, and to follow him in the ordinance of baptism, while many that had backslidden in the cause have been led to return to their Father's house, praising God. A few Sabbaths since Bro. Lester T. Rogers, our Pastor, baptized four; the next succeeding Sabbath three, and one has since followed the example of our blessed Lord. These have united with the church in this place, while others have gone to other churches. The work is still progressing; sinners are yet inquiring the way to Zion, not only in this place, but some mercy drops are felt in the vicinity around. Truly, we feel assured that when Zion travails children are born into the kingdom. The members of the church have generally come up to the help of the Lord, and resolved that they will henceforth work faithfully in his vineyard. May the Lord pour out his Holy Spirit upon our churches, until all shall be brought to experience the forgiveness of their sins, and an evidence of their adoption into the family of God. "The harvest truly is great, and the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified in the salvation of souls, until this land shall become Immanuel's land, a place where God shall delight to dwell.

Yours in brotherly love,
L. T. ROGERS, 2d.

CIRCULAR OF THE TRACT SOCIETY.—At the last Anniversary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, the Board of Directors submitted to the consideration of the Society the policy of employing a suitable person to discharge the duties of General Agent. For want of time to consider the plan fully, it was referred back to the Board, to carry into effect if they should deem advisable. The Board have recently issued a Circular, setting forth the plan, and asking for subscriptions for the specific object of carrying it out. It is proposed to employ a man, whose entire business shall be to prepare and superintend the publications of the Society, to visit our brethren and aid in organizing their efforts in tract distribution, to lecture on the Sabbath question, distribute tracts, and, so far as possible, get the volumes which have been published into bookstores throughout the country. It has been feared that to appropriate so much money from the regular receipts of the Society as would be necessary to support such an agency, would not be satisfactory to all its friends; and, to avoid dissatisfaction, the Board propose a special subscription for the purpose, for the period of two years, in sums of not less than five dollars per year. It is hoped that all who receive the circulars will give them early attention. In cases where individuals desire to help the object, and yet do not feel able to give five dollars, let two or more combine for the purpose. But do not let so important an object fail for want of hearty coöperation.

A COLPORTEUR NEARLY FLOGGED.—The Herald of Religious Liberty tells the following anecdote of a colporteur of the American Tract Society, who, a few weeks ago, called upon an old Virginian, and holding up "Nelson on Infidelity," told him it was a most excellent book, and urged upon his attention the high themes of which it speaks. The old man, who was a true shoot from the stock of old Virginian nobility, looked at him some moments with suspicion, taking him to be a Yankee pedler, about to show off some "trick." At length, he replied, "I will take that book, and I will pay you for it, and then I will read it. But, sir, if it is not as good as you say, when you come this way again, depend upon it, I'll flog you." The colporteur sold him the book and went away. Some ten days after, he called again, and asked how he liked Nelson. The old man replied, "Nelson has got hold of the truth. That's such a book as I like. Sir, you are an honest fellow. Make my house your home as long as you please."

THE "SABBATH ALLIANCE."—A Society has recently been organized in Edinburg, Scotland, called the Sabbath Alliance, one of the principal objects of which is to oppose and prevent the running of railway trains and other public conveyances on Sunday. The basis of this Alliance is said to be, "the divine authority and universal and perpetual obligation of the Sabbath, as declared through the Word of God, and more formally enjoined in the fourth commandment of the moral law." What sort of a basis for the observance of the first day of the week can be found in the fourth commandment, is more than we can tell. The first day is not mentioned at all in the commandment, and the natural inference from the language used respecting the seventh day is, that the first ought to be made a common working day.

ROMAN CATHOLICS ACCESSIBLE.—The organ of the American Protestant Society states, that the faithful missionary and colporteur is now cordially received in many families, from which he was formerly driven with violence. The perseverance of the missionary has overcome the obduracy of the papist—or rather, the Spirit of God, given in answer to prayer, has broken the hard heart, awakened conviction, and led those who had been reared in the bondage of sin and error, to the Great Deliverer. At one place, where these cheering scenes have been witnessed, there are five converts—at another, ten—at another, forty have been gathered into a church; and at another, there has been a church gathered of about one hundred members—all converted Romanists. So says the Christian Observe r

LANE SEMINARY.—It appears from a letter in the Boston Traveler, dated Cincinnati, January 3, that the Court in banc, have decided that the suit of David R. Kemper vs. Lane Seminary, is barred by the statute of limitations. The object of the suit was to oust the present Professors of the Institution from their chairs, on the ground of an alledged violation of the charter, 1st, in the failure to exact manual labor from the students, and 2dly, in the appointment of Professors who are not Presbyterians under the care of the General Assembly.

CONVERSION OF A JEW.—A remarkable conversion lately took place near Birmingham. M. Benjamin Marcus, a learned Polish Jew, well versed in Talmudical, Rabbinical, Hebrew, and Chaldee erudition, and who has for some years been lecturing against Christianity and the errors of the Protestant Bible, joined the Catholic church.

ATTEMPT TO ROB A MISSIONARY.—The Macedonian for January gives an account of an assault on Mr. Stilson by robbers. After returning from worship on the 13th September, he stepped from his bedroom to close the doors, and on entering the dining-room found three men in Talein costume, but without firearms. One of them handed him a paper. Having no suspicion of danger, he read it, when two others advanced to his side with knives in their hands. The idea then flashed across his mind that they were robbers. They demanded his money. He made a grasp at the knife in the hand of one, and obtained it. All then fell upon him, and in the scuffle regained the weapon, which was unsheathed—Mr. S. in the meantime calling for assistance. He succeeded at last in getting them off the verandah, and partly down stairs, when they turned upon him with their knives. He retreated, and in closing the door he felt a slight consciousness that he was wounded, and called from a window for assistance, whereupon the robbers retreated. One of his servants, on coming to his assistance, was seized and bound fast to a post. About half-past 9, the natives who heard his cry, and some of his associates, collected in numbers at the house; and Dr. Morton and Mr. Good proceeded to dress his wounds. It was found that the first finger of the right hand was nearly cut off near the first joint; the hand cut through and laid open to the centre of the palm; another long severe wound was found on the right arm, reaching to the bone; the left cheek was laid open, and one or two teeth broken, and several lesser wounds were found on the head and body. One on the back, a mere scratch, from the shoulders to the loins, might have been fatal in its consequences had the ruffian been a little nearer. The wounds were inflicted by a curved deadly knife, commonly worn in a sheath. Steps have been taken for the arrest of the villains. Mrs. Stilson writes under date of 27th September, that his wounds are healing fast. Mr. S. is the treasurer of the Maulmain mission, which probably led to the assault.

☞ The following article is copied from the New-England Puritan, one of the leading "orthodox" papers issued from Boston. We commend it to the serious attention of those who think the descendants of the Puritans are all opposed to a union of Church and State. One of our exchanges, in publishing the article, says: "This call for more severe penal legislation in regard to what is falsely called the Sabbath day, is utterly at war with the rights of conscience, which equally pertain to all the people."

LAWS AGAINST RAILROAD SABBATH-BREAKING.

Railroads are changing the whole course of business, and are bringing before us some new questions, not only as to business matters, but as to morals and religion. One of the most important of these is, 'May railroad companies run their engines on the Sabbath, and otherwise desecrate the day.'

This question is exceedingly important. Railroads are continually multiplying; they are exerting an incalculable influence on society; that influence is continually coming nearer to every dwelling, and with increasing strength. If it be given up that railroad companies may break the Sabbath, then the Sabbath will be broken to an enormous extent, on a gigantic scale, and with a predominating influence such as must, sooner or later, blot the Sabbath out of being.

There is considerable reason to fear that it will become customary for railroad companies to break the Sabbath. They set up the claim that they may do so already. They are corporations in which, through false notions of morality, individual responsibility is lightly felt. Their peculiar character, as the only outlets of business, brings such a pressure on them as to make a strong temptation, and, in the view of many, an actual necessity to violate the Sabbath. Under this pressure, the merchandize trains began to be run a few weeks ago on the Western Railroads, though I am informed they are now stopped.

This question must be settled speedily. It is a new question, such as no generation ever had to settle before. If Sabbath breaking on railroads be not vigilantly watched and opposed, it will, in the natural course of things, soon be the settled custom. The perpetual increase of business will be perpetually increasing the tendency to this result. It is a matter of so great and so pressing importance as to demand the whole body of Sabbath-keepers to rise in their might, and declare that God's day shall not be desecrated on such a scale throughout the State.

I ask if the laws of the commonwealth are what they ought to be on this subject? The laws respecting traveling on the Sabbath were made with no reference to this new mode of traveling, and seem to be quite inadequate to reach the case. Why should not the legislature pass a law bearing on this very subject, forbidding, under heavy penalties, railroad companies to transport either passengers or merchandize on the Sabbath? Why, in granting new charters, should not a clause be inserted, forbidding the running of cars on the Sabbath, under penalty of forfeiting corporate rights.

It seems to me that the community generally are not awake to the tremendous consequences which must follow, if the manifest tendency to this kind of Sabbath-breaking be not stopped. It were better a railroad never were within a thousand miles of Massachusetts, than that the State be filled with them, and by them with Sabbath-breaking.

I inquire if it would not be wise to bring the subject before the Legislature at the next session by petition, signed by the lovers of the Sabbath throughout the State. It would do good to turn the attention of the community to the question whether the Legislature is not bound to furnish to the peaceable lovers of the Sabbath new protection adequate to our new wants. The expression of sentiment would do good. And the discussion before the Legislature would do good, even if it were not deemed best that any new law should be passed. And if such a law should be passed, it would do more good than all. INQUIRER.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for January, re-published by Leonard Scott & Co., is received. The following is its table of contents: "Twenty Years of Liberal Legislation," "Something like a Country-house," "Evenings at Sea," "Fletcher's Chronicle of Clermont Assizes," "Don John of Austria," "A Night's Peril," "Switzerland and Italy," "The Periodical Literature of America," "Ireland and the Ministerial Measures."

Messrs. Scott & Co. announce, in the present number, that they have made arrangements with Messrs. Blackwood & Son, of Edinburgh, by which they are to be furnished with early sheets of the Magazine in advance of its regular issue abroad, so that the numbers, commencing with March next, will be placed in the hands of their subscribers at so early a day as to give them the reading of all the articles before they can possibly be published in this country in any other form. This will certainly add to the value of the reprint, and we doubt not will increase the number of its subscribers.

RUMORS OF PEACE with Mexico, have been plenty enough for a week past, but it is not easy to say exactly what may be relied upon. It is probable, however, that the outlines of a treaty, corresponding with the propositions originally made by Mr. Trist to the Mexican Commissioners, have been agreed upon, and forwarded to Washington for approval. The general opinion is that Congress will vote no more men or money to prosecute the war, until these peace propositions are presented; and that the propositions will be acceded to if they are what is represented.

ROBERT MERRY'S MUSEUM.—We have received the January and February numbers of this standard work for youth, and find them filled with good selections and illustrations. Edited by S. G. Goodrich, author of Peter Parley's Tales; published by G. W. & S. O. Post, No. 5 Beekman-st., New York.

ZION'S ADVOCATE, the Baptist paper published at Portland, Me., comes to us in a new dress, an enlarged form, and otherwise greatly improved.

General Intelligence.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Senate.

The Ten Regiment Bill occupied a large portion of the time of the Senate last week, and many speeches for and against the war were made. The principal items of business besides are enumerated below, without regard to dates:

Mr. Underwood presented a memorial from the Board of Managers of the Female Missionary Society, praying that lands west of the Rocky Mountains may be set apart for the Indians.

Mr. Dickinson presented a memorial from the citizens of New York on the subject of the potatoe rot, the injury likely to result therefrom, and in favor of an inquiry as to the most effectual remedy.

Mr. Dix presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of New York relative to the law fixing the rate of postage on Newspapers, the prepayment thereof, and praying for the repeal of the same.

Mr. Bagby of Alabama submitted a resolution, declaring that Congress has no power over the subject of Slavery, and that the conquest of a country is legitimate means of acquisition, and that if Mexican territory be obtained by treaty or conquest, neither Congress or a Convention can interfere with Slavery.

Mr. Jefferson Davis reported a bill, which was passed, appropriating $100,000 for the erection of a Hospital and other quarters, on public grounds, near the barracks at New Orleans, for the accommodation of troops going to and returning from Mexico.

Mr. Berrian presented a petition, praying the appointment of a tribunal for settling international disputes

Mr. Dickinson presented the petition of citizens of New York, for a reduction in the rates of postage.

The House bill, making farther provision for the surviving widows and soldiers of the Revolution, was read a third time and passed.

On Thursday, before taking up the Ten Regiment Bill, Mr. Crittenden wished the Chairman on Military Affairs to answer the following questions: First, whether Gen. Scott had been recalled or suspended; secondly, whether Gen. Worth had been relieved from arrest, or remained suspended. Gen. Cass replied, that General Scott had been suspended, and that the command of the army now devolved on Gen. Butler. He said that Gen. Scott will attend a Court of Inquiry at Perote, when all difficulty with higher officers would be investigated. He believed that Gen. Worth had been released from arrest.

House of Representatives.

The House spent nearly the whole week in considering the President's Annual Message.

Mr. Dunn, from Committee on Claims, reported a bill making provision for the widows and children of soldiers who died or may hereafter die in actual service, or after a discharge given and made in consequence of wounds or disease contracted in active service.

Mr. Holmes of New York presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York relative to the Post-Office laws. Referred, and ordered to be printed.

* * *

Death from Hydrophobia.—The Philadelphia Ledger says that John Craymer, residing with his mother in Spruce-st., expired on Monday, Jan. 24, from an attack of hydrophobia. The symptoms of the disease were first perceived on the Saturday previous, but they were very slight, consisting only of slight twitches in the arms, and pains extending to the shoulder, which did not continue for any time. On Sunday, however, he became delirious, with some lucid intervals, but finally became raving, howling, and biting like a dog, and refusing any liquid that was offered, though he had previously desired it. He continued getting worse, and expired after enduring the greatest torments. The boy had been bitten in the hand about nine weeks previously. His mother took him to the Pennsylvania Hospital, where the wound was dressed, but not knowing that the animal was mad, no precautions were taken to prevent hydrophobia. The mother gives a pathetic description of the conduct of the unfortunate lad during the lucid intervals that occurred between the paroxysms of his awful disease. He was conscious of the way in which he was affected, and he would beg her not to let him bite any one; he expressed his sorrow for the trouble he was giving her, but said the dog that bit him was the cause of it all.

* * *

A Young Lady in Disguise.—The Charleston Patriot mentions a circumstance which is related in a letter from Key West, that may be classed among the romantic. A short time since, a vessel bound to Mexico ran ashore on the reef. Among the crew was a beautiful young lady, disguised as a boy. The crew supposing her to be what her garments represented her, she was required to take her regular spell at the pumps. She revealed her situation and sex to the captain, who of course relieved her at once from a position so unsuitable to the previous habits of her life. She is of a very respectable family at the North, and had an attachment for one who had gone forth to fight his country's battles in Mexico. Hearing that her lover had been wounded, she had assumed a boy's attire, and eloped from the paternal roof, for the purpose of joining her sweetheart, and nursing him on his bed of sickness and pain. She has been treated with great kindness by the hospitable people of Key West, and is to be sent home, doubtless much against her own inclinations.

* * *

Equal Rights.—A bill has just been passed by the Ohio Legislature, which exempts from attachment, one horse, harness, and dray of every drayman in the State. The mover of the measure said he introduced it "because a 'pill pedlar' of his county, whose horse and medicines were exempt from attachment, had 'doctored' one of his drayman constituents, and levied on his horse and dray, and sold them to pay his bill. The doctor, himself, at the same time was 'over head and ears' in debt, and his horse and medicines could not be reached by his creditors."

* * *

There are in the City of New-York, two thousand nine hundred and nineteen retail liquor stores.

To China by Steam.—Among the proposals to be brought before the present Congress, is one in relation to steam communication from the Pacific coast to China, in which all must feel a deep interest. Should the proposition be favorably received, the day may soon come when a voyage to China will be comparatively short and easy. The correspondent of the United States Gazette, writing from Washington, speaks of the matter thus:—

"It will be proposed to construct a line of steamers from a point on the Pacific—San Francisco, if obtained, or Puget's Sound, to Shanghai, in China. This will constitute but a continuation of the chain now under contract, from Havana to Oregon by way of Chagres and Panama. It has been ascertained by an examination of the circle route, that this Line of communication to Oregon, touching at San Francisco, actually carries us 3000 miles on the way to China, and so much gained and established. In this view, San Francisco would be the starting point and depot of the China steamers.

"If Congress, therefore, should adopt the suggestion, there would be an unbroken line of steam communication, with the exception of the thirty six miles across the Isthmus to Panama, from New-York to China and to Oregon. The effect of this policy would be, to throw into our hands the transportation of the whole correspondence of the British commerce in China, Japan, and the adjoining countries. The expedition of the route would necessarily command it, as well as an important trade besides."

SUMMARY.

By the schr. Mary Ellen, Capt. Schriver, from the port of St. Domingo, whence she sailed on the 31st of Dec., news was received that an incipient insurrection had been discovered, headed by the Prime Minister, designed to destroy all the whites in that part of the Island. The Prime Minister, the General-in-Chief, and two other officers, had been shot a few days previous to the sailing of the Mary Ellen. Thirty others of the conspirators were confined in the Castle, who, it was supposed, would also be shot in the course of the next week. The authorities were expecting an attack from the Haytiens.

George J. Crofut, of Trumbull, Ct., was frozen to death on Tuesday night. He and two others went over to Milford Beach, in a boat, for oysters. Returning, they grounded, and lay until the tide rose. The other two plied their oars and kept up other exercises. Crofut, whose clothes were wet, folded himself in his overcoat, and lay down in the boat. On trying to rouse him, his companions found that life was nearly extinct, and though taken on shore and friction freely used, he died in the course of an hour. He was a member of the Temperance Society, and aged thirty-seven years.

A young man named Overley, residing in East Berlin, York county, Pa., put an end to his life, on the 2d inst. by hanging himself. He has left a wife and four small children. On the following day, which was the day of the deceased's funeral, his father left the house temporarily, and being absent rather a long time, search was immediately made; and he was found in one of the out-buildings in the act of committing the same rash deed. Timely prevention, however, saved his life.

Polly Moper, the "oldest inhabitant" of the Germantown Almshouse, has deceased. She was in her one hundredth year when she died. She had been an inmate of the Alms-house for about twelve years, and had always enjoyed excellent health. On the day of her departure, she ate a hearty dinner. The record of her age was in an old Dutch Bible which she kept by her, and studied regularly up to the time of her departure to a better world.

Broken Bank Money is rather abundant in these days, there having been six failures within a few weeks past. Thompson's Bank Note Reporter gives the following as the probable value of bills on these banks: Bills on the James Bank are worth from 70 to 75 cents on the dollar; Atlas Bank, 70 to 80 cents; Northern Exchange Bank, Bank of Cayuga Lake, and State Bank at Saugerties, 90 to 95 cents; Susquehanna County Bank (Pa.,) 50 cents; Delaware Bridge, 40 cents.

Among several inquests held by the Coroner of Philadelphia, was one upon a colored woman named Mary Brown, occupying a miserable room in a small court in the neighborhood of Eighth and Shippen sts., who died of neglect and starvation. A column might be written upon such a case as this, but its simple announcement is its best comment.

Mr. Treadwell has introduced a bill in the Senate of New York, to prohibit any Judge of the State taking proceedings under the law of Congress for the reclamation of fugitive slaves, and providing that no other than United States officers shall arrest any such fugitive, under penalty of $500, and imprisonment for 12 months.

C. Wallace Cook, Esq., of Philadelphia, who died in that city a few days ago, has left an estate valued at $100,000, which, at the death of certain annuitants, is to be divided between the Pennsylvania Hospital and the Pennslyvania Institution for the Instruction of the Blind.

The steamer Yallabusha, from the Red River, with a heavy cargo of Cotton, bound for New Orleans, was entirely destroyed by fire on the 18th ult., and forty persons are supposed to have perished with her, either by fire or drowning.

A gentleman, while engaged in paying postage, at the general postoffice delivery in this city, had his pocket cut, and his pocket-book extracted, containing $2,375. The pocket-book was large, and placed in an inner breast pocket, where it was of course prominent. An ample slit was cut from the outside at the bottom of the pocket through which the book was extracted.

Messrs. Hatch & Gray, of the New Bedford Express, as we learn from the Boston Traveler, state that the wrecked sloop Portugal, sunk in New Bedford Harbor, is to be raised for the purpose of recovering the Nantucket Mail, which was on board at the time of the disaster.

Hartford citizens have just made an annual donation to the American Tract Society of $2,300.

The Journal of Commerce, of this city, gives an account of a most dangerous counterfeit of gold eagles—so accurate as to defy any other test than severing the piece. They are accurate in weight, perfect in stamp, and seem to have gotten into banks extensively, and even to have defied the usual scrutiny of the mint. Upon one of them being sawn in two, it was discovered to be a mere shell of gold, the interior being filled with silver. The gold was worth $1 25, leaving a good profit to the maker.

A sheep which disappeared from its home in Salem County, N. J., Christmas day, was found, incidentally, wedged in a hollow log—alive, after 27 days confinement! The Standard supposes that it had worked its way into the log to secure a shelter from the snow, until its forward progress was checked, and not understanding the science of "backing out," remained a close prisoner as above stated.

We learn from the Hagerstown, Md., papers, that a young man named Barney O'Donnell, was committed to Washington county jail, on Friday last, for shooting a negro in Hancock, on New-Year's Eve, in the leg, from the effects of which he has since died. O'Donnell and others were engaged in the foolish custom of shooting out the old year.

The editor of the New York Mirror writes from Washington, that "the venerable John Quincy Adams, in private conversation this evening, (Jan. 10,) expressed himself in favor of subjugating and annexing the whole of Mexico, under the Wilmot Proviso. He thinks it will be the great step towards emancipation."

Mr. Peter Hubbel, of Charleston, Mass., manufactures yearly from fifteen to twenty millions of bricks for the Boston Market. He has thirty machines in operation for moulding, and with each machine makes from ten to twelve thousand bricks per day. This is said to be the largest brick-yard in the world.

A gentleman in New Orleans, it is said, has in his possession a manuscript copy of an old Roman missal, written in Latin on vellum, by a monk, about the year A. D. 300. The book is, consequently, 1,547 years old at least.

The remains of George Walton and Lyman Hall, two of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, are to be removed to Augusta, Ga., for interment. A lead monument is to be erected over them, for which the Legislature has appropriated $1,500.

The statute law of England has made profane swearing a fineable offence, to the amount of one shilling for the first, two shillings for the second class, and five shillings for gentlemen.

On Christmas day, at Red Sulphur Springs, Va., a negro boy was shot dead by the explosion of a log which he had been boring, in order to blast. A hollow peg, which he had inserted, penetrated his skull.

A resolution was passed, by a vote of 108 to 4, in the New York Legislature, that Congress ought to legislate to prevent the introduction of slavery into any territory to be acquired by the United States.

A well-authenticated case of Asiatic Cholera, has occurred at Fountaine-sur-Somme, in France. The influenza, by the last accounts, had materially abated in Paris, as well as in London. The Gazette des Hospiteaux, however, remarks, that latterly, in place of colds, coughs, &c., it frequently runs into cholics, diarrhœa, and, rarely, vomitings. From this tendency, the editor thinks it may be the avant courier of Cholera.

The salvage allowed to the Pawtucket Steamboat Co., for the rescue of the Louis Philippe from the Nantucket shoals, is $21,000 for the use of the boats, and $5,000 for the men who went in them.

Iowa, 14 years ago, was the habitation of its original Indian tribes only. It now has a population of thousands, and supports 16 newspapers, of which six are Democrats, seven Whigs, one Neutral, one Religious, and one Agricultural.

In France, Archbishops receive stipends of only 15,000 francs, and Bishops of only 10,000 francs, but the Archbishop of Paris has 40,000 francs, on account of the importance of his see, and Cardinals have 10,000 francs more than other prelates.

Mustang says that near Mexico ducks are killed by a gun-barrel battery,—being first lured to the proper spot by food of which they are fond. At one discharge 1000 are frequently killed.

The Collector of Barnstable, Mass., has paid out to owners and crews of vessels engaged in Cod Fishing in the District of Barnstable, during the past season, the sum of $28,418 12.

A difficulty is said to have occurred at the Alabama State University, which has resulted in the suspension of some forty or more of the students.

The New York City Temperance Society, an organization on Christian principles, has issued a circular, calling for simultaneous Temperance meetings throughout the United States on the 22d of February.

In 1716, Mr. Hugh Middleton, a citizen and goldsmith, having obtained a patent, he brought water by means of pipes into all the streets of London.

The Jesuit Cathedral and Academy in Elizabeth St., this City, was destroyed by fire last Sunday morning, Jan. 23.

Prof. Malder of Dorpat, is of opinion that the comet of 1264, may be looked for during this month and February.

In consequence of the destruction of houses and other buildings caused by the late floods, there is an immense demand for laborers in Ohio.

William Buffum was instantly killed by the bursting of a grindstone at the Scythe Factory at Nasonville, in Rhode Island, on Wednesday morning.

Dr. A. Comstock has just published a new Phonetic Testament. It is an octavo of 397 pages—is handsomely printed and bound, and is a work of great ingenuity.

Earthenware is glazed with lead, acids dissolve it, and is therefore dangerous to be used for domestic purposes.

Pickles and vinegar should never be kept in earthenware dishes. Stoneware or wood vessels are best.

There is a difficulty between the Faculty and students of Miami University. The Cincinnati Atlas says that the difficulty originated from the students, or a portion of them, "barring out" the faculty, because the latter refused to grant them some slight indulgence, which they petitioned for, and accompanied the rejection of the petition with some remarks considered highly offensive. At successive meetings and consultations of the Faculty, occupying portions of two or three days, between forty and fifty of the students were either suspended or dismissed, and a meeting of the trustees called.

Advices from Cape Town to the 27th of November, say that the Kaffir war still continued. The intelligence from the frontier is of a distressing character. Five British officers went from the camp to ascend the mountain, which gave a fine view of the country; not returning, search was made; they were found dead, stripped, and barbarously mutilated. Col. Somerset was ordered out with a large body of men to scour the country; he fell in with the Kaffirs, and the results of the engagement were 21 Kaffirs killed, and upward of 300 head of cattle and several guns taken.

Mr. Russell, on the 22d inst., reported in the House of Representatives of Ohio a preamble and resolutions condemning the Mexican War, and the waste of human life and squandering of national treasure, that might be beneficially applied to great public uses for the promotion of the public welfare. The first two resolutions were adopted, and the whole subject referred to a select committee.

The Montrose Democrat says that the Susquehanna County Bank is not broken, as reported, but that it continues to redeem all its issues as fast as presented at its counter. During a few days of the run made upon it, that paper says the Bank redeemed nearly three-fourths of its entire circulation. The notes are now bought and sold by the brokers of Philadelphia at about sixty cents on the dollar.

Fires in chimneys in France have recently been prevented by placing three frames of wire-work one foot above each other, near the base of the chimney; no flame will pass them.

A rich mine of plumbago—black lead—has been opened in Jeffrey, N. H., at the foot of the Monadnock mountain. It brings about $75 per ton. The mine was purchased for the sum of fifty dollars.

George R. Perkins, Esq., late Professor of Mathematics in the State Normal School, at Albany, has been appointed Principal of that Institution, vice Mr. Page, deceased.

On all new railways in England, and on the continent, felt, one-eighth of an inch in thickness, is placed beneath the rails, which causes much less noise and jar from rails and loose windows.

Mr. E. B. White, of New Hampshire, has invented a new cannon, which has six bores and six vent holes, so that it can be fired that number of times, without once stopping to load.

It is said that Gen. Valencia's costume and personal ornaments, at the battle of Contreras, were worth $20,000; while the dress of Gen. Smith, who defeated him, would be extravagantly estimated at $15!

The brig C. Street arrived at New Orleans from Havana, January 14th. A great fire broke out in Havana on the night of the 13th inst., consuming several warehouses. Damages upward of fifty thousand dollars.

A soldier in company K. 9th regiment, writes to his home in Gurdner, Me., that his company had 72 men when it left Newport for Mexico, and at the time of writing but 24 were left, fit for duty—the remainder were sick or dead.

During the late famine in Ireland, 115,929 persons died of starvation! It has been said in Parliament that 2,000,000 of Irish will need relief this winter.

General Taylor has been nominated for President by both Houses of the Tennessee Legislature.

Review of New York Market.

MONDAY, JAN 31.

ASHES—Pots $5 87 a 6 00. Pearls 7 00.——FLOUR AND MEAL—Genesee Flour 6 12; Ohio, Michigan, and Oswego, 6 00 a 6 [illegible]. Jersey Meal 3 18. Rye Flour 4 37. ——GRAIN—Genese[illegible]heat 1 35. Corn 60 a 67c. Rye 90c. Oats 47 a 50c.——PROVISIONS—New Prime Pork 8 00; Mess 11 50.—Prime Beef 5 50; Mess 8 50. Butter, inferior 11 a 12c.; State 14 a 23c. Cheese 5½ a 7c.

MARRIED,

In Lima, Rock Co., W. T., Dec. 25th, by Eld. Z. Campbell, Mr. John W. Stillman and Miss Clarissa I Main.

In Milton, W. T., Dec. 30th, by the same, Mr. Orlenzo Allen and Miss Esther A. Coon, all of the above place.

In Scio, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1847, by Eld. Rowse Babcock, Mr. Asa Burdick, formerly of DeRuyter, Madison Co., and Miss Huldah Witter, of Scio, Allegany Co.

DIED,

In Brooklyn, L. I., on the 27th ult., Mrs. Luanna Sperry, aged 63 years.

At Berlin, N. Y., on the 24th of November, 1847, Mr. David Crandall, in the 51st year of his age.

LETTERS.

Rowse Babcock, E. D. Randolph, E. Harris, Geo. Crandall, G. R. Scriven, Jas. Bailey, Z. Campbell, R. W. Utter, John Whitford, D. H. Gibson, H. H Baker (yes,) L T. Rogers, 2d, (not credited on our book,) Gurdon Evans (have sent the package,) P. C. Burdick, (the notice must have been overlooked,) Jeptha F. Randolph (right—will send immediately.)

RECEIPTS.

A. F. Randolph, Wirt,	$2 50	pays to vol. 3	No. 40
Brayton Babcock, Friendship,	2 00	" 3	" 52
G. R Scriven, Schenectady,	1 00	" 5	" 5
Thomas Ashley, New York,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Daniel P. Hull, Berlin,	4 00	" 4	" 52
Daniel Maxson, Petersburg,	2 00	" 4	" 52
Clarke Witter, Wellsville,	2 00	" 3	" 52
C. Stillman, Gen. Valley,	2 50	" 3	" 26
Rowse Babcock, Scio,	50	" 4	" 26
E Johnson, Lippitt, R. I.	2 00	" 5	" 26
W. Whitford, "	2 00	" 5	" 26
Z. Campbell, Milton, W. T.	2 00	" 4	" 52
S. V. Carpenter, Albion, W. T.	2 00	" 5	" 19
S. P. Burdick, "	1 75	" 4	" 46
Adin Burdick, "	25	" 4	" 7
E. Harris, Vernon, Vt.	2 00	" 5	" 18
J. F. Randolph, N. Milton, Va.	50	" 4	" 52
Amaziah Bee, "	50	" 4	" 52

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

The Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held in New York, on the evening of second-day, Feb. 7, at 7 o'clock. It is hoped that there will be a full attendance of the members of the Board, and that those having business to present will make the same known to the Corresponding Secretary, Thomas B. Brown, previous to the meeting.

GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books, will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to Geo. B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

VALUABLE REPUBLICATION!

CARLOW'S DEFENSE OF THE SABBATH

THE AMERICAN SABBATH TRACT SOCIETY have just issued a new and revised edition of George Carlow's pungent and heart-searching Defense of the Lord's Sabbath. This work, originally published in London in 1724, probably surpasses, in the scope of the argument and the clear elucidation of the subject, any other work of its size extant. Its original and somewhat antiquated phraseology, has been much improved, and the work somewhat abridged by the omission of occasional repetitions. The Society ask for it a general circulation. It is published in mailable covers at 15c., or fine muslin gilt back and side 30c., or full gilt 56c. Orders, addressed to the General Agent, Paul Stillman New York, will be promptly attended to.

U. S. SCHOOL AGENCY.

CLINTON HALL, NO. 5 BEEKMAN-ST., NEW YORK.

Established for the accommodation of Schools, Academies, Colleges, &c. First class Teachers in every department furnished on reasonable terms. Letters of application from teachers and employers will be answered by a circular, giving references and full particulars. Books, Maps, Stationery, &c., furnished to order on the lowest terms. The Teachers' Advocate, $1, in advance. Letters must be post-paid.

26tf. E. H. WILCOX, Proprietor.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

JAS R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Principal of Teachers' Department.
CAROLINE E. WILCOX, Preceptress.
AMELIA R. CLARKE, Teacher of Instrumental Music,

Other experienced Teachers are employed the various Departments.

The Academic Year for 1847–8 will be divided into three terms, of fourteen weeks each:

First	commencing	Wednesday, Aug. 25,	and ending	Dec. 1
Second	"	" Dec. 15,	"	March 22
Third	"	" April 5,	"	July 12

Tuition, per term of fourteen weeks, from	$3 00 to $5 00
Extras—for Drawing	1 00
" Painting	2 00
" Piano Music	8 00
" Use of Instrument	2 00
Room-rent, including necessary furniture,	1 75

Cook-stoves are furnished for those wishing to board themselves. Board can be had in private families at $1 25 to $1 50.

Every member of the school will be exercised in composition, and in reading or speaking select pieces.

In respect to government, the experience and observation of the Faculty have convinced them, that while they hold the reins firmly in their own hands, the object is best secured by teaching their pupils to govern themselves, and thereby calling into exercise the higher and nobler faculties of their nature, and promoting the refining and restraining elements of social influence.

The friends of the Institution have met with a success surpassing their most sanguine expectations, and hope by a laudable effort of all interested in its welfare. to make it a flourishing and respectable school. Correspondence may be addressed to the Principals, or to Ira Spencer, of DeRuyter Lucius Crandall, of Plainfield, N. J., Agents.

IMPORTANT WORK!

Forty Thousand Copies sold in England.

CHAMBERS' CYCLOPÆDIA OF ENGLISH LITERATURE.

A Selection of the choicest productions of English Authors, from the earliest to the present time, connected by a Critical and Biographical History, edited by Robert Chambers, assisted by Robert Carruthers, and other eminent gentlemen. Complete in two imperial octavo volumes, of more than fourteen hundred pages of double column letter-press: and upwards of three hundred elegant illustrations. Price $5 00

The Cyclopædia of English Literature now presented to the American public, originated in a desire to supply the great body of people with a fund of reading derived from the productions of the most talented and most elegant writers in the English language. It is hoped hereby to supplant, in a measure, the frivolous and corrupting productions with which the community is flooded, and to substitute for them the pith and marrow of substantial English literature; something that shall prove food for the intellect, shall cultivate the taste, and stimulate the moral sense.

The design has been admirably executed, by the selection and concentration of the most exquisite productions of English intellect from the earliest Anglo-Saxon writers down to those of the present day. The series of authors commences with Langland and Chaucer, and is continuous down to our day. We have had specimens of their best writings headed in the several departments, by Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton —by More, Bacon, Locke—by Hooker, Taylor, Barrow—by Addison, Johnson, Goldsmith—by Hume, Robertson, Gibbon—set in a biographical and critical history of the Literature itself. The whole is embellished with splendid wood engravings, of the heads of the principal authors, and of interesting events connected with their history and writings. No one can give a glance at the work without being struck with its beauty and cheapness. It is in fact A WHOLE ENGLISH LIBRARY FUSED DOWN INTO ONE CHEAP BOOK.

The editor, Robert Chambers, is distinguished as the author of several historical works connected with Scotland, and as joint editor of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

As an evidence of the great popularity of the work in England, it may be stated that more than forty thousand copies have been sold in less than three years; and this almost without advertising or being indebted to any notice from literary Reviews.

In addition to the great number of pictorial illustrations in the English edition, the American publishers have greatly enriched the work by the addition of fine steel and mezzotint engravings of the heads of Shakspeare, Addison, Byron, a full length portrait of Dr. Johnson, and a beautiful scenic representation of Oliver Goldsmith and Dr. Johnson.

These important additions to the American edition, together with a better paper and binding than the English, must give this a decided preference with the American reader.

GOULD, KENDALL & LINCOLN, Publishers, Boston.

LOCAL AGENTS FOR THE RECORDER.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" James H. Cochran.
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—And'w Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
Darien—Ethan Saunders.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—J. A. Potter.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—JP Livermore.
Leonardsville—W B. Maxson.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall.
Portville—Albert B Crandall.
Preston—Clark Rogers.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Richburgh—T. E. Babcock.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.

CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Br.—Geo. Greenman.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Westerly—S. P. Stillman.
Hopkinton—Daniel Coon,
" S. S. Griswold,
" A. B. Burdick.
Newport—E. D. Barker.

NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillet.
Plainfield—E. B. Titsworth
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Salem —David Clawson.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H Hydorn

VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jon. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jep. F. Randolph.

OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. Babcock.
Port Jefferson—L. A. Davis.

MICHIGAN.
Oporto—Job Tyler.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.

WISKONSAN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.

Miscellaneous.

BY THE SEA-SIDE.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

The twilight is sad and cloudy,
The wind blows wild and free,
And like the wings of sea birds,
Flash the white-caps of the sea.

But in the Fisherman's cottage,
There shines a ruddier light,
And a little face at the window,
Peers out into the night.

Close, close it is pressed to the window,
As if those childish eyes
Were looking into the darkness,
To see some shape arise.

And a woman's waving shadow
Is passing to and fro,
Now rising to the ceiling,
Now bowing and bending low.

What tales does the roaring ocean,
And the night wind, bleak and wild,
As it beats at the crazy casement,
Tell to the little child?

And why do the roaring ocean,
And the night wind, wild and bleak,
As they beat at the heart of the mother,
Drive the color from her cheek?

THE CAPTURE OF A SHARK.

The broad sea was not without numerous incidents, external as regarded the ocean, and internal as regarded those who were confined in the ship. To an active mind, every day conveys an instructive lesson. Every thing is full of wonder, and man scarcely finds his life long enough to survey even the natural wonders of the deep. The fishes of the sea became objects of interest; the flying fish pursued by dolphins, and actually springing, in their aerial bounds, upon the deck of the vessel; the barnacles which clove to the side of the ship, and seemed to breed so fast as to impede her progress. But of all things of interest to a soldier as well as a sailor, the capture of a shark is not forgotten. In passing down the coast of South America, several of these monsters of the deep were seen sporting along the ocean, and now and then showing their single fins above the wave, as well as their long arched tails, whenever a piece of pork or offal was thrown overboard.

Of the astonishing rapacity of this creature, every nautical writer has given some account. The wonder is, how the shoals of them, which are known to be so numerous around some of the islands, both on the African and American shores, are supplied. They appear always hungry, and will fight for any thing which is thrown overboard. Woe to the unfortunate boatmen who get capsized within their sight; few can hope to escape. In one of the morning parades, the soldiers of the 48th were indulged with a sight not uncommon to any vessel upon such a voyage—the taking of a shark, and a monster he was. A strong line, with a few yards of chain and a hook attached to it, was thrown out to a formidable fellow who had been seen for days following in the wake of the ship. All eyes were directed to the line, bated with a huge piece of pork, which, as the ship dashed through the sea, had no time to sink, but was dragged along the surface of the waves. Now and then it might be seen glittering on the azure curve, and presently springing with a jerk through the crown of the spray, whilst two hundred men stood looking anxiously for the shark to seize the bait.

At length a man called out from aloft, "The biter is coming!"

He could see from his height directly down upon the surface of the ocean. By-and-bye, the tail of the brute was seen dashing over the top of a wave.

"Does he look like playing, Jem?" said an old sailor to his messmate aloft: "or is he lazy, or rather fine in the nose this morning?"

"I can scarcely tell you yet. He is too far off the bait. I think he smells it. He comes dashing on at a good pace."

"Does he ride fleet, Jem, on the waters, or do you think he dives, and comes up again from below?"

"He does not go down at all. I can almost trace his back as he comes along, and, to my mind, he's as long as our bowsprit, and as big as the great boat. He is quite on the top of the sea."

"Then we shall have a nibble presently, look sharp to your tackle, my boys!"

"Here he comes, Tom," said the fellow aloft; and every soldier stood on tiptoe.

"Draw the line in, Sam, draw the line in, we may as well all see the fun as have a bite at a distance. Don't stand near the line, comrades, or you may chance to lose a leg before you are aware of it."

The line was now drawn close up towards the lee side of the vessel, and plain enough, the huge monster was to be seen, watching the pork with a ravenous eye, and playing around it, as much as to say, "What is it?"

"Will he take the bait, captain?" said a young officer on the quarter deck.

"I can hardly say whether he will or not. He does not like to leave it, and he eyes it as if he would have it. I have seen these creatures play around a living victim a long while before they will dash at him. He seems cautious; but if the men suddenly let go the line, and the bait sinks, we are almost sure he means to have it when it rises again. Let go the line, boys!"

Down sunk the bait, up went the huge tail of the monster, and down he followed the pork, leaving a strong streak of foam where his broad fin lashed the wave as he went down.

"Up with it again, boys! Now look out! Take care of your fingers! Look sharp, sir, or he is such a little fellow, you will scarcely see him when he comes up." Up rose the bait, and came skimming along the hollow of the wave, visible to every eye. In another moment the monster rose, turning upon his side, and came with a dash alongside the vessel, showing a row of teeth more frightful than the sides of Gibralter Rock. In an instant he seized the bait, and bore it along the vessel's course till the line was out, and a sudden twang against the gunwale told that the monster had met with a check. Too severe a one was it, however, for him to escape. That very jerk sent the fangs of the hook through his jaw, and he was now forced to go with the ship, whether he would or not. A lively and interesting scene now ensued. The monster might be seen springing out of the water, dashing at the line, and striving to break it with his great teeth. His rage was fearful; he lashed the ocean into foam. He would at one time rush at the vessel as if he meant to fight it; at another, dash from it, as if he would break the line. He dived under the ship; he came boiling up again, staining the ocean with his blood, until his mighty efforts began to fail from exhaustion.

"Clear the deck!" said the Captain, "haul up, boys! haul up! stand clear of his tail. He will kill you with a blow should he hit you. Now, Sam, get a noose from the block, and give him a run."

A noose was made, thrown over the monster's tail, and the huge creature was swung on deck, to the no small gratification of the landsmen.

"What a fearful creature! what rows of teeth upon his nose! I wonder how he can seize his prey!"

"He seizes his prey by turning on his side, as you saw him take the bait."

It was a long time before the monster could be dispatched, and any one could come near enough to examine him. As each did so, he thought how terrible a death it would be, to fall into the jaws of the devouring shark.

AN ODD VISITOR.

"I had been sitting in the verandah, reading, and went away for a few minutes to speak to my wife. When I came back my chair was occupied. There, sitting as quietly and demurely as possible, was an enormous ourang-outang, or monkey of some sort. When I first caught sight of him he had my book in his hands, and was to all appearance reading. It happened, however, to be rather a stupid book, and he very soon threw it down; he then placed his hands upon his knees, and sat perfectly still, just as if he had been reading. I should say, as nearly as I could judge, that he must have been about five feet in height, supposing him to stand erect. He sat as upright as any man. After watching him for a minute or two, and observing that the calves of his legs were thicker and more like those of a man than monkey's legs usually are, I stepped quietly back and called my wife. All this time I had not seen his face; however, as she came, one of the parrots screamed, and the old gentleman turned his head. His face was very dark, with large whiskers and beard, and hair all perfectly white, his body a light brown, and his face and hands peculiarly large. As soon as he saw me he half rose, laid both hands on the elbow of the chair, and began to grin and show his teeth and spit at me.

I did not quite like it, as I was afraid he might make a spring in my direction; yet I knew that my voice would at once frighten him away, if I raised the horrid, unearthly yell used by the natives to scare wild beasts, and which even the tiger will hardly resist unless much pressed by hunger. Still I felt more inclined to watch him. Once I thought of going round the other way and getting my gun, but really he looked so much like a man that I could not have shot him. He continued to grin and spit until I turned away, hoping he would resume his former sedate position. As soon, however, as he thought my eyes were off him, he rose leisurely from his chair, stepped slowly out of the verandah, caught hold of a branch of the banian-tree, and swung himself up into it. As he did this, I saw that he had a long tail, so he could not, I believe, have been an ourang-outang. Indeed I never heard of them coming into this little island, nor, I think, into the district. I went into my study, and immediately afterwards heard him scuttling away over the house. I have not seen him since, but if he comes back I shall try to make friends with him by giving him food, though I believe he belongs to rather a treacherous family. [Ackland's India.

THE REWARD OF PERSEVERANCE.

Southey relates a pleasant story of matrimonial adventure, which has the merit of being true, as well as enforcing perseverance, and sustaining the magic reputation of "the third time."

A gentleman in want of a wife, advertised for one, and at the time and place appointed was met by a lady. Their stations in life entitled them to be so called, and the gentleman as well as the lady was in earnest. He however, unluckily, seemed to be of the same opinion as King Pedro was with regard to his wife, Queen Mary, of Arragon, that she was not so handsome as she might be good, and the meeting ended in their mutual disappointment. Cœlebs advertised a second time, appointing a different square for the place of meeting, and varying the words of the advertisement. He met the same lady—they recognized each other—could not chose but smile at the recognition, and perhaps neither of them could choose but sigh. The persevering bachelor tried his lot a third time in the newspapers, and at the third appointment met the equally persevering spinster. At this meeting neither could help laughing. They began to converse in good humor, and the conversation became so agreeable on both sides, and the circumstances appeared so remarkable, that his third interview led to a marriage, and the marriage proved a happy one.

ORDER, THE FIRST LAW.

The order of animal creation is so well understood by modern science, that a mere fragment of animal structure supplies all hints necessary to build up the whole with accuracy. Cuvier constructed entire skeletons of antedeluvians from the inspection of a few fragments; and his accuracy was attested by after discoveries.

Linnæus classed fish by the peculiarities of their fins. A later naturalist, Agassiz, who has been lecturing in New York recently, has developed a more correct system based upon the scales. The exactitude of his rules are exemplified by an incident which occurred in 1833. The scale of a fossil fish was sent to Agassiz, then residing in Switzerland, from England. From that scale he built his fish, described it, made a drawing of it, and sent it back to England. The next year he was in England himself, and had the pleasure to find that a whole fossil fish of that species had then just been discovered, a drawing of which was published, and to which the one he had already constructed, from a single scale, so nearly corresponded in all its details, as to need very little alteration.

European Ruler.—The Emperor of Austria has fallen into complete servility, or rather second childhood, if the anecdotes told of him are true. Eugene Guizot, a distinguished French writer, in a late number of his Revue de Paris, relates the following: One day this monarch manifests some whim, which must be satisfied at once, for he displays the most puerile impatience. He wished to have, the other day, to ride with, in the gardens, a small carriage, like that of Tom Thumb, and which must be drawn by two dwarf horses. The next day, some important paper was presented for his signature. "Where's my little carriage?" demanded the Emperor. "The carriage manufacturer is making it." "Well, when I have it I will sign these papers, but not before." They informed him that any delay might be attended with very serious consequences. The Emperor was immovable, and would only sign it a few days after, when they showed him his lilliputian carriage.

CUTTING HAY FOR STOCK.

It has frequently been asked how cutting hay for stock adds to its nutritive qualities. It is precisely upon the same principle as cutting up meat fine and making a mince of it. There is more or less nutriment in the tougher pieces, and even gristle, if these are cut fine with the chopping-knife; and nicely cooked and agreeably seasoned, the dish is eaten with peculiar relish, easily digests, and goes twice as far as in the ordinary method of taking meat in slices; for under such circumstances we reject all that is not tender, juicy, and particularly palatable. In cutting hay all the coarser parts and even straw are made agreeable to the taste of animals, especially if it be cut up and spiced with a little meal, shorts, or bran. Nor have they the power to reject any part when cut up, and as all is more or less nutritious, the hay must go farther; nor can it be pulled out and wasted as when fed loose. Another important consideration is, an animal can fill its stomach much more easily and readily on cut than on uncut food, and can then lie down and ruminate, and rest, allowing the food full time to digest and distribute its strengthening qualities throughout the system, and renovate it for renewed exertions. [Am. Agriculturist.

SCENE IN AN ICELAND CHURCH.

The scene in an Iceland church on a Sunday, is said, by a traveler, to be of a singular and interesting kind. The little edifice, constructed of wood and turf, is situated, perhaps, amid the rugged ruins of a stream of lava, or beneath the mountains which are covered with never-melting snows, in a spot where the mind almost sinks under the silence and desolation of surrounding nature. Here the Icelanders assemble to perform the duties of religion. A group of male and female peasants may be seen gathering about the church, waiting the arrival of their pastor, all habited in their best attire, after the manner of their country; their children with them, and the horses which brought them from their respective homes, grazing quietly around the little assembly. The arrival of a new comer is welcomed by every one with the kiss of salutation; and the pleasures of social intercourse, so rarely enjoyed by the Icelanders, are happily connected with the occasion which summons them to the discharge of their religious duties. The priest makes his appearance among them as a friend; he salutes them individually, each member of his flock, and stoops down to give his almost parental kiss to the little ones who are growing up under his pastoral charge. These offices of kindness performed, they all go together to the house of prayer.

